SENATE

WEDNESDAY, JULY 14, 1937

(Legislative day of Tuesday, July 6, 1937)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

DEATH OF SENATOR ROBINSON

Mrs. CARAWAY. Mr. President, it is with deep grief that I rise to announce the death of my late colleague and the majority leader of this body, the late senior Senator from Arkansas, Mr. ROBINSON. It is not my purpose at this time to try to enumerate the good qualities or to call attention to the statesmanship of the man whom the Senate, the Nation, and his State will so greatly miss and whose death they all so deeply deplore.

At this time I submit resolutions and ask unanimous consent for their immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be read.

The legislative clerk read the resolutions (S. Res. 150), as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow and deep regret the announcement of the death of Hon. JOSEPH T. ROBINSON, late a Senator from the State of Arkansas.

Resolved, That a committee be appointed by the President pro tempore to take orders for superintending the funeral of the deceased Senator.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions submitted by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, we walk today in the "valley of the shadow of death." A great Democrat, a great patriot, a great American has been taken from us.

Senator ROBINSON was in the prime of life, as we count age today. He should have continued in the midst of things for a decade or more. Our friend died in battle, perhaps as he would have wished to die, but that is little comfort to his friends who mourn.

Some of us felt he was carrying a greater load than he should have been given. Within a few days, Tuesday a week ago, indeed, I became concerned over what I saw through my medical eyes. Going to his side in the midst of the debate I urged him not to permit his zeal to invite his own destruction. I felt that the Angel of Death was touching the elbow of Senator ROBINSON at that moment.

The oil of joy and contentment and peace lubricates the wheels of life; the sand of combat, dissension, and bitter argument is sure to get into the bearings and slow down, and even stop those wheels.

Mr. President, the fate of the Nation, its imminent peril, the possibility of war, or anything that might be a real menace to our people, would justify the continuance of this session. But no such necessity drives us today.

My fellow Senators, I am sorry sometimes that I ever studied medicine. Nearly 50 years have elapsed since I received that coveted diploma; but the embarrassment of medical knowledge is that many times it discloses to the medical man in the face and bearing of a friend the warning his dissolution is near at hand.

Mr. President, I say in all seriousness to my brethren that the menace is here in this Chamber today.

I speak of this because I have been urged for a week or two to speak seriously of the necessity of sounding a warning as to the physical effects which may follow what is being endured here.

We come to this Chamber, which seems cold as we come into it, and the first impression is a shock to the system. We go from it into the heated air, with another shock. All the conditions of our lives make for the possibility of physical disaster. Then when are added the mental conditions incident to argument and dissension, as well as the combat of discussion, we have a combination which should be a warning to every person within the sound of my voice. I felt it my duty to say these things. I have said them from the heart.

No one here, I am sure, respected and admired Senator ROBINSON more than did I. We mourn his loss; we are saddened by the sight of that empty chair. Mr. President, out of this disaster may come a warning which will fend off other disasters.

We mourn with Mrs. Robinson and share her grief.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in the hour of grief, in the ministrations of affliction, when the mind is overshadowed with gloom and the sable drapery of mourning is drawn in heavy folds about us, silence is sometimes more eloquent and impressive than the chaste rhetoric of the scholar or the flowing declamation of the orator. We meet today in the midst of that gloom, in the midst of those ministrations, and with that sable drapery of mourning drawn in heavy folds around us. None of us this morning has that command of language which can portray the feelings of our hearts over the sad news which we have received since last we met. We cannot speak of our friend; we can only feel.

I had known Senator ROBINSON for a quarter of a century. I knew him as a Member of the other House, as, for a brief season, Governor of his State, and for nearly that long as a Senator of the United States. No abler, truer, finer, more loyal, or devoted man ever served in this Chamber from any State. No man ever bore the responsibility of leadership with greater courage, fortitude, patience, foresight, or wisdom than was that responsibility borne by the Senator in whose honor we speak briefly this morning.

I think Senator ROBINSON's death constitutes at this particular time a major calamity, not only to us who loved him as a friend, not only to the party whose leader he has been for many years, but to the country at large. Not within my recollection has death created a greater calamity to the public service.

From every standpoint, by whatever yardstick we use in measuring a man, Senator ROBINSON measured fully up to the highest standard. We mourn him as a friend; we mourn his loss as a public servant; and we ourselves, as men and as public servants, will do well to emulate his example.

Peace to his ashes. May God rest his militant soul, and if, after the long years of toil and labor and vicissitude here, it shall be our privilege to greet him in another land, we shall rejoice in that reunion and in that faith.

The President pro tempore (Mr. PITTMAN) is now occupying the chair. He was one of the most intimate friends of Senator ROBINSON, and at present is deprived of the opportunity of paying a tribute to his friend, but on the day set aside for memorial exercises will have the opportunity of expressing his admiration, respect, and love for the deceased.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, wearied by the contest in which he played such a conspicuous and dramatic part, our beloved leader has passed on to his rest. The Republican Members of this body join with me in expressing profound regret and sorrow at the passing of Senator ROBINSON.

At some appropriate time I hope it may be my privilege to pay a further tribute to his memory.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, for many years I have sat here beside Senator ROBINSON. We were friends and neighbors down on the Mississippi River more than 30 years ago. We served in the House together. We served in the Senate together. We were personal, political, and social friends.

I never knew a nobler man than JOE ROBINSON. Impetuous at times, he was one of the finest characters, one of the manliest of men, one of the truest friends in all the world. I deeply mourn his passing. I deeply grieve over his untimely end.

There never was a better leader in either branch of the Congress than JOE ROBINSON. There never was a stronger man in either branch of Congress than JOE ROBINSON. There never was a truer friend and there never was a more generous opponent.

He had a wonderful mind and a noble heart. His life was an open book. His love and devotion to his lovely wife and to his family constituted one of the most admirable of his many admirable traits of character. He was a statesman second to none and one of the ablest lawyers in the Senate. I deeply deplore his death. I am grieved as for one of my own family. I join with every Member of the Senate in expressing the deepest regret over his untimely passing.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, it may be, as the philosopher poet has inscribed, that—

> The boast of heraldry, the pomp of power,
> And all that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave,
> Awaits alike the inevitable hour;
> The paths of glory lead but to the grave.

But, sir, while we may reconcile ourselves to that philosophy and recognize in it the fulfillment of the decrees immutable, it is agreeable to dwell for a second upon the scene presented in this body at this moment. I would invite the countries of the world, wherever their parliaments are assembled, to view at this moment the United States Senate, this great legislative body in this American Nation. Behold how those of opposite political faith and those of conflicting contention sit in the quietude of suffering, with suppressed tears in their hearts at the loss of their fellow legislator. Every difference of the past is quelled. Every mutiny is hushed. Nothing of the past that took on the form of party contest is reflected in the slightest suggestion, while everything of expression moves to that beautiful sympathy, that brotherhood which feels the depths of loss and suffering for its stricken.

In this moment I rise to note what security there is in this scene in America. What a beautiful example is exhibited of the support and sustenance of all that could be called for in government. The compliments paid, the suggestions given by the eminent leader of our opposition called Republican [Mr. McNARY], that which came from the assistant leader occupying the place of leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], express the united feeling at this moment, together with that which we send out to our country, that it may know that at a more appropriate time will come those individual testimonials to character and qualification appropriate to the occasion. For the moment I merely invite the attention of the world to what this body now represents in its expressions as to America, and I close with the appropriate adoption of the poet Browning and proclaim, "God's in His heaven. All's well with America."

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, in common with the whole membership of the Senate, my heart is heavy and my eyes are filled with tears. JOE ROBINSON was, to my mind, the most useful, the most dynamic, the most forceful, and the most influential man I have ever seen in public life. He had a heart of gold, yet as tender as the heart of a child.

We are all grieved. Arkansas has contributed distinguished and illustrious names to add to the glory of our history; but, Mr. President, with all her distinguished and illustrious characters, none will ever brighten the future of this country as will the services and labors and fine deeds of this, her noble son.

I grieve with you, Mr. President and fellow Senators, in the loss of our colleague and friend.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, with inexpressible sorrow and regret I wish humbly to be permitted to place my wreath of abiding affection and respect at the tomb of this great memory. Through nearly 10 years of my service here Senator ROBINSON was my cherished friend. He was a great citizen, a great Senator, and a great American. His country without division will mourn the passing of a sterling character and a noble soul.

It is dark in the valley of the shadow, Mr. President, but thank God for His promise of the great reunion.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I am altogether conscious of my inability to express here upon this occasion the feelings that well up in my heart as in the hearts of every Member of this body. However, I cannot allow the moment to pass without giving some expression to the profound grief which I personally feel in the passing of this great man.

It was more than 20 years ago that I first heard Senator ROBINSON. It was on this floor. As a young man I listened to him in one of the great debates at the beginning of the World War. I shall never forget the inspiration I drew from what he said upon that occasion. I shall never forget the admiration with which I was filled at his eloquence and power.

I can only say now that he was a brave man; he was a simple man; he was a loyal man; he was an able man. He was a Senator of the United States. Vigorous and forceful though he was, he was also patient and tolerant and tender. He was beloved by his colleagues in all that term implies.

Mr. President, I am profoundly grieved that his service has ended.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, later there may be an opportunity to add more to what I may say at this sad moment. Senator ROBINSON's life was one of ever-enlarging service to the Nation. His public career was long and distinguished, and his last years in the capacity of Democratic leader assured him a permanent place in American history.

Chosen to be the chief legislative general in the most comprehensive social and economic program ever enacted in this country, his integrity of mind and character and his remarkable talents made every Member of the Senate, regardless of party, feel that no one else could have done his work so well as he did it. His masterful accomplishments will long stand as an inspiration to others and as a standard by which unselfish, devoted, and brilliant public service will be judged.

The Nation has suffered a great loss, and everyone who knew Senator ROBINSON as I did will find it hard to recover from the shock of his unexpected passing.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I rise to say farewell to a friend and to wish God's compassion and support for his bereaved widow.

The Nation has suffered a tremendous disappointment and loss in the sudden departure of JOSEPH ROBINSON. So far as his record known to me goes, I can testify that I have admired his fidelity as the leader in the Senate of a great party, responsible for a program. Regardless of and notwithstanding private opinions or private differences, I have admired and gloried in the sacrifice that I have realized was being made by him at times in fidelity to a cause; and so far as that other matter of the soul goes—that really lovely friendship tendered by him and enjoyed by all Members of this great deliberative body—I wish to record my gratitude for having been able to participate in it.

Only yesterday, at about 5 minutes of 12, while I was engaged in a hearing on a committee, a note was passed to me saying that Senator ROBINSON was trying to reach me by telephone. I regret to say that, however rapidly I reached the telephone, I was unable to get into communication with him, and his office was unable to say where he might be called. Nevertheless, I feel that there is to be forever cherished in my memory the fact that he was trying to get in touch with me so late as about the hour of noon yesterday.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President—

Whether at Naishapur or Babylon,
Whether the cup with sweet or bitter run,
The wine of life keeps oozing drop by drop,
The leaves of life keep falling one by one.

And oh, how swiftly the wine of life oozes; how rapidly the leaves of life fall within the little circle that surrounds the membership of the United States Senate!

The grim, insatiate reaper, with marble heart that feels no pity; with icy hand that knows no mercy; with sickle keen, that never turns its edge, has, without an instant's warning, removed JOSEPH T. ROBINSON, one of the most illustrious of Senators, from the tumultuous land of the living to the silent land of the dead.

For much more than a quarter of a century he was one of the most celebrated men of the Nation. He was successively a member of the general assembly of his State, a Member of the House of Representatives of the United States, Governor of Arkansas, and a Member of this body continuously from 1913 until last night, when his eyes closed in that peaceful sleep "from which none ever wake to weep."

Less than 20 hours ago he appeared to be in perfect health, in the very flower of mature manhood, and but a short step from the summit of human achievement. Only yesterday he was magnificently leading one side of the greatest parliamentary battle that has been waged in the Senate since the days of Webster and Calhoun and Clay.

A more capable, conscientious, or courageous forensic chieftain never entered the lists. He illuminated every question he discussed, graced every cause he espoused, dignified every task he touched, and ennobled every duty he performed.

But now we call his name in vain. From his pallid lips an answer nevermore will come. In the hush that pervades this sanctuary which he so long and so brilliantly adorned we realize that this faithful friend has sailed that surging, sad, and solemn sea which separates the narrow shores of time from the boundless kingdom of eternity. He has passed the limits of earthly vision.

His living form cannot be seen through the telescopes of science or the tears of grief. But in this hour of overwhelming anguish we look beyond the cloud of gloom that hangs above us like a pall and there, through faith, we see the star of hope still shining on. In the lustrous light of that constant star we read the assuring promise of the Savior of the world:

I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live.
And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die.

Fellow Senators, in this promise let us put our trust. While dogmas perish and creeds crumble, while agnosticism decays and atheism dies, let us continue to lean upon the everlasting arm, believing that the twilight here is but the dawn of a grander day upon some other shore. Believing that the feeble flame that flickers here for a little while will at last leap into a bright and shining light when the spirit of man has winged its flight back to Him that gave it birth.

God grant that JOE ROBINSON is now walking the streets of paradise that are paved with stars.

Illustrious patriot and leader, loved and loving husband, cherished, faithful friend, a long farewell!

All our hearts are buried with you,
All our thoughts go onward with you!
Come not back again to labor,
Come not back again to suffer,
Where the famine and the fever
Wear the heart and waste the body.
Soon our task will be completed,
Soon your footsteps we shall follow
To the islands of the blessed,
To the land of the hereafter!

Farewell, great heart, till we meet you in the purple dawn of an endless day in that imperishable realm where the rainbow never fades, where no one ever grows old, where friends never part, and loved ones never, never die.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, as I have listened to my colleagues I have wanted to join in paying tribute to Senator ROBINSON, but I have doubted, and doubt now, that I can give expression to my thoughts. Certainly to this grief-stricken group I would not recite Senator ROBINSON's public service. That service is known to each and every one of us. It is a matter of record, and that record will ever be an inspiration to the American people.

Reference has been made to his service as Democratic leader of the Senate, to his courage and forcefulness. I like to think of his fairness; and within the last few moments I have thought that it is fortunate that during the last few weeks an occasion arose which gave opportunity to every Member of this body, regardless of political affiliation, to offer to Senator ROBINSON evidence of the esteem in which he was held by those with whom he served.

I came to the House of Representatives in 1911. I lived in the same hotel with Senator ROBINSON. For 25 years I have been intimately associated with him. Happiness has come to me out of that intimate association. I enjoyed his friendship, and my life was enriched by reason of it. The Senate has lost a great leader. The Nation has lost a patriotic public servant. I have lost a loyal friend.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, JOSEPH TAYLOR ROBINSON, patriot, statesman, orator, great lawyer, most successful parliamentary leader of his generation, has reached his journey's end and has gone to that vast realm of peace and of joy where the innumerable dwell.

As he lived, he died—valiant for truth, brave, imperious, and incorruptible, and I but speak the feeling of every Senator when I say we were all proud to be his friend and honored to be his contemporaries. His far-shining fame is built upon his faithful, constant service to his country. High above the range of doubt or fear, he held steadfastly to his main purpose—good government. With a grim gameness he traversed the long, hard path of duty, bearing aloft a flambeau of idealism, the cleansing flame of which he never permitted to expire.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I covet the experience of my older colleagues that they have been privileged to enjoy a longer but not a more appreciative friendship with Senator ROBINSON than have I. It has been my privilege to know him for about 6 months of this year, but I could never have had a father more considerate of me than he was, or more helpful in counsel. His door always stood open to the new Members of this body, who went to him as a son would to a father to take his counsel and his generous advice.

I know of no epitaph, Mr. President, to be applied to our departed colleague more appropriate than the words uttered by Antony as he looked down upon another who lay still in death:

His life was gentle, and the elements
So mix'd in him, that Nature might stand up
And say to all the world, "This was a man!"

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, that JOSEPH T. ROBINSON was a great Senator, a great lawyer, a great leader, a great statesman is beyond all question. That his sudden death is being mourned at this hour throughout the length and breadth of this land is most true. In the midst of the general encomiums being paid to his memory today I wish to offer this personal tribute.

From the day that I entered the United States Senate there has never been a time when I did not feel privileged to go to Senator ROBINSON for counsel and advice. There never was an occasion when he did not willingly and gladly give me his aid. He was always kind, always courteous, always sympathetic. He was my friend; he was a friend to us all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions presented by the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY].

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will announce later the committee to be appointed under the second resolution.

Mrs. CARAWAY. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Senator, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, July 15, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JULY 14, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Speak to us, O Lord God, for in these moments we are so defenseless. Out of the depths of our sorrow we cry: Thou art our refuge and strength and a very present help in trouble. Heavenly Father, while life is a great adventure, whatever we do help us to be true to God and duty. We praise Thee for the joy of living and for the hopes and promises for its continuance beyond the timeless centuries. We pray that we may be in preparation for that eternal haven where conflict and struggle, wonder and mystery are over and they who have trod the earth in labor and in pain are now walking the highways of the City of God. Heavenly Father, a statesman who served his State and Nation with distinction and fidelity has fallen, clothed in his armor of renowned leadership. Our heavy hearts pause at the mercy seat of prayer; our cup of sorrow is so full; he was our friend, our neighbor, and brother. Encourage us to go forward that we may fulfill our destiny and enter upon that higher life as servants of the Lord. Oh, comfort her in whose breast there is such an unspeakable void and give her great peace. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

There was no objection.

THE LATE SENATOR JOSEPH T. ROBINSON

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, it is my sad duty to announce to the House of Representatives the death of Hon. JOSEPH T. ROBINSON, the senior Senator from the State of Arkansas, which occurred last night in the Capital City, bringing to a close a long and notable career in the public service. Senator ROBINSON entered public service in the House of Representatives of the State Legislature of Arkansas in the year 1894. Almost immediately thereafter he was elected to the Fifty-eighth Congress, and served in this body for 8 years, when, because of his outstanding ability, the people of my home State selected him as their Governor. Before he had served in that office 30 days a vacancy occurred in the Senate in the Sixty-second Congress, and he was elected by the State legislature to serve an unexpired term in the Senate, and has served continuously in that body since that period up to the date of his death.

In 1922 Senator ROBINSON was selected as the chairman of the minority conference in the Senate and served in that office until a change of administration occurred on the 4th of March 1933, when he was elected majority leader, and has rendered most distinguished service in that capacity during the period in which we have been engaged in recovery legislation.

Mr. Speaker, no man, in my opinion, has rendered a more unselfish, a more patriotic service than has this great citizen from my home State. He died in the harness, as he would wish to die, but I cannot help thinking of the period in Biblical history, when one of the great characters of that time was led up and afforded an opportunity to look over the Promised Land, which he never entered. Senator ROBINSON'S life ambition was to serve on the Supreme Court of the United States. It is believed by many that he would have attained that great ambition had he lived but a few more days, but it was denied him.

My friends, the Nation has suffered a most serious loss in the passing of this great man, and the State of Arkansas, his native State, has suffered an irreparable loss in the death of its most distinguished citizen. At a later date remarks more protracted and suitable to the occasion will be offered.

I offer the following resolution, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 278

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. JOSEPH T. ROBINSON, a Senator of the United States from the State of Arkansas.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased Senator.

Resolved, That a committee of 23 Members be appointed on the part of the House to join with the committee appointed on the part of the Senate to attend the funeral.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The Chair appointed the following committee under the terms of the resolution:

Mr. RAYBURN, Mr. SNELL, Mr. DOUGHTON, Mr. JONES, Mr. DRIVER, Mr. MCREYNOLDS, Mr. O'CONNOR of New York, Mr. WOODRUM, Mr. WARREN, Mr. FULLER, Mr. BOEHNE, Mr. MILLER, Mr. DINGELL, Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky, Mr. TERRY. Mr. CRAVENS, Mr. SHORT, Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. MCCLELLAN, Mr. NICHOLS, Mr. MICHENER, and Mr. KITCHENS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the concluding portion of the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

SENATE

THURSDAY, JULY 15, 1937

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O merciful God and Heavenly Father, who has taught us in Thy Holy Word that Thou doest not willingly afflict or grieve the children of men: We come unto Thee at this sorrow-laden hour like ships storm-driven into port, like wanderers seeking refuge from the whelming night, asking Thee to receive us, to shelter us under Thy wing, to hide us in Thy heart.

Thou hast taken unto Thyself the soul of our beloved friend and gallant leader, for whose life we thank Thee, who knew no fear save that of wounding Thee, who never stooped to an unchivalrous deed, but always bowed in reverence before the innocence of little children because his heart was pure. Help us to imitate his virtues and at this altar of our sorrow to rededicate our lives to Thee and to the service of our beloved country. Through these halting hours of anguish deal tenderly, O compassionate Father, with the dear one, the heart companion of his life; enfold her in Thine arms of everlasting love, and by the very hush of Thy presence soothe her aching heart.

Bide with us all, dear Lord, for day is fast dying and the shadows of the night shall fall, and soon we shall no longer see each other's faces here, but be our light in darkness till Thy day shall break above us as we wait. We ask it in the name and for the sake of Him who hath brought life and immortality to light, Jesus Christ, Thy Son, our Lord. Amen.

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar days Tuesday, July 13, 1937, and Wednesday, July 14, 1937, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, communicated to the Senate the resolutions of the House adopted as a tribute to the memory of Hon. Joseph T. Robinson, late a Senator from the State of Arkansas.

The message announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 431) making an appropriation for the control of outbreaks of insect pests, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

H. R. 730. An act for the relief of Joseph M. Clagett, Jr.;

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 431) making an appropriation for the control of outbreaks of insect pests was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CONTROL OF INSECT PESTS

Mr. LEWIS. I ask for a roll call, in order to assure the presence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, before the roll is called, will the Senator from Illinois yield to me?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I withdraw for the present the suggestion of the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois withdraws the point of no quorum.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, House Joint Resolution 431, making an appropriation for the control of outbreaks of insect pests, has just come over from the House. I am authorized by the Committee on Appropriations, and for the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], to report the joint resolution favorably without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 887) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KING. Does that mean that, without discussion and consideration, the House joint resolution shall be approved?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I hope it may mean that. The proof before the House committee shows that a great emergency exists in the West in regard to insect pests. The Senator from Colorado is especially interested in the passage of the proposed legislation; it seemed to the committee to be an emergency matter, and it is hoped that the joint resolution may be passed without delay.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not recall the provisions of the measure.

Mr. McKELLAR. Sometime ago the Congress, in connection with what is known as the grasshopper control, authorized an appropriation of $2,000,000, $1,000,000 of which has been appropriated and spent. The proof before the House was so very strong that, in order to control grasshoppers and other pests in various Western States, it is absolutely necessary that the appropriation provided by the joint resolution shall be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the House joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 431) making an appropriation for the control of outbreaks of insect pests was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That for carrying out the purposes of and for expenditures authorized under the public resolution entitled "Joint resolution making funds available for the control of incipient or emergency outbreaks of insect pests or plant diseases, including grasshoppers, Mormon crickets, and chinch bugs", approved April 6, 1937, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000,000, to remain available until June 30, 1938: Provided, That in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, no part of this appropriation shall be expended for control of grasshoppers, Mormon crickets, or chinch bugs in any State until such State has provided the organization or materials and supplies necessary for cooperation: Provided further, That this appropriation shall be expended under the personal supervision and direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, who shall make a detailed report to the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the several items of expenditure made hereunder: Provided further, That transportation of control materials purchased under this appropriation shall be under conditions and means determined by the Secretary of Agriculture as most advantageous to the Federal Government: Provided further, That procurements under this appropriation may be made by open-market purchases notwithstanding the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5).

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution may be signed by the Presiding Officer while the Senate is in recess or adjournment following today's session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FARMERS HOME CORPORATION—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, for certain reasons, I am anxious to have final action taken on the conference report on House bill 7562, being the farm tenancy bill, so-called. I submit the conference report, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. If it leads to any debate, I will withdraw the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7562) to encourage and promote the ownership of farm homes and to make the possession of such homes more secure, to provide for the general welfare of the United States, to provide additional credit facilities for agricultural development, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That this Act may be cited as 'The Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act'.

"TITLE I—FARM TENANT PROVISIONS

"POWER OF SECRETARY

"SECTION 1. (a) The Secretary of Agriculture (hereinafter referred to as the 'Secretary') is authorized to make loans in the United States and in the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii and in Puerto Rico to persons eligible to receive the benefits of this title to enable such persons to acquire farms.

"(b) Only farm tenants, farm laborers, sharecroppers, and other individuals who obtain, or who recently obtained, the major portion of their income from farming operations shall be eligible to receive the benefits of this title. In making available the benefits of this title, the Secretary shall give preference to persons who are married, or who have dependent families, or, wherever practicable, to persons who are able to make an initial down payment, or who are owners of livestock and farm implements necessary successfully to carry on farming operations. No person shall be eligible who is not a citizen of the United States.

"(c) No loan shall be made for the acquisition of any farm unless it is of such size as the Secretary determines to be sufficient to constitute an efficient farm-management unit and to enable a diligent farm family to carry on successful farming of a type which the Secretary deems can be successfully carried on in the locality in which the farm is situated.

"COUNTY COMMITTEES AND LOANS

"SEC. 2. (a) The County Committee established under section 42 shall—

"(1) Examine applications (filed with the county agent in the county, or with such other person as the Secretary may designate) of persons desiring to finance the acquisition of farms in the county by means of a loan from the Secretary under this title.

"(2) Examine and appraise farms in the county with respect to which an application for a loan is made.

"(b) If the committee finds that an applicant is eligible to receive the benefits of this title, that by reason of his character, ability, and experience he is likely successfully to carry out undertakings required of him under a loan which may be made under this title, and that the farm with respect to which the application is made is of such character that there is a reasonable likelihood that the making of a loan with respect thereto will carry out the purposes of this title, it shall so certify to the Secretary. The committee shall also certify to the Secretary the amount which the committee finds is the reasonable value of the farm.

"(c) No certification under this section shall be made with respect to any farm in which any member of the committee or any person related to such member within the third degree of consanguinity or affinity has any property interest, direct or indirect, or in which they or either of them have had such interest within one year prior to the date of certification.

"(d) No loan shall be made to any person or with respect to any farm unless certification as required under this section has been made with respect to such person and such farm by the committee.

"TERMS OF LOANS

"SEC. 3. (a) Loans made under this title shall be in such amount (not in excess of the amount certified by the County Committee to be the value of the farm) as may be necessary to enable the borrower to acquire the farm and for necessary repairs and improvements thereon, and shall be secured by a first mortgage or deed of trust on the farm.

"(b) The instruments under which the loan is made and security given therefor shall—

"(1) Provide for the repayment of the loan within an agreed period of not more than forty years from the making of the loan.

"(2) Provide for the payment of interest on the unpaid balance of the loan at the rate of 3 per centum per annum.

"(3) Provide for the repayment of the unpaid balance of the loan, together with interest thereon, in installments in accordance with amortization schedules prescribed by the Secretary.

"(4) Be in such form and contain such covenants as the Secretary shall prescribe to secure the payment of the unpaid balance of the loan, together with interest thereon, to protect the security, and to assure that the farm will be maintained in repair, and waste and exhaustion of the farm prevented, and that such proper farming practices as the Secretary shall prescribe will be carried out.

"(5) Provide that the borrower shall pay taxes and assessments on the farm to the proper taxing authorities, and insure and pay for insurance on farm buildings.

"(6) Provide that upon the borrower's assigning, selling, or otherwise transferring the farm, or any interest therein, without the consent of the Secretary, or upon default in the performance of, or upon any failure to comply with, any covenant or condition contained in such instruments, or upon involuntary transfer or sale, the Secretary may declare the amount unpaid immediately due and payable, and that, without the consent of the Secretary, no final payment shall be accepted, or release of the Secretary's interest be made, less than five years after the making of the loan.

"(c) Except as provided in paragraph (6) of subsection (b), no instrument provided for in this section shall prohibit the prepayment of any sum due under it.

"(d) No provision of section 75, as amended, of the Act entitled 'An Act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States', approved July 1, 1898 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 11, sec. 203; Supp. II, title 11, sec. 203), otherwise applicable in respect of any indebtedness incurred under this title by any beneficiary thereof, shall be applicable in respect of such indebtedness until such beneficiary has repaid at least 15 per centum thereof.

"EQUITABLE DISTRIBUTION OF LOANS

"SEC. 4. In making loans under this title, the amount which is devoted to such purpose during any fiscal year shall be distributed equitably among the several States and Territories on the basis of farm population and the prevalence of tenancy, as determined by the Secretary.

"AVOIDANCE OF PRODUCTION EXPANSION

"SEC. 5. In carrying out this title, the Secretary shall give due consideration to the desirability of avoiding the expansion of production for market of basic commodities where such expansion would defeat the policy of Congress as set forth in section 7 (a) (5) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, and shall, so far as practicable, assist beneficiaries of the program under this title to become established upon lands now in cultivation.

"APPROPRIATION

"SEC. 6. To carry out the provisions of this title, there is authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $10,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, not to exceed $25,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and not to exceed $50,000,000 for each fiscal year thereafter. Not more than 5 per centum of the sums appropriated for any fiscal year in pursuance of this section shall be available for administrative expenses in carrying out this title during such fiscal year.

"TITLE II—REHABILITATION LOANS

"BORROWERS AND TERMS

"SECTION 21. (a) Out of the funds made available under section 23, the Secretary shall have power to make loans to eligible individuals for the purchase of livestock, farm equipment, supplies, and for other farm needs (including minor improvements and minor repairs to real property), and for the refinancing of indebtedness, and for family subsistence.

"(b) Loans made under this section shall bear interest at a rate not in excess of 3 per centum per annum, and shall have maturities not in excess of five years, and may be renewed. Such loans shall be payable in such installments as the Secretary may provide in the loan agreement. All loans made under this title shall be secured by a chattel mortgage, a lien on crops, and an assignment of proceeds from the sale of agricultural products, or by any one or more of the foregoing.

"(c) Only farm owners, farm tenants, farm laborers, sharecroppers, and other individuals who obtain, or who recently obtained, the major portion of their income from farming operations, and who cannot obtain credit on reasonable terms from any federally incorporated lending institution, shall be eligible for loans under this section.

"DEBT ADJUSTMENT

"SEC. 22. The Secretary shall have power to assist in the voluntary adjustment of indebtedness between farm debtors and their creditors and may cooperate with and pay the whole or part of the expenses of State, Territorial, and local agencies and committees engaged in such debt adjustment. He is also authorized to continue and carry out undertakings with respect to farm debt adjustment uncompleted at the time when appropriations for the purpose of this section are first available. Services furnished by the Secretary under this section shall be without charge to the debtor or creditor.

"APPROPRIATION

"SEC. 23. (a) For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, the balances of funds available to the Secretary for loans and relief to farmers, pursuant to Executive Order Numbered 7530 of December 31, 1936, as amended by Executive Order Numbered 7557 of February 19, 1937, which are unexpended on June 30, 1937, are authorized to be appropriated to carry out the provisions of this title.

"(b) The President is authorized to allot to the Secretary, out of appropriations made for relief or work relief for any fiscal year ending prior to July 1, 1939, such sums as he determines to be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title and to enable the Secretary to carry out such other forms of rehabilitation of individuals eligible under this title to receive loans as may be authorized by law and designated in the Executive order directing the allotment.

"TITLE III—RETIREMENT OF SUBMARGINAL LANDS

"PROGRAM

"SECTION 31. The Secretary is authorized and directed to develop a program of land conservation and land utilization, including the retirement of lands which are submarginal or not primarily suitable for cultivation, in order thereby to correct maladjustments in land use, and thus assist in controlling soil erosion, reforestation, preserving natural resources, mitigating floods, preventing impairment of dams and reservoirs, conserving surface and subsurface moisture, protecting the watersheds of navigable streams, and protecting the public lands, health, safety, and welfare.

"POWERS UNDER LAND PROGRAM

"SEC. 32. To effectuate the program provided for in section 31, the Secretary is authorized—

"(a) To acquire by purchase, gift, or device, or by transfer from any agency of the United States or from any State, Territory, or political subdivision, submarginal land and land not primarily suitable for cultivation, and interests in and options on such land. Such property may be acquired subject to any reservations, outstanding estates, interests, easements, or other encumbrances which the Secretary determines will not interfere with the utilization of such property for the purposes of this title.

"(b) To protect, improve, develop, and administer any property so acquired and to construct such structures thereon as may be necessary to adapt it to its most beneficial use.

"(c) To sell, exchange, lease, or otherwise dispose of, with or without a consideration, any property so acquired, under such terms and conditions as he deems will best accomplish the purposes of this title, but any sale, exchange, or grant shall be made only to public authorities and agencies and only on condition that the property is used for public purposes. The Secretary may recommend to the President other Federal, State, or Territorial agencies to administer such property, together with the conditions of use and administration which will best serve the purposes of a land-conservation and land-utilization program, and the President is authorized to transfer such property to such agencies.

"(d) With respect to any land, or any interest therein, acquired by, or transferred to, the Secretary for the purposes of this title, to make dedications or grants, in his discretion, for any public purpose, and to grant licenses and easements upon such terms as he deems reasonable.

"(e) To cooperate with Federal, State, Territorial, and other public agencies in developing plans for a program of land conservation and land utilization, to conduct surveys and investigations relating to conditions and factors affecting, and the methods of accomplishing most effectively, the purposes of this title, and to disseminate information concerning these activities.

"(f) To make such rules and regulations as he deems necessary to prevent trespasses and otherwise regulate the use and occupancy of property acquired by, or transferred to, the Secretary for the purposes of this title, in order to conserve and utilize it or advance the purposes of this title. Any violation of such rules and regulations shall be punished as prescribed in section 5388 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 18, sec. 104).

"PAYMENTS TO COUNTIES

"SEC. 33. As soon as practicable after the end of each calendar year, the Secretary shall pay to the county in which any land is held by the Secretary under this title, 25 per centum of the net revenues received by the Secretary from the use of the land during such year. In case the land is situated in more than one county, the amount to be paid shall be divided equitably among the respective counties. Payments to counties under this section shall be made on the condition that they are used for school or road purposes, or both. This section shall not be construed to apply to amounts received from the sale of land.

"APPROPRIATION

"SEC. 34. To carry out the provisions of this title, there is authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $10,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and not exceed $20,000,000 for each of the two fiscal years thereafter.

The directors, appointed as hereinbefore provided, shall receive no additional compensation for their services as such directors but may be allowed travel and subsistence expenses when engaged in business of the Corporation outside of the District of Columbia.

The Board shall define the authority and duties of the officers and employees of the Corporation, delegate to them such of the powers vested in the Corporation as it may determine, and require bonds of such of them as it may designate and fix the penalties and pay the premiums of such bonds.

"(h) All money of the Corporation not otherwise employed may be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States or in any bank approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, subject to withdrawal by the Corporation at any time, or with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury may be invested in obligations of the United States. "(i) The Corporation, including its franchises, its capital, reserves, and surplus and its income and property shall, except as otherwise provided in section 50 (a), be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States or any State, Territory, District, dependency, or political subdivision.

"BID AT FORECLOSURE

The Secretary is authorized and empowered to bid for and purchase at any foreclosure or other sale, or otherwise to acquire property pledged or mortgaged to secure any loan or other indebtedness owing under this Act; to accept title to any property so purchased or acquired; to operate or lease such property for such period as may be deemed necessary or advisable to protect the investment therein; and to sell or otherwise dispose of such property so purchased or acquired upon such terms and for such considerations as the Secretary shall determine to be reasonable, but subject to the reservation of the rights provided for in section 44.

"PENALTIES

Managers on the part of the Senate.
MARVIN JONES,
WALL DOXEY,
CLIFFORD R. HOPE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the conference report?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, it was rather understood that general legislation would not be considered today. I have no objection to proceeding to the consideration of the conference report if it will not lead to debate.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say to the Senator that if it leads to debate, I will promptly withdraw it.

Mr. McNARY. I reserve the right to object later if it should lead to debate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Alabama will yield to me, I should like to make a general statement.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. It was my understanding and the feeling of us all that there would be no legislative business transacted today or tomorrow or at any time until after the funeral of our late beloved colleague. The Senator from Alabama has illness in his family and desires to go home. With the understanding that the conference report will lead to no discussion, and that there will be no objection to its consideration, I shall not object; but I should like to have it understood that my statement applies to any matter which may be brought before the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. I made such a reservation. So I think we might go forward.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

CHARLES CARROLL OF CARROLLTON BICENTENARY COMMISSION

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, it is with great reluctance that I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Calendar No. 908, being Senate Joint Resolution 171, dealing with the Charles Carroll of Carrollton Bicentenary Commission. The joint resolution does not propose new legislation. An appropriation has been made and a commission has been created, but, due to the fact that some portraits have to come from Italy to Baltimore for exhibition there, and as the time limit is very short, the Commission is held up in the most important part of its work. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution may be considered at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 171) relating to the employment of personnel and expenditures made by the Charles Carroll of Carrollton Bicentenary Commission was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That for the purpose of carrying out its functions under the joint resolution of June 15, 1936, the Charles Carroll of Carrollton Bicentenary Commission, or the chairman acting for the Commission, is authorized to fix the compensation of such officers and employees as may be necessary without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers and employees of the United States, and to determine its necessary expenditures and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, and paid, without regard to the provisions of any other laws governing the expenditure of public funds; and be it further

Resolved, That the Commission be authorized to borrow the services of employees from other Government agencies.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR CIVIL FUNCTIONS OF WAR DEPARTMENT—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire to ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report on the bill making appropriations for certain nonmilitary activities of the War Department. May I do that now? I may say that there is no disagreement between the House and the Senate as to any provision except one, and that has to do with amendment no. 15. That amendment relates to the pay of five retired officers of the Regular Army assigned to active duty at the United States Soldiers' Home. The question was submitted to the House, and the House disagreed to this amendment. I have talked with the chairman of the House committee, who says there is no use whatever in making any further attempt to obtain favorable action on that side. I think that is true, because, as a matter of fact, it was a controversial question in the committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. KING. Is it pertinent to the proposed legislation to have included in it a provision for the salaries or increase of compensation of the officers referred to? Is that germane to the main purposes of the bill?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; because the bill makes appropriations for certain civil functions administered by the War Department, and among such functions is the operation of the United States Soldiers' Home. It seems that five retired officers of the Army are on duty there. They get their retired pay. They have quarters and subsistence. But at the same time personally I feel, and I think it is the feeling of all members of the Senate committee, that these men are on active duty, performing active service, and ought to be paid accordingly. Of course, they have certain emoluments and certain privileges which they get, perhaps, in some degree, because of this service. The matter was discussed at some length in the conference committee. There was disagreement there. When the matter went to the House, the House Members, with only three exceptions, voted against it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WALSH. The regular order of business now before the Senate is the presentation of petitions and memorials. Many of us have bills to introduce and reports to make. May I suggest that the Senator wait until morning business shall have been disposed of?

Mr. COPELAND. I shall be very glad to do that. I shall wait and take up the matter again after morning business shall have been concluded.

COMMERCIAL AIRPORT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the chairman of the District of Columbia Airport Commission (Hon. WILLIAM H. KING, senior Senator from Utah), submitting, pursuant to law, the report of the Commission concerning potential sites for commercial airports in and the establishment of a commercial airport for the District of Columbia, which was ordered to lie on the table.

ACTS OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate certified copies of the following acts of the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

(Chap. 304.) An act making uniform the procedure on interstate rendition; and (Chap. 307.) An act providing for the entry of this Commonwealth into compacts with any of the United States for mutual helpfulness in relation to persons convicted of crimes or offenses who are on probation or parole.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the City Council of Lynn, Mass., favoring the granting of an annuity during her natural life to the widow of Hon. William P. Connery, Jr., late a Representative from the State of Massachusetts, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from Charles X. Newman, of Oakland, Calif., praying that legislative action be taken to reverse the alleged order of California W. P. A. officials to their project supervisors "to lay off the least employable first" and "to keep the best men on W. P. A.", which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted at the Twenty-eighth Annual Conference of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People held at Detroit, Mich., favoring the enactment of the so-called Wagner-Van Nuys-Gavagan antilynching bill, and other measures of beneficial interest to the Negro race, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COPELAND presented a resolution adopted by the Home Owners and Taxpayers' Association of Staten Island, Inc., of Staten Island, N. Y., protesting against the present foreclosure policy of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and favoring the prompt enactment of legislation for the relief of home owners, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Robert Morris Council, No. 100, of New York City, and Banksville Council, No. 86, of Bedford, both of the Junior Order United American Mechanics, in the State of New York, protesting against the enactment of the bill (H. R. 6391) to authorize the prompt deportation of criminals and certain other aliens, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Twenty-sixth Annual Grand Chapter of the Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity held in Washington, D. C., favoring the prompt enactment of pending antilynching legislation, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. REYNOLDS presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of North Carolina, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Joint resolution endorsing the recommendations of the President of the United States of February 5, 1937, for reforms in the Federal judicial system and requesting the Senators and Members of Congress from North Carolina to support the measure presented to carry out this purpose

Whereas Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, in a message to Congress on February 5, 1937, recommended the enactment of a measure making important changes in the Federal judicial system, including a provision which would empower the President, when any judge of the United States Supreme Court, appointed to hold office during good behavior, has hereafter attained the age of 70 years after at least 10 years of service and within 6 months thereafter has neither resigned nor retired, to nominate and with the consent of the Senate to appoint one additional judge for such Court: Provided, That this increase in the number of judges so appointed shall not result in more than 15 members of the Supreme Court of the United States, or more than two additional judges of the circuit court of appeals or other specified court; and

Whereas, by reason of the recommendations of the President of the United States to Congress, and action upon the bill presented by the President for the purpose of carrying out his recommendations, presents an issue of great national importance in which the people of North Carolina and all other people of the United States are vitally concerned; and

Whereas the people of the State of North Carolina are strongly supporting the President of the United States in his recommendations to Congress and a great majority of the people of this State firmly believe that the enactment of such measure is vital to the future happiness and welfare of our people; and

Whereas the members of the General Assembly of North Carolina desire to express to the President of the United States and to our Representatives in Congress full endorsement and approval of the measure presented by the President to Congress, and to urge Members of Congress from North Carolina to support the same: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring):

SECTION 1. That the General Assembly of North Carolina does hereby fully endorse and approve the recommendations made by the President of the United States, Franklin D. Roosevelt, in his message to Congress of February 5, 1937, and that we do hereby recommend to and urge upon the Members of Congress from North Carolina that they shall vote for and support the measure presented to Congress to carry out said recommendations.

SEC. 2. That duly certified copies of this joint resolution shall be immediately forwarded to the President of the United States and to the Members of Congress from North Carolina, and the Members of Congress from North Carolina are requested to present this joint resolution to the Congress of the United States promptly after the receipt thereof.

SEC. 3. That this resolution shall be in force and effect from and after its ratification.

[In connection with the presentation of the foregoing joint resolution, Mr. REYNOLDS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a resolution of the Bar Association of Hertford County, N. C., and an address by L. J. Lawrence, president of said bar association, relative to the reorganization of the Federal judiciary, which appear in the Appendix.]

R. 7577) to provide an adequate and balanced flow of the major agricultural commodities in interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes. I ask that the letters and petition be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letters and petition referred to by the Senator from North Carolina will be received and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

EXPLANATORY STATEMENT ON PROPOSED AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT OF 1937

Objectives: The bill specifies four objectives.

The first objective is parity prices to farmers for normal supplies of the five major agricultural commodities—cotton, wheat, corn, rice, and tobacco. Parity prices are those that would give these five commodities at all times the same purchasing power (with regard to articles that farmers buy) as these commodities had in the favorable pre-war base period of 1909–14. In case of tobacco the post-war period 1919–29 is used as the base period. Inasmuch as prices of articles that farmers buy reflect increases in industrial wages and in costs of living and production generally, realization of the objective of parity prices means that the farm price for each major agricultural commodity would keep pace with the rise and fall of the farmer's costs of living and production. It is a premise of the bill that over any period of years farmers would obtain a much larger income from having their selling prices keep pace with costs of living and production than from receiving, as at present, the peak prices obtainable during periods of scarcity when farmers have little on hand to sell and the depression prices obtainable during periods of overabundance when farmers have a large crop to sell.

The second objective is parity income for the farmer. This would be a net income that bears to the income of the nonagricultural population the same relation as prevailed during the base period.

The third objective is, without interfering with parity prices, to establish an ever-normal granary for each of the five major agricultural commodities. The maximum granary provided is 10 percent of the normal supply of the commodity—that is, 10 percent of a normal year's domestic consumption, exports, and commercial carry-over combined. However, it is believed that conditions will probably require the establishment by the Secretary of Agriculture in most years of an ever-normal granary of not more than 7½ percent of the normal supply.

On such a 7½-percent basis there would be established for corn, for instance, in addition to the normal carry-over of the 119,000,000 bushels, an ever-normal granary of 187,000,000 bushels, a total carry-over of 306,000,000 bushels.

Similarly, for wheat the total carryover would reach a maximum of 19,000,000 bushels of white wheat and 180,000,000 bushels of other wheat in lieu of the normal carry-over of 137,000,000 bushels; and for rice a total carry-over of 142,000,000 barrels in lieu of the normal carry-over of 550,000 barrels. For the nonfood commodities, cotton and tobacco, the ever-normal granary principle is also made applicable, although, because of the commercial practice of maintaining larger carry-overs for such commodities, the percentage increase in carry-over by reason of the ever-normal granary is correspondingly less. For instance, cotton from a normal carry-over of 5,200,000 bales would reach a total carry-over of 6,600,000 bales; dark tobacco from a normal carry-over of 182,000,000 pounds would reach a total carry-over of 207,000,000 pounds; and cigar tobacco from a normal carry-over of 243,000,000 pounds would reach a total carry-over of 271,000,000 pounds.

These carry-overs would mean that the total supply level at the beginning of each marketing year (i. e., carry-over plus current crop) sought as the supply objective of the bill under the ever-normal granary principle would be not the normal supply level of the past but a new ever-normal granary supply level as follows: Cotton, 19,600,000 bales; wheat (other than white wheat), 800,000,000 bushels; white wheat, 84,000,000 bushels; field corn, 2,681,000,000 bushels; rice, 12,420,000 barrels; dark tobacco, 362,000,000 pounds; and cigar tobacco, 406,000,000 pounds.

Under the bill the ever-normal granary is designed to make available to domestic consumers reserves that will provide adequate supplies at fair prices in years of drought, flood, or other adverse conditions, as well as in years of plenty, and also to take care of profitable exports during such periods. The ever-normal granary will also protect the consumer from abnormally high prices.

The fourth objective is to conserve our national soil resources through preventing production of surpluses for which there are no adequate markets, present or prospective. Such surpluses expend our soil fertility without producing commensurate income to the farmer or benefit to the public.

In part the bill embodies a new agricultural philosophy. It assures the farmer substantially a parity return for normal supplies of major agricultural commodities in the belief that such a return is fair to all elements of our population and that national prosperity cannot exist if our agricultural population does not share in that prosperity through prices that keep pace with industrial prices and wages. At the same time, however, the bill rejects a scarcity philosophy in favor of the advantages, both to the consumer and the farmer, of the stable and abundant supply provided by the ever-normal granary.

The bill is framed in the view that a stabilized market for corn and wheat will in large measure eliminate violent fluctuations in the cost of feedstuffs to the dairy and livestock farmers, as well as mitigate the violent fluctuations and vicious cycles in livestock and dairy production; stabilize the price for feed products for livestock; and substantially assist dairy and livestock farmers in obtaining parity income.

A stable supply under the bill will also directly benefit concerns engaged in processing major agricultural commodities or in furnishing farmers with storage and transportation facilities and production equipment and materials, and will provide more uniform employment for labor engaged in these activities.

Methods of operation: To achieve the foregoing objectives the bill directs the Secretary of Agriculture to take action along three lines. These are designed and interrelated so as to stabilize at parity the return to farmers for normal supplies of major agricultural commodities and to stabilize the total supply of each such commodity at the ever-normal granary supply level for the commodity.

These lines of action include: First, parity payments and surplus reserve loans; second, acreage diversion, storage under seal, and marketing quotas; and third, release of stocks of the commodity held off the market as security for surplus reserve loans or under marketing quotas, and reductions in the rate of tariff duty on the commodity. Each of these is described below.

In carrying out the purposes of the bill adjustment contracts (described later in this statement) are authorized to be entered into between the Secretary of Agriculture and farmers producing any of the major agricultural commodities for market and willing to cooperate with the Government. These contracting farmers are "cooperators."

Parity payments: The farmer has the burden of establishing and maintaining the ever-normal granary, and thereby enabling the Government to safeguard the consumer from inadequate supplies and unreasonable prices in the lean years. In consideration thereof, the Government provides under the bill for parity payments to the farmer. In years when the supply is not overnormal, the parity payments would bring the return to the farmer substantially up to parity. At the present time this would mean at the farm 16-cent cotton, $1.14 wheat (not including white wheat), $1.09 white wheat, 85-cent corn, rice $3.77 a barrel, dark tobacco 10.2 cents a pound, cigar tobacco 13.9 cents a pound.

However, under the operation of this bill the total supply will ordinarily be above normal by reason of the presence of the supply constituting the ever-normal granary. The parity payments are graduated according to the total supply. As the total supply increases above normal, parity payments increase, but only about half as rapidly as the farm price decreases in the face of the larger supply. Therefore as the total supply, including ever-normal granary, increase above normal the return per unit to the farmer (farm price plus parity payment) decreases. In the presence, for instance, of an ever-normal granary supply of 7½ cents above normal, the parity payments would bring the return per unit to the farmer up to a maximum of about 90 percent of parity. A 5-percent ever-normal granary would result in a 92-percent parity return; a 10-percent or completely filled ever-normal granary, would result in an 87-percent parity return. In effect, the farmer and the Government share the cost of maintaining the ever-normal granary supply. This constitutes a major contribution by the farmer to the program in return for the benefits to him.

The precise maximum rate of return per unit under the bill to the farmer at the various supply levels is specified in schedule A of the bill and is designated therein as the "maximum income rate." In no event will the parity payments exceed the difference between this rate and the current average farm price for the commodity throughout the year.

Parity payments are made at the close of the marketing year for the particular crop and are paid on the aggregate normal yield of the base acreage planted to the crop during such marketing year. Only cooperators are entitled to parity payments.

A cooperator is afforded a 10-percent tolerance, so that if he plants to the commodity more than 90 percent but not over 100 percent of the acreage permitted to be planted, he will receive payments on the basis of 100 percent planting. Such a tolerance allows for irregularities in sizes of fields, errors in farmers' estimates of acreage, and the like.

Surplus reserve loans: For corn and wheat (other than white wheat) surplus reserve loans are available at all supply levels. The rate of loan, like the parity payments, is graduated according to the total supply of the commodity on hand at the beginning of the year. If such supply is not in excess of normal, loans may be had up to 85 percent of the parity price of the commodity. As the total supply increases the rate of loan decreases until when the total supply is 114 percent or more above normal the loan rate is 52 percent of parity. Also, at this supply level surplus reserve loans become available at the same rate for the major agricultural commodities on an export basis, i. e., cotton, tobacco, rice, and white wheat.

The loans serve several purposes. In the case of corn and wheat (other than white wheat) the loans, being available at all supply levels, will at all times have a stabilizing effect on the farm price. As a result, the difference between the farm price and the maximum rate of return to the farmer is minimized, and the amount of parity payments necessary to take up the slack between this maximum and the farm price is much less than what it would be if the farm price were not supported by the loans.

Tobacco, rice, cotton, and white wheat being on a world-price basis, loans only become available in the case of extraordinarily large supplies. The loans then serve to prevent the domestic price from falling to exceedingly low levels.

In addition to the direct effect upon price, the surplus reserve loans permit more orderly marketing and enable the farmer to withhold and store a large part of the normal carry-over and of the additional reserves that will constitute the ever-normal granary. The loans will finance the storage of these reserves.

The surplus reserve loans are available only to cooperators. The loans are made solely on the security of the commodity stored on the farm or in warehouses conforming to Government regulations.

Acreage diversion: Cooperators may be required to divert base acreage from the production of the commodity if the total supply exceeds normal at the beginning of the marketing year and the ever-normal granary supply is adequate. The amount of diversion is to be fixed so as to make effective the objective of parity and, without interfering with the maintenance of parity prices, also to make effective the objective of an adequate ever-normal granary supply. In no event is the amount of diversion to be so great as to bring the total supply at the end of the marketing year to less than normal. Any diversion of acreage required is undertaken by a cooperator without special compensation and in return for the benefits of a stabilized income afforded him by the act. A cooperator is required to engage in certain soil maintenance, soil building, and dairy practices with respect to the acreage diverted. Wheat and corn acreage may be interchanged by the farmer for diversion purposes.

Storage under seal: Cooperators may be required to store under seal not to exceed 20 percent of their harvest of the current crop. Such storage is to be on the farm or in warehouses conforming to regulations of the Secretary. Surplus reserve loans may be obtained on the security of the commodity so stored.

Marketing quotas: If the total supply of a major agricultural commodity at the beginning of a marketing year exceeds normal by more than certain amounts, marketing quotas are then to be placed in effect for the current crop of the commodity. Thus the marketing-quota level for cotton, for instance, is a total supply 15 percent in excess of normal, or 20,900,000 bales; corn, 10 percent in excess of normal, or 2,743,000,000 bushels; wheat (other than white wheat), 20 percent in excess of normal, or 893,000,000 bushels; rice, 10 percent in excess of normal, or 12,700,000 barrels; dark tobacco, 10 percent in excess of normal, or 371,000,000 pounds; and cigar tobacco, 10 percent in excess of normal, or 416,000,000 pounds. When the provisions of the bill are in operation, supplies of this magnitude would not occur frequently, because, with the voluntary diversion which would be in effect from time to time, these large supplies would probably occur only in years of extraordinarily favorable yields or large increases in the planted acreages of noncooperators.

The national marketing quota for any commodity is to be so fixed as to make available during the marketing year at least a normal supply of the commodity. The national marketing quota for any commodity will in no event be less than the normal supply for the commodity adjusted by deducting, first, the carry-over available for market, and, second, by the quantity not produced for market. On the other hand, the national marketing quota for any commodity cannot be greater than the ever-normal granary supply level, similarly adjusted.

The Secretary of Agriculture is required, after public hearing with respect to the facts involved, to proclaim the amount of the national marketing quota for any commodity, both in terms of the quantity which may be marketed and in terms of a percentage of the national base acreage for the commodity, computed on the basis of the national average yield for such commodity.

The amount of the marketing quota for any farm shall be the current crop of the commodity less the normal yield of the acreage on the farm devoted to the production of such crop in excess of the percentage of base acreage specified in the proclamation of the Secretary. However, the farmer who, through flood, drought, or other adverse conditions, fails to produce an amount equal to the normal yield of at least half his base acreage for the commodity is not subject to quota.

The noncooperator, as well as the cooperator, is subject to the quota provisions of the bill. Inasmuch as the cooperator will have already conformed to the crop-diversion requirements under the adjustment contract prior to the imposition of the marketing quota on the crop, it is unlikely that in any year in which the marketing quotas are in effect a cooperator would be in any way restricted in his marketings. The effect of the marketing quotas is thus to place the noncooperator in the same position as the cooperator, by requiring the noncooperator to withhold from market the normal yield of an acreage about equivalent to that which the cooperator will have diverted from production of the crop plus the normal yield of any acreage in excess of his base acreage which the noncooperator may have also devoted to such crop. It is also to be noted that efficient production is not penalized under the provisions of the bill, inasmuch as the amount to be withheld from market is based upon the normal yield for the farm and not the actual yield for the farm in any particular year.

In the event marketing quotas are imposed, the farmer who produces in excess of his quota is required to refrain from marketing such excess until the price of the commodity has risen to more than 10 percent over parity, or until he has absorbed the excess through subsequently diverting from the production of the commodity an acreage whose normal yield at least equals the excess. A farmer who fails to conform to these marketing requirements and markets in excess of quota is, under the bill, engaged in an unfair agricultural practice. Any farmer engaging in any such unfair agricultural practice that affects interstate or foreign commerce is subject to penalties at the rate of 50 percent of the parity price of the excess marketed. For tobacco, penalties at somewhat different rates are specified. Marketing includes feeding in any form to livestock which are to be sold, or the products of which are to be sold.

Release of stocks and tariff-rate reduction: The bill is also designed to safeguard the consumer by preventing the farm price from substantially exceeding parity. If the current average farm price for the commodity is more than 10 percent above the parity price, then action may be taken as follows:

1. Release of stocks of the commodity which cooperators had been required to store under seal.

2. Release of stocks of the commodity held off the market under marketing quotas.

3. Calling of surplus reserve loans and disposal of any stocks of the commodity acquired by the Government in connection with such loans.

4. In case of corn, wheat, rice, and tobacco, reduction of the tariff rate on imports by the amount by which the current average farm price for the commodity is more than 10 percent above parity price. This is an automatic flexible tariff operating without delay on these four commodities. A corresponding increase in tariff rate for these commodities is provided if their current average farm price is more than 10 percent below parity price.

Contracts with cooperators: Every farmer engaged in producing any major agricultural commodity (the production and marketing of which affects interstate or foreign commerce) is eligible to enter into an adjustment contract, provided at least 25 percent of his production is for market; that is, at least 25 percent of his production is to be sold or is to be fed in some form to livestock which or the products of which are to be sold. There is a further qualification, however, affecting the small corn and wheat farmer. If the normal yield of his base acreage in the case of corn is less than 300 bushels or in the case of wheat is less than 100 bushels and he confines his production to his base acreage, then such a farmer does not become a noncooperator by failing to enter into an adjustment contract. It is expected that this provision will simplify the administration of the bill and at the same time afford the small farmer all the benefits under the bill if he wishes to take advantage of them.

The first adjustment contracts to be offered to farmers are for the 3-year period beginning with the crops planted to be harvested in 1938. New adjustment contracts will cover additional periods to be determined by the Secretary. Adjustment contracts are tendered to farmers during the last 5 months of each calendar year, but apply only with respect to crops to be harvested in subsequent years covered by the contract. A separate contract is required for each farm, but each contract covers all major agricultural commodities.

The Secretary of Agriculture enters into the adjustment contract with the person owning the land comprising the farm, except that if the farm is leased to a person having full control of cropping operations on the farm for 1 year or more during the period covered by the adjustment contract, then the Secretary enters into the contract with such lessee. In preparing and entering into adjustment contracts the Secretary of Agriculture is required to take into consideration and protect the rightful interests and equities of tenants and sharecroppers.

Under his adjustment contract the cooperator is entitled to parity payments, to surplus reserve loans, and to soil-building payments under the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act; also to soil-conserving payments under that act with respect to commodities other than the five major agricultural commodities. Commencing with 1938 no soil-conserving payments under that act will be payable with respect to cotton, wheat, corn, rice, and tobacco, but in lieu thereof cooperators will receive the parity payments. An exception is made in case of flue-cured, Maryland, and burley tobacco, the producers of which will continue to receive the soil-conserving payments and not the parity payments. Noncooperators eligible to enter into adjustment contracts will receive no payments under the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act. The bill in nowise affects payments under the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act to farmers not engaged in producing for market one of the major agricultural commodities.

In return for the benefits under his adjustment contract the cooperator is obligated, under certain supply conditions heretofore set forth and without special compensation therefor, to divert acreage from production of any major agricultural commodity and to store under seal not in excess of 20 percent of his production. Independent of his contract, the cooperator, like the noncooperator, has the duty to restrict marketing in accordance with any marketing quotas in effect. For breach of his contract the cooperator loses his right to surplus reserve loans and parity payments with respect to the crop concerning which the breach occurs.

Base acreages and normal yields: On each farm of any farmer producing any major agricultural commodity the production and marketing of which affects interstate or foreign commerce, there is to be established, whether or not the farmer is a cooperator, a base acreage, and a normal yield for each such commodity. The national base acreage for each commodity is specified in actual acreage figures. These figures are sufficiently large to cover an aggregate base acreage equal in amount to all base acreage recognized under the existing Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act. Ordinarily the whole of the base acreage for a commodity will not be needed in order to maintain supply at the ever-normal granary supply level. This large base acreage, however, remains available to meet extraordinary demands. Ordinarily a substantial portion of this base acreage will be diverted from production. This, however, has no effect on the costs under the bill for, as heretofore pointed out, payments are not made for diversion or based on the amount of diversion.

The national base acreage is allotted among the States on the basis of acreage devoted to production of the commodity during the preceding 10 years, with adjustments for abnormal weather conditions, recent trends in acreage, and acreage diverted through agricultural adjustment and conservation programs. The State base acreage is allotted among counties and local administrative areas within the State on the same basis with an additional adjustment for promoting changes in soil-conservation practices. The local allotments are allotted among the farms within the area through local committees of farmers, and equitably adjusted by the committee among such farms. The adjustment is made on tillable acreage, type of soil, topography, and production facilities.

The normal yield is the average yield of the farm for the commodity during the preceding 10 years with adjustments in those areas that were subject to abnormal weather conditions; also where there is no actual yield or where the data therefor is not available for any year, an appraised yield, as determined under regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture, is to be used. The normal yield is to be recomputed whenever new adjustment contracts are to be entered into.

Soil depleting base acreages, normal yields, and marketing quotas are required to be published within the county and filed for public inspection. Any farmer dissatisfied may obtain a review before an independent committee of farmers. Where necessary further review may be had before a reviewing officer designated by the Secretary of Agriculture and before the courts. Any increase in such base acreage or marketing quota as a result of review proceedings is to be made by reducing pro rata all other base acreages or marketing quotas within the same local administrative area.

Administration: The act is to be administered by the Secretary of Agriculture. He may utilize local committees or associations of farmers, or State public or private agencies adequately empowered by State laws. Cooperative associations are to be accorded such recognition as will promote efficient methods of marketing and distribution. Observance of acreage diversion and quota requirements is expected to be policed by the local associations of producers.

For administering the surplus reserve loans there is established within the Department of Agriculture, and as an agency of the Department, a corporation to be known as Surplus Reserve Loan Corporation. The management of the corporation is vested in a board of three persons employed in the Department, to be appointed by the Secretary and to be subject to his general supervision. The corporation has a capital stock of $100,000,000 subscribed to by the United States, and that sum is authorized to be appropriated by the bill. The corporation is authorized to have outstanding at any time notes, debentures, and other obligations in a par amount aggregating not more than five times its paid-in capital stock. The Secretary of the Treasury may purchase obligations of the corporation.

Appropriations: Aside from the foregoing appropriation for the capital stock of the Surplus Reserve Loan Corporation, which is not annual but is required to be made only once, the appropriations required by the bill are those necessary for the Soil Conservation Act payments and the parity payments pursuant to adjustment contracts made with cooperators. According to the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, the probable amount of funds required annually for payments pursuant to adjustment contracts will vary from $200,000,000 to $500,000,000. A large part of this cost will be met by the discontinuance under the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act of the soil-conserving payments on the five major agricultural commodities. These payments have heretofore been made from a portion of the $500,000,000 appropriation authorized under that act.

In view of the foregoing considerations the bill authorizes $400,000,000 to be appropriated annually and to remain available until expended. However, of this amount $250,000,000 will be made available from the appropriation for the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act. This, together with the funds appropriated to the Secretary of Agriculture by section 32 of the act of August 24, 1935, and not required for other purposes, viz, $50,000,000, will come close to covering all payments under the proposed legislation without increase in the authorized appropriations for Agricultural Adjustment Administration programs.

USES OF SOUTHERN AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, on April 12 I introduced Senate bill 2140, providing for the establishment and maintenance of a regional research laboratory for the development of industrial uses for southern agricultural products. The bill was enthusiastically approved by the Department of Agriculture and by the President as well, but owing to the financial situation the Budget Bureau objected. After conferences with the Budget Bureau, the bill was redrafted. At this time I introduce for appropriate reference another bill on the same subject, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD at this point, together with a letter from the President endorsing the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the bill and the letter from the President will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2789) to provide for the establishment and maintenance of a regional research laboratory for the development of industrial uses for southern agricultural products; the first unit to be devoted to the development of industrial uses for cotton and cotton products; additional units to be provided for the study of other crops as additional funds are provided, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

A bill to provide for the establishment and maintenance of a regional research laboratory for the development of industrial uses for southern agricultural products; the first unit to be devoted to the development of industrial uses for cotton and cotton products; additional units to be provided for the study of other crops as additional funds are provided

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed (1) to establish and maintain a regional research laboratory within one of the following Southern States: Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia; (2) to conduct at such laboratory research, experiments, investigations, tests, and demonstrations with respect to the chemical, physical, and physiological properties and utilization and preservation of cotton and its by-products, including cottonseed, cottonseed meal, cottonseed oil, cotton hulls, moats, cotton lint and linters, and cotton stalks; and the collection, harvesting, preservation, and industrial utilization of whole cotton as a raw material for the manufacture of cellulose, cellulosic materials, lignin and lignin derivatives, etc., with a particular view to the development of wider uses of cotton by industry; and (3) to make public the results of such research, experiments, investigations, tests, and demonstrations. This shall constitute the first unit.

SEC. 2. Such laboratory shall be established only upon the condition that the State in which it is to be located shall provide suitable lands without expense to the United States and shall provide the sum of $250,000 to defray the expenses of the construction of suitable buildings. The Secretary of Agriculture shall within 60 days after the enactment of this act transmit to the Governor of each of the said States information with respect to the lands necessary to provide a suitable site for such laboratory. If thereafter any of the said States, on or before March 1, 1938, submits to the Secretary of Agriculture an offer to provide the lands and money required by this section, with such guaranties for the performance thereof as may be satisfactory to the Secretary, he shall accept from among the offers submitted the offer of the State deemed by him to be most desirable for the location of such laboratory. Upon the acceptance of the offer of any State, the Secretary of Agriculture shall as soon thereafter as practicable accept, in the name of the United States, title to the land offered by such State and the money offered by such State shall be covered into the United States Treasury as a special fund to be used for the purpose of this act.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to construct, on any lands acquired under this act for the purpose of establishing such laboratory, suitable buildings and appurtenances thereto at a cost not in excess of $250,000. The Secretary is further authorized, for the purposes of this act, to acquire such equipment, apparatus, and supplies as he deems necessary and to cooperate with other branches of the Department of Agriculture, other departments or agencies of the Federal Government, States, State agricultural experimental stations, universities, and other State agencies and institutions, counties, municipalities, business, or other organizations, corporations, associations, scientific societies, and individuals upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe.

SEC. 4. Any money received from a State under this act is hereby made available solely for the construction of buildings and appurtenances for such laboratory; and, in addition thereto, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $250,000 for each fiscal year, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, to carry out the purposes of this act. Ten percent of the appropriations may be expended for administrative purposes in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 5. The Secretary of Agriculture is further authorized to establish from time to time as funds are provided, other than the funds available under this act, additional units on the land acquired under this act for research in other southern farm products and byproducts such as rice straw, rice hulls, tung nuts, tung hulls, tung oil, peanuts, peanut oil, peanut hulls, sugarcane bagasse, palmetto fiber, and any other southern crop and its by-products that offer promising possibilities for new and wider industrial outlets for agricultural products.

The letter presented by Mr. BILBO is as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, July 6, 1937.

HON. THEODORE G. BILBO,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have given careful consideration to the matter of the establishment and operation of a regional research laboratory for the development of new uses of southern agricultural products, as proposed by the bill which you have introduced in the Senate (S. 2140) and as explained in your letter to me of June 10, 1937.

I consider the aims and purposes of the project highly meritorious and would be willing to favor the Federal Government doing its part to further them. I do not feel, however, that this part should consist of financing the project wholly at the expense of the Government. It would seem that since the matter is of such importance to the Southern States, particularly those in the Cotton Belt, that the States concerned should be willing to cooperate to the extent of furnishing the necessary buildings and grounds, leaving to the Government the cost of furnishing the necessary equipment and the conduct of research activities.

In order not to impose too great a burden at this time, when the financial situation of the Government and of the States concerned is not as favorable as might be desired, I would suggest that the project might be initiated by providing for the establishment and operation during the fiscal year 1939 of but one unit of the proposed research laboratory, to be devoted to the South's principal agricultural product—the cotton plant, including the utilization of the raw cotton, stalks, seed, burrs, etc. I am advised that the cost of such a unit would be approximately $250,000 for building and grounds and $250,000 for equipment and operation the first year, and that thereafter the cost of operation would be about $250,000 a year. It is my thought that, as the financial situation improves so as to justify such action, additional building units might be provided from time to time and research activities undertaken with respect to other major agricultural products of the Southern States.

If you should see fit to redraft your bill to set forth a plan along the lines above suggested, I should be glad to give it my approval.

Sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

R. 7865) making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Federal Government for the last half of the month of July 1937, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 7865) making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Federal Government for the last half of the month of July 1937 was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

EXTENSION OF INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations has conferred with regard to House bill 7865, which has just come over from the other House, and has authorized me to report it favorably. I now do so, and ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill. The Interior Department cannot continue their necessary functions unless the extension is made until July 31, 1937. This is merely a measure continuing for a limited time the appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report will be received. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7865) making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Federal Government for the last half of the month of July 1937, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AUTHORITY TO SIGN BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the Presiding Officer may be authorized to sign the bill during the recess or adjournment of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I extend that request to the signing of any document by the Presiding Officer during any adjournment or recess of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

[Mr. BYRD asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter from R. N. Elliott, Acting Comptroller General of the United States, relative to the cost of certain homestead projects, a table on the same subject, and a statement on the subject issued by himself, which appear in the Appendix.]

WORK OF THE ARMY ENGINEERS

[Mr. SHEPPARD asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD two editorials from the Beaumont (Tex.) Enterprise relative to the work of the Army engineers, which appear in the Appendix.]

APPROPRIATIONS FOR CIVIL FUNCTIONS OF WAR DEPARTMENT—CONFERENCE REPORT

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed. The Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] is recognized.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have explained to the Senate the disagreement relating to certain officers at the Soldiers' Home. I wish the money might be provided, but it seems to me foolish for us to make the effort at this time.

The other matters in dispute are few in number. The first one relates to graves and grounds in the Congressional Cemetery. It may not be known to some of the newer Members of the Senate body that the Government many years ago bought 950 lots in the Congressional Cemetery, and that many distinguished men are buried there. Also in the Congressional Cemetery is the grave of a famous Indian chief, who came here representing his tribe on some matter of Government importance, who died while here, and was buried in that cemetery. The language which was inserted by the Senate was amended so that it might include the care of the grave of this patriotic Indian.

The other amendments, relating to flood control, are of concern to everybody.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. McNARY. As I recall the status of the flood-control items, $30,000,000 was carried for flood control in the deficiency bill.

Mr. COPELAND. No. The Budget Bureau approved an expenditure of $30,000,000.

Mr. McNARY. In what bill was that appropriation carried?

Mr. COPELAND. It is carried in the bill making appropriations for the civil functions of the War Department.

Mr. McNARY. In the bill now before us?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; in this bill. The Senator may recall that last year we wanted to get $50,000,000 under the so-called Copeland plan, but Congress adjourned before the bill was signed. This year the Bureau of the Budget approved $30,000,000 for use on the lower Mississippi. We were not satisfied with that, and so the Senate increased the amount to $60,000,000 under the Copeland Act and $45,000,000 under the Overton Act. The only way the matter can be presented to us is through this bill.

Mr. McNARY. Does this bill carry $60,000,000 for flood control?

Mr. COPELAND. This bill calls for $30,000,000 in cash and $30,000,000 from relief funds.

Mr. McNARY. Relief funds which have heretofore been appropriated by Congress?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; which were appropriated in a recent act. The Army engineers have testified that for every dollar expended for materials and engineering they can use a dollar of relief aid to carry on the work.

We in the Senate desired to appropriate directly the $60,000,000, and to provide a contractual authorization for $38,000,000 more. The Army engineers have made it clear to us since that time that we really do not need such an arrangement to apply specifically to this bill, because under the general law they may go ahead and make contracts, and the payments are to be made when and if the money is appropriated. Under this bill, however, there will be $30,000,000 of direct appropriations and $30,000,000 from relief funds, and the $60,000,000 will be expended under the direction of the Army engineers.

The situation as to the lower Mississippi is just a little different. For the lower Mississippi the direct appropriation is twenty-two and a half million dollars. Then from relief funds there is to be added $7,500,000 more, making $30,000,000, and then there is to be a further use of relief labor to the extent of $15,000,000, making $45,000,000 in all. So it would seem to me that it will be possible to carry on the projects very well.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, when money for this purpose is reappropriated out of relief funds heretofore appropriated, from what source is the deduction to take place?

Mr. COPELAND. Suppose I read the language of the House amendment. The Senate had provided an appropriation of $60,000,000. The $60,000,000 appropriation has been stricken out by this amendment, which reads:

> Thirty million dollars and, in addition, $30,000,000 of the appropriation of $1,500,000,000 contained in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937 shall be available exclusively for carrying out the provisions of such Flood Control Act, approved June 22, 1936, and shall be expended under the direction of the Chief of Engineers under the provisions established in and in pursuance of such Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937 not inconsistent herewith: Provided, That the requirement in section 1 of such Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937 that no Federal construction project shall be undertaken unless and until there have been allocated and irrevocably set aside sufficient funds for its completion shall not apply to flood-control projects authorized by such Flood Control Act, approved June 22, 1936.

So there will be available $30,000,000 to be expended under the direction of the Army engineers under exactly the same conditions as the $30,000,000 direct appropriation.

I move that the conference report be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 7493, which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
July 9, 1937.

R. 7493) making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert ", and that portion of Congressional Cemetery to which the United States has title and the graves of those buried therein, including the burial site of Pushmataha, a Choctaw Indian chief."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 7 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, insert "$30,000,000, and, in addition, $30,000,000 of the appropriation of $1,500,000,000 contained in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937 shall be available exclusively for carrying out the provisions of such Flood Control Act, approved June 22, 1936, and shall be expended under the direction of the Chief of Engineers under the provisions established in and in pursuance of such Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937 not inconsistent herewith: Provided, That the requirement in section 1 of such Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937 that no Federal construction project shall be undertaken unless and until there have been allocated and irrevocably set aside sufficient funds for its completion shall not apply to flood-control projects authorized by such Flood Control Act, approved June 22, 1936."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12 to said bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert "$22,500,000, and, in addition, $22,500,000 of the appropriation of $1,500,000,000 contained in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937 shall be available exclusively for carrying out the provisions of such Flood Control Act, approved May 15, 1928, as amended by such Flood Control Act, approved June 15, 1936, and of such additional amount, $7,500,000 shall be in augmentation of the foregoing appropriation of $22,500,000, and the remainder shall be expended under the direction of the Chief of Engineers subject to the provisions established in and in pursuance of such Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937 not inconsistent herewith: Provided, That the requirement in section 1 of such Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937 that no Federal construction project shall be undertaken unless and until there have been allocated and irrevocably set aside sufficient funds for its completion shall not apply to flood-control projects authorized by such Flood Control Act, approved June 22, 1936"; and

That the House insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15 to said bill.

Mr. COPELAND. I move that the Senate agree to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 7, and 12.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. I move that the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 15.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, do I understand that the order already entered will permit the Presiding Officer to sign this bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so understands. Unanimous consent has been given for the signing of any and all bills or joint resolutions during the recesses or adjournments of the Senate.

EXTENSION OF REDUCED INTEREST RATE ON FEDERAL LAND-BANK LOANS—VETO MESSAGE

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the veto message of the President with reference to the bill (H. R. 6763) reducing the rate of interest on farm mortgages is on the Vice President's desk. It is not my purpose to call it up at this particular time; but I give notice that at the very first appropriate opportunity I shall move to have the matter considered and ask for a vote upon it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I did not understand the request of the Senator from Idaho. Is it to take up for consideration at this time the veto message?

Mr. BORAH. As soon as may be appropriate. I do not undertake to do it today, as there are many Senators absent.

Mr. KING. I shall be glad if it is taken up, and I indicate my desire to support the President of the United States in the veto.

Mr. BORAH. I indicate my desire to override the veto.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is not desirable to take up the veto message today. There will be no objection to taking it up early next week, so far as I know; but it ought not to be taken up today.

TERMS OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT, WEST VIRGINIA

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House bill 6208, Calendar No. 847, with the assurance that such consideration will not cause any debate.

This bill, which was unanimously passed by the House, simply changes the time of holding certain terms of Federal court in the State of West Virginia. Its enactment will impose no burden of any kind upon the Government. Its sole object is to promote efficiency in the transaction of public business. All three of the district judges in West Virginia have requested or approved the changes proposed in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the title of the bill.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 6208) to amend an act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge for the northern and southern districts of West Virginia", approved June 22, 1936, by changing the times provided therein for holding the United States district court at various places now fixed by law in the State of West Virginia.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to make an inquiry of the Senator from West Virginia. The bill does not increase the number of places at which the court may be held?

Mr. NEELY. It does not. It simply changes the time of holding terms of court.

Mr. KING. And its passage would not increase the expenses of the Government?

Mr. NEELY. Not a penny.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from West Virginia for the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the present district judge for the northern district of West Virginia shall hold regular terms of court in such northern district at the following places and times, that is to say:

(a) At the city of Martinsburg on the first Tuesday in April and the fourth Tuesday in September in each year;

(b) At the city of Wheeling on the third Tuesdays in April and October in each year;

(c) At the city of Elkins on the first Tuesday in June and the third Tuesday in November in each year;

(d) Said judge shall also hold such special terms as may be necessary for the orderly dispatch of the business of said court; the same to be held at said places and at such times as he shall appoint.

The present district judge for the southern district of West Virginia shall hold regular terms of court in said southern district at the following times and places, that is to say:

(a) At the city of Bluefield on the third Tuesdays in January and June in each year;

(b) At the city of Lewisburg on the first Tuesdays in March and September in each year;

(c) At the city of Charleston on the second Tuesday in April and on the third Tuesday in November in each year;

(d) Said judge shall also hold such special terms as may be necessary for the orderly dispatch of the business of said court; the same to be held at said places and at such times as he shall appoint.

The district judge for the said northern and southern districts of West Virginia, appointed under the act approved June 22, 1936, shall hold regular terms of court in said northern and southern districts at the following places and times, that is to say:

(a) At the city of Clarksburg in said northern district on the first Tuesday in January and on the fourth Tuesday in August in each year;

(b) At the city of Parkersburg in said northern district on the third Tuesday in March and on the first Tuesday in October in each year;

(c) At the city of Huntington in said southern district on the second Tuesday in May and on the third Tuesday in October in each year;

(d) Said judge shall also hold such special terms as may be necessary for the orderly dispatch of the business of said court; the same to be held at said places and at such times as he shall appoint.

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect on the 1st day of July 1937.

Mr. NEELY. I move to amend the bill by striking out section 2, which is as follows:

This act shall take effect on the 1st day of July 1937.

As the bill was not passed before the time mentioned, this amendment is necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out lines 14 and 15, on page 3, in the following words:

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect on the 1st day of July 1937.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

FUNERAL SERVICES FOR SENATOR ROBINSON

Mrs. CARAWAY. Mr. President, yesterday Members of this body arose to express their sorrow upon the death of my colleague the late senior Senator from my State, the veteran majority leader. It was a heartfelt outpouring of their respect and love for him which will in time bring great comfort to his family. That it would have meant much to him to have had such expressions of love and respect to buoy him up through the severe strain of his legislative duties no one can doubt; but all humanity is shy about expressing itself on the things they feel most deeply for fear of being thought guilty of sentimentality.

For years Senator ROBINSON has been in the public eye. He ever displayed a courage and loyalty of the highest order, combined with strong native ability, which has been and will continue to be a matter of great pride to Arkansas. No other man in our State ever wielded a greater power in both State and Nation, nor will another in a century.

I may not be able to express myself so forcefully or dramatically as some. I feel too deeply the loss of this man to his State, to us here in the Senate, and to the country to be able to talk about it. He was my friend. We shall for years to come regret his untimely death and wish that he were here to advise and direct.

Mr. President, I send a resolution to the desk, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 151) was read and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary invite the Members of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of Hon. JOSEPH T. ROBINSON in the Senate Chamber on Friday, July 16, at 12 o'clock m., and to appoint a committee to act with the committee of the Senate; and be it further

Resolved, That invitations be extended to the President of the United States and the members of the Cabinet, the Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the Diplomatic Corps (through the Secretary of State), the Chief of Staff of the Army, the Chief of Naval Operations of the Navy, the Major General Commandant of the Marine Corps, and the Commandant of the Coast Guard to attend the funeral in the Senate Chamber.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT TO TUESDAY FOLLOWING FUNERAL SERVICES

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, according to the resolution just agreed to the funeral services will be held in this Chamber at 12 o'clock noon tomorrow in honor of the late Senator ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the funeral services tomorrow the Senate shall stand adjourned until noon on Tuesday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is ordered.

COMMITTEE TO ATTEND FUNERAL OF SENATOR ROBINSON

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In reference to the appointment of a committee of Senators to attend the funeral ceremonies of the late Senator JOSEPH T. ROBINSON, to be held at Little Rock, Ark., on Sunday, July 18, the Chair makes the following announcement:

The Senate, by resolution, authorized the Chair to appoint any Member on this committee. The Chair has announced that any Senator who desires to attend such ceremonies will be considered as appointed on the committee. So far the following Senators have expressed a desire to attend such funeral ceremonies and be appointed on the committee:

Mr. ANDREWS, Mr. ASHURST, Mr. AUSTIN, Mr. BAILEY, Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. BARKLEY, Mr. BILBO, Mr. BLACK, Mr. BONE, Mr. BRIDGES, Mr. BROWN of Michigan, Mr. BULKLEY, Mr. BURKE, Mr. BYRD, Mr. BYRNES, Mrs. CARAWAY, Mr. CHAVEZ, Mr. CLARK, Mr. CONNALLY, Mr. DIETERICH, Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. GLASS, Mr. GREEN, Mr. GUFFEY, Mr. HARRISON, Mr. HATCH, Mr. HERRING, Mr. HOLT, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, Mr. LEE, Mr. LEWIS, Mr. LODGE, Mr. LUNDEEN, Mr. MCADOO, Mr. MCCARRAN, Mr. MCGILL, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. MCNARY, Mr. MINTON, Mr. MURRAY, Mr. NEELY, Mr. O'MAHONEY, Mr. OVERTON, Mr. PEPPER, Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. POPE, Mr. REYNOLDS, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. SCHWARTZ, Mr. SCHWELLENBACH, Mr. SHIPSTEAD, Mr. THOMAS of Utah, Mr. TOWNSEND, Mr. TRUMAN, Mr. VANDENBERG, Mr. WAGNER, Mr. WHEELER, and Mr. WHITE.

Mr. BARKLEY. I now move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, July 16, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

THURSDAY, JULY 15, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou who dost uphold all things by the breath of Thy power, we beseech Thee that our prayer may reach the Father's heart. So manifold are Thy providences that surely goodness and mercy shall follow us all the days of our lives. Thy presence forsakes us never and Thy care is the home of the soul. May we be minstrels of the Most High with our breasts attuned at the source of all melody and all hope. May we serve Thee and our country by loving one another, by exercising patience with one another, and by bearing with one another. Bring to us a divine blessing that shall lead us soul deep in appreciation of our Republic, which gives freedom to the oppressed and where institutions are united to succor our fellow men. In our Savior's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MARY E. HALTIGAN

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 276) from the Committee on Accounts and ask for its immediate consideration.

House Resolution 276

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Mary E. Haltigan, wife of Patrick J. Haltigan, late an employee of the House, an amount equal to 6 months' compensation, and an additional amount, not to exceed $250, to defray funeral expenses of the said Patrick J. Haltigan.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

UNITED STATES COURT FOR CHINA

Mr. MCREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to recommit to the Committee on Foreign Affairs the bill (H. R. 6444) to amend the act of June 30, 1906, entitled "An act creating a United States Court for China and prescribing the jurisdiction thereof", for the purpose of correcting the report and making it in accordance with the facts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT AND WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILLS—CONTINUING RESOLUTION

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7865) making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Federal Government for the last half of the month of July 1937.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand this is a continuing resolution, to carry along appropriations at the rate that appropriations were carried in the 1937 bill, for the maintenance of the departments for which the regular supply bills for 1938 have not been enacted. We passed such a resolution on the 1st of July or the 30th of June that carried it until the middle of July. This resolution carries it through the end of July. Is that correct?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. That is correct. The resolution under which the departments are operating terminates at midnight the 15th, and the proposed resolution carries authority to continue operations until midnight of July 31, or until pending supply bills are enacted.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from New York, the minority leader.

Mr. SNELL. How many general appropriation bills are there which have not yet been passed?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Two of the supply bills have not yet reached enactment—the nonmilitary bill for the War Department and the Interior Department appropriation bill.

Mr. SNELL. And those are all?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Those are all and we hope to get those two through in the next few days.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri for present consideration of the bill.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection. The Chair hears none and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the first half of the month of July 1937, for certain operations of the Federal Government which remain unprovided for on July 1, 1937, through the failure of enactment of the supply bills customarily providing for such operations", approved July 1, 1937, are extended and continued in full force and effect for and during the last half of the month of July 1937: Provided, That notwithstanding section 3 of such act, the amount to be expended out of any appropriation provided by this act for such last half of the month of July 1937 may equal, but shall not exceed, one twenty-fourth of the appropriation available for like purposes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the authority conferred by the continuing resolution passed by the House on June 29 ends at midnight tonight. The expectation was that within the 2 weeks provided by the resolution the remaining supply bills would be enacted. But conditions and events unforeseen and unexpected intervened and two of the bills are still in conference. This resolution merely extends for 2 additional weeks the appropriations for the two departments unprovided for, at the ratio carried by the 1937 bills, to terminate on enactment of the 1938 bills, which we have every reason to believe will be sometime within the coming week.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes after disposition of matters on the Speaker's table and prior to the taking up of the conference report on the Interior Department appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—I dislike very much to object, but this conference report has some controversial matters, and it is going to be very difficult to finish today unless we begin immediately. I remember when the bill was being considered before, we agreed to give way to one and then others asked for time, and I think the RECORD will show that we lost about an hour or an hour and a half getting started.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? I trust the gentleman will not make objection to this request.

Mr. RAYBURN. Well, Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I must object. At least two gentlemen have been to me this morning and asked me if I would consent to their speaking before this conference report was taken up. I told them I would feel obliged to object. They said they would extend their remarks in the RECORD. Of course, I do not like to object to the gentleman from Illinois addressing the House, but under the circumstances I must do so.

Mr. COX. I do not think the gentleman ought to object. The gentleman from Illinois seldom makes a request to address this House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. If the gentleman can assure me that it will only be 10 minutes——

Mr. RAYBURN. Of course, the gentleman from Oklahoma cannot make any agreement.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I realize I cannot make any agreement that would bind anyone else.

Mr. COX. The statement of the gentleman would not be appropriate at any other time. In view of that, I trust the gentleman will not object.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DIRKSEN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mrs. O'DAY and Mr. SABATH asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TEIGAN] may be permitted to extend in the Appendix of the RECORD a speech he made on the radio a few days ago.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a brief statement by World Peaceways, Inc., which has reference to a bill I have introduced in Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Obviously there is not a quorum present.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 108]

The SPEAKER. On this roll call, 357 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, the legislative business for the day, and the previous order heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

JED JOHNSON,
J. G. SCRUGHAM,
JAMES M. FITZPATRICK,
CHAS. H. LEAVY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. McLEAN (interrupting the reading of the conference report). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the report be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WARREN in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I say if the membership of the House will listen to the reading of this conference report they will note that the amendments considered in this report show that the managers on the part of the House of Representatives conceded on practically every point and increased the expenditures materially. I think the House ought to have this information and the only way they can get it is to listen to the report. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. O'NEAL].

Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, because I was a member of the conference committee and did not sign the conference report, and being the only Democrat who did not sign it, I feel I should make a statement relative to the conference report, giving the reasons and the causes why I took the position I did.

It has been a very interesting thing to me to watch the progress of this bill from the time the committee considered it. I would appreciate if the Members of the House would listen to the story I am going to tell in reference to this bill, because I think there are certain lessons and deductions that can be drawn which might be beneficial for the future conduct of business in the House.

Mr. Speaker, the Interior Subcommittee labored for weeks to present to the House a bill which might show an effort to economize in line with the President's message and the crucial, critical condition of our financial affairs. The final result which is presented today as a conference report and recommendation is a travesty, and if understood by the people of America would be taken as a striking example of our incapacity to practice self-restraint where our own sectional benefits are involved. Having an optimistic nature, one ray of hope shows through, and that is the possibility that this Interior conference bill, so outrageous and so contrary to sound business methods, may help to awaken Congress to watch every item in bills coming before it. Perhaps it may, as a horrible example of extravagance and exchange of favors, bring us to a better analysis of why we are more and more in the red. My remarks are not directed at the members of my committee; as the sole Democrat dissenter, I am under suspicion that I may be wrong; but, holding the views that I do, I am unable to be in the more agreeable position of going along with my colleagues.

I would like for the House to hear the story of this bill.

The Bureau of the Budget sent estimates to the committee in the beginning of $120,612,604.85.

Our subcommittee, after great and severe labor, brought the bill to the House for the amount of $115,871,264.85.

In other words, our committee by zealous effort cut off $4,741,340.

And then the House proceeded to undo the long weeks of labor by increasing the bill to the amount of $123,001,304.85. This was $2,388,700 over the Budget, and it increased the bill which the committee presented by $7,130,040.

The committee justly felt that it had wasted weeks of labor. You will recall the larger items which were inserted on the floor of the House, which destroyed the efforts of the committee and made economy seem a mockery. Further, if certain items amounting to a large sum had not gone out on points of order in the House, the increase over the Budget and the bill as presented would have been even larger.

And then the other body took the bill, and added 134 amendments, some involving no money increases, some for small increases and some for large increases, and practically none for reductions. The amendments, if you will read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, in almost every case were presented and adopted without explanation, speeches, arguments, or discussions. There are many interesting sidelights which I cannot discuss, but the sum total of the job of plastering and patching the Interior bill was as follows:

The amount of 1938 bill as passed the Senate was $136,054,879.85.

You will recall that the snowball which the House sent to the Senate was for $123,001,304.85.

So the bill which passed the Senate as quietly and smoothly as a moving shadow was an increase over the House bill of $13,053,575.

Incidentally, in this year of rigid economy, the Interior appropriation bill came from the Senate $11,653,738.39 more than the Interior bill of the year before.

As just stated, the Senate bill was over the House bill $13,053,575.

It is but fair to state that the Bureau of the Budget sent supplemental estimates to the Senate, for such things as the National Bituminous Coal Commission in the amount of $3,851,000, which leaves an actual difference between the House bill and Senate bill of $9,202,575.

And then this Santa Claus affair was sent to conference. Those who conferred for the other body and the States from which they came can be seen in the conference report.

There was great harmony and unanimity among the conferees of the other body. Save for the chairman, hardly anything was said by others, except on two or three items apiece, at which time they were quite firm.

In order not to be too long in commenting on this interesting game of human nature and I will chase you if you will chase me, the conferees agreed upon a bill amounting to $133,298,999.85.

Amount of all Budget estimates was $124,463,604.85;

And the increase in the bill now coming to you out of conference over the Budget estimate is $8,835,395;

And the increase over own overloaded bill is $10,297,695, inclusive of the Bituminous Coal Commission.

Mr. Speaker, I dislike to quote figures, but they are more eloquent and more exact than anything I could say on this subject. There is another set of figures I must mention:

The net amount that our committee caused the Senate to recede in was $2,755,880.

The net amount that the Senate conferees caused the House to recede in was $10,297,695.

Again it is but fair to state that four million should be deducted for the supplemental Budget estimates, which still would leave six million plus that our committee receded from.

And so, Members of the House, here is the conference report before you, $133,298,999.85, which came to you first from our subcommittee in the amount of $115,871,264.85, a difference of $17,427,735.

Through the enthusiastic cooperation of all concerned from the time the bill first reached the House until the prodigal son returned to it, you will hardly recognize it. And so it was with regret that I could not sign the report and that I cannot vote for it now.

In the short time at my command it is impossible to deal with this subject adequately. I would like to discuss my reasons for believing that the conference agreements do not protect the actions and the will of the House. In my opinion, conferees are attorneys in fact to represent the House, and should fight to maintain its position, compromising only where there is no other solution. The House committees have extensive hearings and studiously arrive at a figure which they believe to be fair to the department presenting it and fair to the taxpayer. The bill leaves the House and the department calls a Member of the other body and states that his department needs the original amount. The conferees meet, and on almost every item the department secures, by way of compromise, an additional sum over the House figure. In my opinion, the conferees should not feel that every item should be adopted, but an effort should be made to retain the amount arrived at after hard study, and reason should govern.

Moreover, there are in this bill, and most bills, items which have not been studied by any committee, and are only the personal wishes of some influential man. Occasionally there might be a situation where some circumstance has prevented the presentation of a matter by hearings to the House or to the Budget, but that is rarely the case. I am unwilling to vote for any amendment, not classed as an emergency, which could have been presented to the Bureau of the Budget or to the proper committee of the House for study and was not so presented. This bill includes several items which were not presented to the Budget and the House committee, and which could have been. In my opinion the House conferees should not have agreed to them and the House should not now agree to them. We should demand good business methods and a fair time to study each proposed expenditure.

One thing more: Every project should be fairly and frankly presented to this House for authorization. If it cannot pass on its merits it should not come through an appropriation bill. A small start by way of an appropriation sometimes seems so innocent, but it often results in an involvement of millions of dollars.

In conclusion, there are several amendments which must come to you for action. I trust that in the interest of the proper conduct of business, orderly procedure, and the integrity of the House you will not vote to recede and concur.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. Is it not true there are 29 amendments in disagreement in this conference report, each and every one of which would have been subject to a point of order if they had been presented in the House, because they were legislation on an appropriation bill not authorized by law?

Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky. There are several such, the exact number I do not remember.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 12 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK].

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I dislike very much to have to disagree with my friend the gentleman from Kentucky, but I feel the conference report as brought in here is fair and just. Let us take some of the figures.

The Department of the Interior made a request for $193,479,983.85. That was the total of its request. The Budget recommended $124,463,604.85. The subcommittee recommended to the House $115,871,264.85, some seven or eight million dollars less than the Budget estimate.

What happened on the floor of the House? You voted for $11,400,000 above the Budget estimate for vocational training. Assuming the House had not approved that item, we would now be under the Budget estimate by four or five million dollars. You can therefore see this increase in the Budget was made by the Members of the House.

Later on we passed the coal bill, which increased the appropriation $3,900,000. Now they find fault because a bill comes in here with appropriations involving $133,298,999.85. Mr. Speaker, last Friday in less than 30 minutes we passed a bill authorizing $50,000,000 for the Navy without a word of protest from any of the economists who are now against this appropriation. They are going to make their fight on three or four recommendations of the conferees. One involves the Gila project and the other the Colorado River project.

I attended all the meetings of the subcommittee which considered the Interior Department appropriation bill. I was greatly impressed by the Members of the House from the various States when they came in and asked for appropriations for reclamation projects. It brought back to me a trip I made through that part of the country in 1931. I, with my family, traveled through that section, not at the expense of the Government, not on a junket, and not entertained by chambers of commerce or other organizations, but at my own expense. I will never forget traveling through the San Joaquin Valley in California in an observation car and seeing thousands of acres being burned up and beautiful homes vacant. I asked passengers on the train and the railroad men what was the cause of this condition. They said, "Water. If those people had water, they could work their farms and make a living."

I was so impressed by this condition at the time that when our hearings took place I asked many questions of the witnesses that appeared before the committee on reclamation projects. When the Gila project was brought up I asked the gentleman representing the Bureau of Reclamation if what would be produced on the new acreage would come in competition with other farm products throughout the country. He said nothing of which we had a surplus would be produced there, such as grain, corn, or cotton; but that these acres would produce fruits during a season when we could not get them in the North, East, or Northwest. I was impressed by this statement, and for that reason supported the Gila project in Arizona. The provision covering this project was knocked out in the House by a point of order as a result of objections by Members from the five upper States. Today these Members are not opposed to the project because provision is made to take care of the five upper States.

There is also in the bill an appropriation for the Colorado project. I visited that State in 1931. I realized what was taking place on the east side of the Rockies due to the lack of water. For years they have been trying to get relief on the east side of the Rockies, but because of a fight within the delegation they could never get together. Now the Members from the west side of the Rockies are united with the Members from the east side of the Rockies in an effort to give the latter this water. On the east side of the Rockies there are 175,000 farmers crying for water, for which they are willing to pay. The cost is not paid by the taxpayers, because the money comes out of the reclamation fund.

Only last night a Member of the House said to me, "Jim, I think they are deserving of this project, but it will destroy that beautiful park." What a false impression, to think that digging an 8- or 9-foot tunnel from 800 to 4,000 feet below the surface would harm the trees on the surface! Nevertheless, you and I are receiving letters from people throughout the country asking us to vote against the Colorado project because it may destroy some of the trees. The thing is ridiculous. This man said, "The water would seep down." Mr. Speaker, under the East and the North Rivers in our great city of New York we have tunnels, and the water is not seeping down. It will not seep down from the Rockies if we bring this water in to take care of 175,000 farmers.

I, from an eastern section of our country, am 100 percent behind these reclamation projects for which the people themselves are paying, as long as they bring relief to the farmers in those districts. [Applause.]

They talk about economy. Any man who votes against this reclamation project because of a desire for economy is following a false trail, because there is no economy in it. If the farmers out in those States are prosperous, we in the East and in the North will benefit by it. Why should we not go along with these men and give them the relief they need—water? I am speaking from my experience in traveling through these States. For that reason I am here today pleading with you not to follow the men who last week voted without a word for an expenditure of $50,000,000 but who are today going to oppose the spending of $900,000 and $1,125,000 in order to bring water to the distressed farmers of our country.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Does the gentleman state the cost of the Big Thompson project is a charge on the reclamation fund?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes; $20,000,000. We may go into the power business, but $20,000,000 will be charged to the reclamation fund. The same thing is true of the Arizona project, that the cost will be charged to the reclamation fund.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Had the gentleman ever heard of the Big Thompson project before he went into conference with the Senate conferees?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes; it has been discussed in this House for years. I have heard our good friend the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] discuss it. He had been opposed to it, but now he is in favor of it, as any Member of Congress from that part of the country should be.

Mr. RICH. Was the project ever authorized in any way by Congress?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No; except that hearings were held on it in the Senate, and the Senate committee reported it unanimously.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I yield.

Mr. DUNN. Did I correctly understand the gentleman to say the Colorado project will benefit about 175,000 farmers?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. One hundred and seventy-five thousand farmers on the east side of the Rockies.

Mr. DUNN. Then I am for the bill.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not blame the gentleman.

Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I yield.

Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky. The gentleman fails to mention the fact the Big Thompson project was not only discussed here but was defeated when the appropriation bill which contained that provision was under consideration.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I was not on the committee last year and do not know whether this bill was discussed or not, but I understand it was.

Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky. The project came up in the conference report last year. Chairman Buchanan made a fight against it and the House turned it down.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Why?

Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky. For the same reason, I hope, the House is going to turn it down this year.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. This is like the fight that was made on the Central Valley project.

A man appeared before our committee and tried to get some of the southerners to go along because they were raising cotton. I brought out from this man the fact that the reason they were raising cotton in southern California was because they could not get sufficient water to raise anything on the land except cotton, and if they had sufficient water they would not produce cotton but would produce citrus fruits.

For the reasons I have just stated, I am supporting these items in the bill.

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I yield.

Mr. HILL of Washington. Was not the Colorado project defeated last year because of division between those in the eastern and western parts of Colorado?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I stated that was the reason the bill was not passed years ago, but today they are united, and our good friend the chairman of the Appropriations Committee [Mr. TAYLOR] is in favor of this project.

Mr. SWOPE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I yield.

Mr. SWOPE. I understood the gentleman to say that this money is to come from the reclamation fund. Does the reclamation fund have this amount of money in it now?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. They have for this year around $11,000,000, and the two projects only call for the spending of a little more than $2,000,000 this year.

Mr. SWOPE. But the ultimate cost of the two projects will be $25,000,000 and $19,000,000, or $44,000,000 in all.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There will be sufficient money in the funds when the project is completed to meet the $44,000,000. In conclusion, I am going to ask the Members of the House to listen to the arguments made here today and not to pay any attention to the lobbyists receiving salaries from organizations who are going around here asking us to save the trees and destroy the farms. Let us protect and save the farms in preference to the trees, that are not in any danger. [Applause.]

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the statement made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. O'NEAL]. He is a statesman. I want to call the attention of the House to the statement on the first page of the conference report on the Interior Department appropriation bill for 1938, which says, "having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend", and so forth. After full and free conference!

I first should call your attention to the fact that this conference report is signed by four members of the House committee, three members of the House committee refusing to sign the report.

When we were placed on this committee by the Speaker of the House we only had one object in view, and that was to try to do what was for the best interests of the Interior Department and for the best interests of the country. Personally—and I feel that I speak for the other members of the committee—we had no object in view of any kind except to meet the needs of the Interior Department. I want to help the Interior Department; but I may say to the Members of the House that we spent over 1 month up in a room in a corner of this Capitol Building, working diligently practically every day for hours, going over the various items that were in the bill as it was reported to you by the committee. We listened to the people who came there to tell us why they needed this particular money in the conduct of the affairs of the Interior Department. Here are the hearings—over 1,700 pages—that we had printed; but after we had held our hearings the chairman of the committee, time after time, told us we could not put into print all the hearings that had been conducted in that room, so we deleted all we possibly could. If we had not done that we would have had a book, I venture to say, twice as large as the one I have before you. The Senate held hearings for a few days, and here are the complete hearings of the Senate—470 pages.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. RICH. Let me make my statement, and then I shall yield.

What happened? If you will look over this report you will see that the Senate has receded on 27 items, the House has receded on 50 items, and the House has a compromise on 28 items.

We met in our committee on the 1st of July, after we had a conference with our full subcommittee. We decided we would meet in our committee room on the 1st of July at 9 o'clock in the morning, which we did. For 1 hour we discussed the procedure we would follow on the conference. We met the Senate in joint session at 10 o'clock that day and were in session from 10 o'clock on for the balance of the morning. In a few moments we decided to get down to the bill and very little conference was had with respect to what the procedure would be. We decided we would wait until we saw what the conference with the Senate would amount to. We discussed the various items and went back into session at 1:30 and by 6:30 the majority members of the House and Senate committee railroaded this bill through conference. If anyone says we had a full and free discussion of the bill, then I do not know what the term means, because I can tell you that time after time we tried to get recognition, but all they did was to railroad this bill right through the conference.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Just a moment, until I give you a few more statements. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK] knows very well that we are not here trying to make statements that are not founded on facts. If we had been given time, I certainly would not be here trying to get Members of this House to realize that we did not have a full and free discussion, but this bill has been railroaded through the conference committee, with very little discussion. We had very little discussion on the items that we would like to have had discussion on. Many times Members of the House conferees tried to get up and ask for recognition, but the chairman of the committee, for some reason or other, seemed to side in with the Members of the Senate, and they were practically a unit, and they said O. K., and we could hardly get a vote on some questions. I could tell you many other things that happened in this committee, but I do not want to take any individual to task, I may have a different opinion than other Members and they have a right to their own opinion, but I must be convinced before I will agree to a project that costs the Government a lot of money, it must be a worthy project.

I call attention now to some of the items in this conference report. The Bituminous Commission is set up with $3,921,000. Nothing had ever been discussed in the House committee in respect to any request for this money.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is it not a fact that that bill was passed after the committee had been appointed and it could not consider it?

Mr. RICH. I say we did not even consider it. Not in conference fully as it should have been.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is it not a fact also that the hearings in the House were over and that the Senate members of this committee went over the House hearings and picked out that part they thought should be amended, and they yielded in over 90 percent on what we passed in the House?

Mr. RICH. The gentleman knows when they establish a commission they always try to ask for as much money as they can possibly get, and when they asked for $3,920,000 we believed they asked for too much money to start out with this commission, because we will be in session here in January and if they need additional funds before they set up an elaborate body for the conduct of the commission, we could then grant them an additional fund, and we believed that would be a part of wisdom, especially after the President of the United States says he wants economy. We do not, as legislators, use good, sound judgment in granting such exhorbitant expenditures in this set-up.

In this connection I just cannot help calling attention to the statement of the Treasury of July 9 of this year, beginning July 1, 1937. You say we are going to have economy. What is the result? In the first 9 days of this new year we spent $40,000,000 more than we spent in the first 9 days of last year, and yet we talk about economy with a national debt of $36,544,661,686.37. You gentlemen know the amount of money that we went in the red last year—over $3,000,000,000.

This committee worked hard to cut this bill down, and to think that we went over into the Senate, and let them railroad it through and put many of these increases in this bill, many that we did not have time to discuss. They are new projects that were put into the bill by the Senate and members of the House committee did not know about before we went into conference. Take item no. 14. That was increased $50,000; item no. 17, for the survey of public lands, was increased—let us see how much. We put $675,000 down, and we thought that that was a lot of money for surveying public lands. The Senate increased that to a million dollars, and the Members of the House who signed the report agreed to it—$325,000 more than it should have been, in my judgment. No. 42 is new language, and it gives the Indians the privilege of employing attorneys. Although we have in the Interior Department and the Indian Bureau attorneys, these Indians can go out themselves and employ lawyers to fight the lawyers the Federal Government has in trying to handle the affairs of the Inidians. No. 47 is a new project, requiring $51,270, that we knew nothing about. No. 48 is a new project requiring $200,000; 49 is a new project, requiring $50,000; 50 is a new project requiring $100,000; 52 is a new project requiring $60,000; 58, a new project increasing the amount to $55,000 over what was considered by the House; 61, a new project increasing it $90,000; 64 is a new project increasing $80,000; and 75 is a new project increasing $10,000. Item 77 increases the money for roads in the Indian Bureau from $2,700,000 to $3,000,000. Item 78 is new language in the bill, $30,000; 79 is new language, $21,000; 80 is new language, $30,000; and 81 requires $75,000. These items 78, 79, 80, 81 are nothing but salve for the Senators with which to salve their representatives, and vice versa. Eighty-one is new language, $75,000; 83, new language, $30,000; 84, new language, $62,350; 121, $16,500; 122, $22,000; 129, $176,000. Your committee carried on and tried to work for economy. See what the Senate did to us. We went over there, and the conference was railroaded through in 6 hours. We figured it would require at least 2 days. I say that it is mighty discouraging to the men you have in the House who try their best to do a good job in keeping down the request for funds from these departments. It is disheartening. It is a shame that all of our hard work is thrown overboard and all the money we tried to save is now being spent in this conference report.

I hope that when we reach some of these items in the bill later in the day you will give the matter very careful consideration. The Big Thompson project in Colorado has never been approved by this Congress. It was never presented to a House committee. You will be asked to appropriate $900,000 to start that project. It will require $44,000,000 before it is completed. There are items in the bill that will require twice as much as the bill itself before they can be completed. You Members should be very careful and very cautious in starting these projects that will involve the expenditure of millions of dollars later on and which will be a boomerang to this Government. I hope the chairman of the committee will give time to consider these amendments and you will have an opportunity to vote on them.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the cost of the Big Thompson project come out of the reclamation fund?

Mr. RICH. No. It is not so stated in the bill.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Oh, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I call attention to the language on page 85, lines 16–23, of the bill itself. This language, which introduces a number of reclamation projects, among them the Colorado-Big Thompson project, is as follows:

> Construction: For continuation of construction of the following projects in not to exceed the following amounts, respectively, to be expended from the reclamation fund under the same general conditions and in the same manner and for the same objects of expenditure as specified for projects hereinbefore in this act under the caption "Bureau of Reclamation", and to be reimbursable under the reclamation law.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania, who has so carefully studied this bill, ought to know what language the bill contains.

Mr. RICH. Study the bill. We have not had a chance to study the bill. It came into the conference report. We never saw it before that time. We never knew anything about it. That was an agreement made by the gentleman from Colorado on the Gila project and the Big Thompson project, and those fellows from Colorado and New Mexico recently made a compact or agreement to get both projects through in this bill, and Mr. LEWIS is the gentleman who knocked the Gila project out on a point of order. Now they have got together and they want to jam it down our throats. [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON].

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will do the unusual thing by defeating the general conference report. I think we ought to make an example of this proposition and defeat this conference report and send it back. Before we went into conference I announced one day on the floor that the Senate had put on 134 amendments. When I went over there, after 2 days here, they took me to task for what I put into the RECORD about their having had only 10 hours of hearings. Another Senator spoke up and said, "Why, I did not suppose we had had that much." We had had 30 days' hearings on these matters. We know that they did not actually have over 10 hours' hearings.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. I yield.

Mr. BIERMANN. And after you had those extensive hearings you brought in a bill carrying $115,000,000 and the House increased it to $123,000,000, and now the conference report comes back increasing it to $133,000,000. As the gentleman says, we ought to defeat the conference report.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. I think we should defeat the conference report. I have real affection for these four men who signed the conference report. I like them. I have served with them. The House committee met for over 2 days to consider what their position would be when we reached the Senate. It was unfortunate that our chairman during most of that time was attending a Democratic steering committee meeting and was not in on our decision very much. So when he went to the Senate to lead us——

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is it not a fact that the chairman of the subcommittee stood by what the committee had agreed on?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Yes; but the gentleman did not let me finish. I agreed to that, but when we got to the Senate the chairman of the subcommittee was not thoroughly informed on what the committee had decided to do, and he did not stand up on his hind legs and fight. That is what he did not do before that Senate committee.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. How many of these amendments were corrective amendments, just to correct totals?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Only a few of them.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Does not the gentleman think the Senate should have something to say on an appropriation bill?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. The Senate has everything to say. That is why we want to send this back. I hope the gentleman will let me make my speech.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We do not want to simply send it over there and let them take a rubber stamp and stamp it.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. The Senate has this habit. They are commendable on a lot of things, but they have a habit of increasing every House item that any Senator asks for. That is senatorial courtesy on an appropriation bill—to put in the bill what any Senator asks for. They increased practically every item. I am complaining about it because we agreed to let them have their way on about four-fifths of them. Now, the point is, shall we stand for this sort of thing? We should not do it. One Senator said to us, "Why, it is only $133,000,000. Look at the Army and Navy bills."

I find there are three types of men on the appropriations committees. There is the type of man who wants to save; there is another type of man who gets on the committee because he has some purpose to serve, who thinks that that is the chance to get some money; and there is a third type of man who thinks that is a good way to distribute the wealth of the Nation.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Not for the moment.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The gentleman made an assertion there.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Yes; I did.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I live in an eastern district and, therefore, have nothing to gain. Did not the gentleman vote for over $11,400,000 in excess of the Budget recommendation?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. No; I did not; I was not here.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Well, the gentleman would have voted for it.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Oh, I would not. I tried to amend the bill both in the subcommittee and in the whole committee. I pointed out how they could save $4,000,000 if they would make the item for vocational education $10,000,000. I offered such an amendment both in the subcommittee and in the whole committee, but was defeated each time. I was not here to vote on the passage of the bill.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. But the gentleman would have voted for it.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. No; I would not. I would have offered an amendment as before.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Is my understanding correct that the gentleman is an advocate of economy?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. I try to be. I am not here to serve my district or State in a selfish way.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Did the gentleman vote to override the President's recent veto?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Yes; in the interest of economy.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. But that will cost the Government something like $40,000,000 a year.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. It was in the interest of Colorado farmers, as all others, to keep them off relief.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. That is all right?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. That is all right. Why, we could save that whole extra expense out of the St. Louis-Jefferson Memorial alone. [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I had not intended saying a word on this report, but since my genial friend the distinguished gentleman from Kansas criticized the report and the personnel of the conference committee, and criticizes the acting chairman of the committee, and charges me with spending some time at a Democratic steering committee meeting during a part of these hearings, I think I should make a brief statement.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for just a word?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. In just a minute.

It is true that I happen to be chairman of the Democratic steering committee of the House. It is not a Democratic caucus by any means. I was away only twice in the 5 weeks of the hearings on the pending bill. I excused myself and turned the hearings over to the next ranking member to attend, for a few minutes, meetings of the House steering committee, before which some very important legislative matters were being considered, one being the farm-tenant bill. It will be recalled that it was at a steering committee meeting we got Chairman JONES and Chairman BANKHEAD together, both of whom had farm-tenant bills pending, and it was in our committee that agreement was reached that a farm-tenant bill would actually be passed during the present session of Congress. Certainly I shall not apologize to the gentleman from Kansas or anyone else for the humble part I played in getting action on the farm-tenant bill or for attending briefly two meetings of the steering committee while the other Members of the House considered some items of the Interior bill.

It has been charged here today, as usual, that the House Members of the conference committee surrendered everything to the Senate. The distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. O'NEAL], for whom I also hold a high regard, made a very excellent speech in opposition to the adoption of the report. But if I did not misunderstand him, he stated that the House had receded on practically every amendment. The fact is that the Senate receded on 27 amendments and that the House receded on 25 other amendments with amendments. This means that the Senate receded outright on 27 amendments and receded in part on 25 amendments. This makes a total of 52 amendments on which the Senate actually receded in whole or in part.

I may say to the gentleman that the bill was not altogether satisfactory to me when it left the House. I will go further and say it is not as satisfactory to me now as it was when it left the House. I think, however, that I used every possible effort to get the Senate to go along with us on all those amendments where it was possible to do so, but we must recognize that there is another body at the other end of this Capitol. It is my judgment that the Members of the House conferees brought in the very best report it was humanly possible to bring to this body under the circumstances.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. RICH. I know that the gentleman wants to be correct in his statements.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Absolutely.

Mr. RICH. The Senate receded on 27 amendments.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is correct, and the Senate receded on 25 other amendments in part. That was my statement, and I stand by it. This makes a total of 52 amendments on which the Senate receded in whole or in part. Is not that correct? The House receded on 50 amendments.

Mr. RICH. That is right.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Certainly that is correct, and that was my original statement.

Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky. If the Speaker please, I made no comment on the number of amendments on which we receded, but I did make the statement that the House receded on over $10,297,000 and that the Senate receded on $2,755,000. Of that amount, in all fairness, $4,000,000 was for supplemental estimates, leaving a total recession on the part of the House of $6,000,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is a correct statement. It is also true that there were many supplemental estimates which went over to the Senate after the bill was considered by the House. Those supplemental estimates are responsible for a number of these amendments upon which we are to vote today.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from New York, a member of the committee.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is it not the fact the amendments added by the Senate were added upon the recommendation of Senators who were elected by the people, while the amendments of the House, carrying some $11,000,000, were put on there by lobbyists sitting up here in the gallery? I prefer the elected officials at any time for increases in appropriations in preference to lobbyists.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Of course, that is a matter of opinion. Personally, I feel the appropriation for vocational education was one of the best appropriations made by the House. We are not of the same opinion, of course, with reference to many of these amendments. I am not apologizing for a single amendment in this report. It is the best report the managers were able to bring in under the circumstances.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman have any information as to the amount the original Bituminous Coal Commission spent last year?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I do not believe the committee had that information, but as the gentleman well knows, the estimate of the Budget went over to the Senate after the House had passed the Interior Department appropriation bill; therefore the House had no opportunity to pass on that matter when the bill was pending before the House.

Mr. TABER. I appreciate that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The Commission asked for $5,000,000 and got $3,600,000.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. I want to make it clear to the chairman that I tried to be fair. I want to say he was a faithful chairman all the way through the hearings. I said that during the 2 days we were digesting the thing and coming to a conclusion, the most important 2 days of the year, he was attending part of the time this Democratic steering committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Frankly I am somewhat amazed at the statement of the gentleman from Kansas. If I desired to do so, I might point out that if I had missed as many of the hearings as did the distinguished gentleman from Kansas, I would be the last man to criticize or attempt to scold someone upon the floor of the House. The record speaks for itself. It is a fact that the Democratic steering committee meets every Tuesday afternoon at 2:30, and I am very proud to be chairman of that very important committee. It is not a Democratic caucus, as the gentleman appears to think. The House steering committee considers pending and proposed legislation before the Congress. It is true that two afternoons, and two only in the 5 weeks of our hearings, I attended steering committee meetings for possibly an hour each time. Of course, I made a mistake. I should have asked the gentleman from Kansas for his permission to leave.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. We were meeting at that time, and it is just a question whether the chairman considered the Democratic steering committee more important than the deliberations of the committee on the Interior Department appropriation bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Of course, there are matters of grave importance that are discussed by the steering committee, but what in the world does that have to do with the issues involved in this bill? Personally I have the highest regard for the gentleman from Kansas, and am not interested in how many of his Republican Party caucuses he may or may not attend.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. May I ask of you, Mr. TABER, if it has not been your observation that the Senators invariably practice this thing of increasing appropriations over the House? Then they claim all the patronage because of the increases they have put in the bill; is that not so? Have not you Democratic Members of the House found out that the Democratic Senators claim the benefit of all the patronage? Yes; you do.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield further.

I call attention to the fact that as a result of the operation of this conference report which we are going to vote on in a moment, the appropriation bill as passed by the House has been increased in 52 cases to the extent of $6,618,000, and reduced in two cases to the extent of $12,500.

Is that not commentary enough upon the conference report? It seems to me we ought to vote it down and not swallow all of these big increases. All along the line increases seem to be in order, but we are never going to make progress toward balancing the Budget unless we begin cutting down. I hope, therefore, the House will reject the conference report.

There are a great number of amendments in disagreement, and the vote on the conference report has nothing whatever to do with the amendments in disagreement. Those amendments will come up separately and will be discussed separately. This thing involves just the differences in amount of various authorized projects. The projects that are not authorized by law will come up separately.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will vote down the increases that the Senate has put in this appropriation bill, to which the conferees have agreed, so that we may get somewhere toward stopping this continual rise in governmental expenditures. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this particular moment because in connection with the general debate that has taken place with reference to economy I have a little something I desire to put in the RECORD. I appeal to you to read it.

It will be recalled that in the first part of the session I offered seven resolutions to investigate seven different trips to Europe—sometimes they are called junkets. You will recall that all those resolutions were immediately tabled and I was told that I should have been satisfied with the brief letters received by the committees from the particular departments involved. However, I pursued the investigation of some of those matters and have some information that may be of interest to the House.

The cooperative marketing cruise, headed by one Jacob Baker, is most interesting. Mr. Baker was formerly with the W. P. A., but you will recall that he is now with John L. Lewis. His past record of activities are interesting and will lead you to believe that he has at last found his proper sphere. The Comptroller General has finally considered the expense involved on the trip and reported to me. I will place the report in the RECORD, showing the illegality in the use of these funds. I understand the trip was financed at the request of the President of the United States in spite of the act of Congress limiting relief expenditures to be made only within the borders of the United States and its possessions.

We thank the Comptroller General and I urge you to read this report, because it may have taken a little courage at this time to make the decision. The Comptroller General has determined that these funds were earmarked and could have been spent only within the United States, as Congress itself had decreed. He is now calling upon the individuals who made the trip to make good the money they individually spent. In the RECORD you will find the letter stating their defense of the expenditure.

I rise at this point in order that you may know we do not give up investigations immediately, although it is with very great difficulty that you can pry any information of real value from any department of the Government relating to such activities. May we continue to keep and avail ourselves of the office of Comptroller General! [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the letter to which I have referred is as follows:

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, June 14, 1937.

PRESIDENT, FEDERAL SURPLUS COMMODITIES CORPORATION,
1901 D Street NW., Washington, D. C.

SIR: Your letter of June 3, 1937, is as follows:

"Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of April 1, 1937 (file A-84565) in connection with the direct settlement of vouchers covering claims for travel and other expenses during the period June 30 to September 22, 1936, by various individuals traveling to Great Britain and continental Europe 'for the purpose of making studies of cooperative enterprises in Europe as such enterprises affect the expansion of markets and the increase and improvement of the distribution of agricultural and other commodities and the products thereof', making inquiry as to the following matters: First, an explanation as to whether due consideration was given to the statutory restriction contained in section 2 of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 (49 Stat. 117), which limits the expenditure of funds appropriated therein for use only in the United States and its Territories and possessions; second, an explanation as to how the travel in anywise accomplished the purpose and policy of the Corporation; and third, the authority for using the funds in question to pay losses due to unfavorable rates of exchange.

"The first inquiry appears to assume that funds now on deposit to the credit of the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation consist of funds either appropriated to the Corporation from the Emergency Relief Act of 1935 or appropriated to the Federal Emergency Relief Administration by that act and subsequently granted to the Corporation by the Federal Emergency Relief Administration. The Corporation has never received any appropriations from Congress, nor has it received any grants from the Federal Emergency Relief Administration. The only Federal Emergency Relief Administration funds which have eventually found their way into the treasury of the Corporation consist of funds granted by the States to the Corporation, and of these none were initially 1935 funds.

"Until November 16, 1935, when the control of the Corporation was transferred to the Department of Agriculture, the Corporation was financed exclusively by funds granted and assigned to the Corporation by the Governors of the several States and all of the Territories except Hawaii.

"Concerning the second point in your letter, namely, the connection between an inquiry into the methods of marketing cooperatives and the functions of the Corporation, there was quoted in your letter an excerpt from the United States Government Manual, which emphasized the principal activity of the Corporation as being the distribution of surplus agricultural commodities to State relief agencies. This is true as a generalization but is not descriptive of all of the functions of the Corporation.

"Prior to November 16, 1935, when the Corporation was under the control of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, its policies were determined by relief consideration and it procured certain commodities which were not of agricultural origin. For instance, in the winter of 1933-34 it made distribution of 1,133,890 tons of coal and coke.

"However, with the transfer of control to the Department of Agriculture, the emphasis was shifted from relief to agricultural considerations, and the Corporation has been considered to have authority to engage in any operation consistent with the policies of the Department of Agriculture and not inconsistent with its own charter powers.

"Ever since the passage of section 32 of Public, No. 320, as amended, the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation has cooperated closely with the Department of Agriculture in connection with the distribution of agricultural commodities procured by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration pursuant to said act. The charter powers of the Corporation which permit such cooperation are contained in the third article of the certificate of incorporation, which provides as follows:

"'3. The nature of the business and objects or purposes to be transacted, promoted, or carried on by this Corporation are:

"'(a) To relieve the existing national economic emergency by expansion of markets for, removal of, and increasing and improving the distribution of, agricultural and other commodities and products thereof.

* * * * * * *

"'(g) To cooperate with any private, public, or governmental agency or agencies;

* * * * * * *

"'(j) To enter into and encourage farmers, producers, and others to enter into marketing plans and agreements and to cooperate in any plan which provides for reduction in the acreage or reduction in the production for market of agricultural commodities; * * *.'

"Copies of the Corporation's charter and bylaws are on file in your office.

"The purpose of section 32 of Public, No. 320, Seventy-fourth Congress, as amended, is to relieve agricultural marketing situations by encouraging the exportation and the domestic consumption of agricultural commodities and products thereof. An inquiry into the methods of cooperative enterprises as they relate to the distribution of agricultural and other commodities and products was considered to be pertinent to certain agricultural and marketing problems. At the cost of financing such an inquiry by the Corporation did not appear to contravene any provisions of existing law, the advisability of having such an inquiry made was considered to be a matter within the field of administrative discretion.

"The third point in your letter for consideration is the authority for paying exchange losses sustained by employees on travel status in foreign countries. The act of March 26, 1934 (48 Stat. 466), which was referred to in your letter, authorizes appropriations to meet losses sustained by employees of the United States due to appreciation of foreign currencies in their relation to the American dollar, but said act does not authorize payment of any such losses. The authority for such payments is to be found in Amendment of Executive Order No. 6657-A of March 27, 1934, as amended, dated December 24, 1934. Section 2 of this Executive order reads as follows:

"'The purpose of these regulations is to provide for reimbursement to officers, enlisted men, and employees of the United States (hereinafter referred to as employees) for losses sustained from appreciation of foreign currencies in their relation to the American dollar, as authorized under the aforesaid act.'

"The fact that this Corporation never received any appropriation under the act of March 26, 1934 (48 Stat. 466), is not considered to preclude it from reimbursing employees for exchange losses pursuant to the Executive order cited above.

"Although the administrative expenses of this Corporation come under the supervision of the Bureau of the Budget by virtue of Executive Order No. 7126, as amended by Executive Order No. 7150, and appear regularly in the Budget of the United States, Congress never has appropriated any funds for this Corporation. Hence, if it is held that the Corporation may pay exchange losses only out of appropriated funds, there would appear to be no authority for payment of salaries and other administrative expense items, for the reason that the Corporation never has had an appropriation to meet administrative expenses.

"It is hoped that, in the light of this additional clarifying information, you will find that careful consideration was given to the propriety of the use of the funds of the Corporation to accomplish the purposes of the Corporation and to the payment of exchange losses suffered by employees on travel status in foreign countries."

Executive Order 7126 of August 5, 1935, as amended by Executive Order 7150 of August 19, 1935, required your Corporation to submit to the Bureau of the Budget estimates for administrative expenses. Based on such estimates, the Budget, 1937 (p. 46), discloses the source of your funds as follows:

Source of funds	Estimate, 1936	Actual, 1935
Transfers from States (through Federal Emergency Relief Administration):
1934 obligated for 1935, regular relief		−$7,351,785
Allotments received in 1935:
Regular relief	−$1,041,780	−45,501,000
Drought relief		−40,300,000
1935 allotment available in 1936, regular relief	−18,010,856	+18,010,856

While the funds in the special deposit account, Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, were not appropriated directly to your Corporation, they nevertheless were initially federally appropriated funds and were granted to the various States for specific purposes of relief. In turning such funds over to your Corporation the States did not and could not enlarge the purposes for which they were originally granted. Obviously, their use for conducting investigations or studies in Europe which, if authorized, would otherwise have been chargeable to appropriations of the Department of Agriculture, or the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, is not applying such funds to the relief purposes for which they were granted to the States. It is not a question of what powers may be exercised under your charter, but a question of the proper use of funds which, when made available to your Corporation, were impressed with a definite trust. Section 32 of the act of August 24, 1935 (49 Stat. 774), as amended, referred to in your submission, which provides funds for use by the Secretary of Agriculture for certain purposes, did not confer any additional authority upon your Corporation nor authorize the use of its funds for the purposes of that section.

In view of the foregoing, no part of the amounts claimed by the 10 employees was properly chargeable to the special-deposit account of your Corporation, and insofar as the settlements authorized the payment to the claimants of portions of the amounts claimed, the settlements were in error and will be revised and charges raised against the respective employees for the amounts paid thereunder.

In view of the foregoing, it is not necessary at this time to pass upon the questions of exchange loss or the allowance of per diem while on board ship when not provided in the travel orders.

Respectfully,

R. N. ELLIOTT,
Acting Comptroller General of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RICH) there were—ayes 67, noes 52.

So the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in my remarks the letter to which I referred.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 5: Page 8, at the beginning of line 1, insert the following: "Furniture, furnishings, and equipment, new Interior Department Building: The provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5) shall not apply to any expenditure authorized under this head in the First Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1936 (49 Stat., p. 1619), when the aggregate amount involved is less than $300."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment, and yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS].

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, it is with the utmost modesty I confidently assert that I know the peak and issue of the constitutional story which is now being told to the American people through the medium of debate in the American Congress.

When conviction battles loyalty upon deep-seated and far-reaching human problems men's souls are always tried, but invariably conviction becomes the victor. To really know something through years of teaching and environment is to believe, and, Mr. Speaker, if we really believe enough in something fundamental and have the courage of our convictions, there is none who shall tell another what he shall do.

And so, as time augments the future records of this great Republic, those living Americans who have convictions upon the true independence of our three branches of government will read the able address of the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee of this House and even at that late hour rise up and call him blessed. In his firmness there is an element of hope. There were none who could tell Judge SUMNERS what to do. Silent through many days of rancor and bitterness, this stalwart citizen steps to the forefront of the American stage and becomes one of its greatest actors in a combination of drama and tragedy, the result of which no man can foretell at this hour. With an allegiance to fundamental principles of American government, this brilliant lawyer and statesman advises the people of a mighty nation that all his legislative wealth is wrapped in one high and noble purpose. His entire speech is worthy of the most serious consideration by every American who is interested in the great cause before us. He speaks like the philosopher under whom I have been tutored throughout my life. It was with the deepest feeling for the future of free and independent America that he said that "the problems of this hour challenge us to produce the most united people and the most capable people who ever assumed the responsibility of government on the face of this earth." Mr. Speaker, these are words of warning and wisdom, and, while my love of life has never permitted me to look upon the dark side of things, yet I sadly confess that I must concur in that prophetic utterance.

From a heart chiseled with sincerity and with the utmost candor, I ask why all of this is necessary. Is there a single Democrat in this historic hall who believes that a continuation of this fight will accomplish a single constructive thing? Ah, but, my distinguished colleagues, it is full of destruction. Mr. Speaker, unless those in power call a halt to this useless, selfish, and futile gesture I here and now predict that the evil path of this so-called progressive action may ultimately shatter the very foundations of American liberty and life. [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, if the admonition of the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] is not followed the Democratic Party will be split in twain and probably destroyed. It will be the beginning of the end of real constitutional government in this Nation. It will further impair and destroy the lives of great men that a free nation cannot afford to lose. Mr. Speaker, as our devoted and lovable chaplain said yesterday, I, too, pause here on the alter of prayer, praying that somebody somewhere will call a halt. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 8: Page 9, after line 6, insert the following:

"GEORGE ROGERS CLARK SESQUICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

"The George Rogers Clark Sesquicentennial Commission created by the joint resolution approved May 23, 1928, as amended, shall cease and terminate June 30, 1938, and the unexpended balances of the appropriations heretofore made for carrying out the purposes of such joint resolution, as amended, shall be available until June 30, 1938."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. May I say in connection with this amendment that the Commission has an unexpended balance of $26,913, and wants an extension of time for 1 year. I am in hopes the chairman of the committee or someone will notify this Commission we will not continue it any longer at the expiration of the time in the bill. This question has been brought up here for 3 or 4 years now, and it is time the Commission completes its job. At the end of this extension of 1 year the matter ought not to be brought back again to the House of Representatives. If the Commission will complete its job within 1 year, which it should and must do, I do not think we will object to the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. May I say to the gentleman I think he is absolutely correct. Insofar as I am concerned, and I think as far as the members of the committee on this side are concerned, we shall insist that this be the last money to be spent for this purpose, unless some unforseen contingency arises which might make an additional expenditure absolutely necessary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 12: Page 11, after line 16, insert the following:

"PETROLEUM CONSERVATION DIVISION

"Salaries and expenses, oil regulation and enforcement: For administering and enforcing the provisions of the act approved February 22, 1935 (49 Stat., p. 30), entitled 'An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law, and for other purposes', as amended, and to include necessary personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations, traveling expenses, contract stenographic reporting services, rent, stationery, and office supplies, not to exceed $1,000 for necessary expenses of attendance at meetings and confrences concerned with the work of petroleum conservation when authorized by the Secretary of the Interior, not to exceed $4,000 for printing and binding, not to exceed $500 for books and periodicals, and not to exceed $14,000 for the purchase, exchange, hire, maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, $285,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. May I say that sometime ago we passed a law providing for the continuation of the Petroleum Conservation Division, under the Department of the Interior, and now they are asking for an appropriation of $285,000. I think if the division is to function it will be necessary to have this provision included in the bill. There may be additional statements the chairman of the committee may wish to make in order that the House may know that this amount is in conformity with the law passed some few days ago.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 24: Page 19, after the word "Columbia", in line 6, insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, not to exceed $3 per diem in lieu of subsistence may be allowed to Indians actually traveling away from their place of residence when assisting in organization work."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment, and yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BELL].

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to address my remarks not to any particular amendment, but to all of the amendments to the original bill.

I was for the bill as it was first reported to the House by the committee and I think we have a committee of great men. I have every confidence in the committee. They studied these items carefully, considered them, and brought to this House the result of their deliberate judgment. This House acted upon their judgment, adding a little bit to the amounts reported. Then the bill went to the body at the other end of the Capitol, and it comes back to us, as bills have time and again, with millions of dollars added to it, and this House has had no opportunity to study these items, our committee has had no opportunity to study them, but we are asked to pass in the twinkling of an eye $10,000,000 of the money of the people of the United States.

A century and a half ago, when our forefathers set up this great Government and formulated our Constitution, in their wisdom they placed the appropriating power or the power to initiate appropriations or the power to control the purse strings of this great Nation here where it belongs, with the direct representatives of the people, who are sent here for 2 years at a time in order that the pulse of the people may be readily felt by this body.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BELL. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but I cannot yield now.

It seems to me that the remarks of a certain old circuit judge whom I knew so well down in Missouri might be apropos. He was discussing the course of business through our trial court there and said:

You know, I am becoming disgusted with the condition of things; the trial court is just a sort of whistling post that a case passes through on its way to the court of appeals.

Now, this is the situation, with all due respect to both Houses of this great Congress, we have got into here. Bills go through this House, having received our deliberate judgment and the judgment of the splendid men upon these committees, who have studied them time after time, day and night. Certain departments deliberately wait until after the bill has left the House and then whisper in the ear of someone at the other end of the Capitol, and $10,000,000 is added without the House knowing anything about it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. BELL. I will yield in just a moment.

It is for these reasons, not that I have any particular objection to any of these items, because, like the rest of you, I do not know anything about them, that I am opposing this procedure. These items have been added without giving us any opportunity to know about them, and therefore I am pleading with you to uphold the dignity of this House as the representatives of the people of this country. The President of the United States has plead with us to help balance the Budget, to quit spending money without knowing what we are spending, and with this thought in view I plead with you to vote against the adoption of the report and to vote against all of these amendments.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BELL. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The gentleman spoke about the great work done by the subcommittee. In this House they increased the Budget recommendation in less than 2 hours by $11,000,000. They increased it at the other end of the Capitol by $10,000,000 or $11,000,000, but $3,900,000 of that amount was authorized by the Congress, and no doubt the gentleman voted for it. Therefore the increase which was made over there was only $6,000,000 or $7,000,000 over the recommendation of the committee, while the increases made in the House were over $11,000,000, and the increases made over there were on the recommendation of duly elected Members of the Senate and not by lobbyists seeking to control the House the day they were in session on the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BELL. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri to amendment no. 90, the Colorado-Big Thompson project, where they are asking us to appropriate $900,000. This was never considered by the House, was never voted on, and if you appropriate this $900,000 then it will mean that the camel is getting its nose under the tent, and you will have to appropriate $44,000,000 to complete the project. Remember this when you vote on amendment no. 90.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, that is just one of the reasons I think we ought to vote down any proposition that spends millions of dollars of the people's money unless we are given an opportunity to know what we are spending. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 minutes more.

Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BELL. Yes.

Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky. To make the RECORD correct, because I think the statement made inadvertently by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK] is not quite correct. The Senate added $13,050,000.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. But $3,500,000 was submitted by the Budget.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BEAM].

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Speaker, and Members of the House. We are today in a state of judicial hysteria. A few days ago I listened with a great deal of interest to the distinguished and learned gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS], the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, make a most dramatic plea to save this country from a dictatorship.

Only a few moments ago I again heard those sentiments reechoed by my distinguished colleague from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], as I listened to him characterize as a selfish gesture the philosophy and intendment of the Court bill, now pending before the Senate of the United States for consideration and determination.

I, for one, cannot stand idly by and permit such statements to go unchallenged. I cannot, in the throes of highly publicized and specialized propaganda, desert a gallant leader, who is waging a fight for the great masses of our citizens and to preserve and make secure for them the blessings of equal opportunity in our land.

What sinister force, under the cloak of statesmanship is instigating and endeavoring to accomplish this desertion from our party? Is he a friend of the Democratic Party or is he a foe in the guise of a friend? Permit me, my colleagues to suggest caution.

Has the leadership of the President been repudiated by the Democratic Party and the citizens of the United States? Are we going to permit the word "dictator" to become a delusion and a snare by which timid souls become frightened and fanciful fears grip the minds of our countrymen? I trust not. I have enough confidence and faith in the cool and deliberate judgment of our American people.

Let me ask the gentleman from Illinois, "Was it a selfish gesture on the part of a dictator when, in response to a message from the President a few years ago, we passed legislation to feed and clothe the hungry and starving people in our land, and by so doing avoided untold bloodshed, as everybody who was serving in the Congress of the United States knew and realized at the time?" Those were tense days in the life of our Republic.

I ask, "Was it a selfish gesture when, in response to a Presidential message, legislation was enacted by a sympathetic and understanding Congress to preserve the farms and homes of our citizens—to safeguard their bank deposits; to stabilize the banking institutions; to revive industry—and obtain for the laborer and farmer the right to earn a decent living as an American citizen—and,—by a series of legislative enactments, too numerous to mention, succeeded in dissipating and destroying those dark clouds of fear, of trepidation, and uncertainty which engulfed our entire citizenship, and by the beneficent results thereby obtained heralded the advent of a new and brighter day for our people on this broad horizon we call America?"

Mr. Speaker, the people of the United States, and particularly the people of the great State of Illinois, are still behind Franklin D. Roosevelt. [Applause.]

The great masses of our citizens have faith in the integrity and sincerity of the President of the United States. They will not retreat nor will they desert in this hour a leader whose hopes, ambitions, and aspirations are for the betterment, welfare, happiness, and prosperity of all our people. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman realize that the American Indian Federation of America is opposed to amendment numbered 24?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I understand that the American Indian Federation is opposed to it, as well as practically everything else that the Indian Office favors. Frankly I have never been able to find but two Indians who are members of that so-called American Indian Federation. I know of only one Indian in Oklahoma who is connected with the organization. The committee also heard a charming enthusiastic lady who is connected with that organization. Possibly there are other Indians, however, in the United States connected with or interested in the Indian organization to which the gentleman refers, but they did not appear before our committee.

The amendment in question fixes the per diem of $3 a day, and I assume there is really no objection to it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is it not a fact that that was knocked out in the House on a point of order?

Mr. RICH. I am calling the chairman's attention to the fact that the American Indian Federation, of 116 C Street NE., objects to the amendment.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. In our hearings I think it was brought out there were only about 3,500 members of that organization throughout the whole country.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 28: Page 24, at the end of line 15, insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided further, That in addition to the amount herein appropriated the Secretary of the Interior may also incur obligations, and enter into contracts for the acquisition of additional land, not exceeding a total of $500,000, and his action in so doing shall be deemed a contractual obligation of the Federal Government for the payment of the cost thereof, and appropriations hereafter made for the acquisition of land pursuant to the authorization contained in the act of June 18, 1934, shall be available for the purpose of discharging the obligation or obligations so created."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, this amendment permits the Chief of the Bureau of Indian Affairs to go out and contract for land up to about $500,000. He is going out into the country and buying desert land at $2 an acre, wasting a great lot of money that can do absolutely no good to the Indian, doing something that tends to a community pool of land.

This practice has been demonstrated to be bad. I hope the House will not vote for this item.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 30: Page 26, beginning in line 11, insert: "The unexpended balance of $5,004.25 of the appropriation 'Purchase of land for landless Indians in California, act of March 3, 1925, special fund', which appropriation was repealed by section 4 (b 24) of the Permanent Appropriation Repeal Act, 1934 (48 Stat. 1227), is hereby reappropriated and made available until expended for payment of obligations heretofore incurred or to be incurred hereafter in the acquisition of land in California, with such improvements as may be appurtenant thereto, for the relief of homeless Indians of that State."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, this amendment reappropriates a little over $5,000 for the purchase of land for landless Indians in California. This sum was obtained by a sale to the city of Los Angeles of land originally purchased by the Government for landless Indians in California. The permanent repeal act of 1934 had the effect of repealing the unexpended balance referred to. We think the Indians are entitled to this sum and recommend that this item be included in the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that amendments nos. 35 and 37 be considered together, as they relate to the same subject matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman intends to offer an amendment to amendment no. 37, does he not?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. It is intended to offer an amendment to both amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report amendments nos. 35 and 37.

Amendment no. 35: Page 29, line 10, after the word "crops", strike out "$165,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$390,000."

Amendment no. 37: Page 30, line 2, after the word "Indians", insert the following: "Provided, further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to make advances from this appropriation to old, disabled, or indigent Indian allottees, for their support, to remain a charge and lien against their land until paid: Provided further, That not to exceed $15,000 may be advanced to worthy Indian youths to enable them to take educational courses, including courses in nursing, home economics, forestry, and other industrial subjects in colleges, universities, or other institutions, and advances so made shall be reimbursed in not to exceed 8 years, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided further, That not to exceed $275,000 may be advanced to the Navajo Tribe of Indians for the purchase, feeding, sale, slaughter, or other disposition of sheep, goats, and other livestock belonging to the Navajo Indians, including the erection of necessary structures, the purchase of machinery and equipment, materials and supplies, the purchase or lease of land or buildings, salaries of employees, traveling expenses, advertising, and all other necessary expenses."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendments, with amendments in each instance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motions of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 35 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$215,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 37 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the proviso, beginning in line 14 of said amendment, down to and including the word "expenses" in line 21, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided further, That not to exceed $50,000 may be advanced to the Navajo Tribe of Indians for the purchase, feeding, sale, or other disposition of sheep, goats, and other livestock belonging to the Navajo Indians."

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I want to say to the Members of the House that the committee decided to cut out $225,000 for a slaughterhouse on this Indian reservation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is correct.

Mr. RICH. I congratulate the committee in going along with us at least that far in trying to save that amount of money and keeping the Government from going into the slaughterhouse business on an Indian reservation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. And I congratulate the gentleman from Pennsylvania in going along with the committee as nicely as he has.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. LANHAM. I notice there is a provision for loans to Indian youths for educational purposes. Do those Indian youths enjoy the benefits to be derived under the National Youth Administration?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. No; they do not. This is an item that has been in the bill in the past, which assists strictly Indian children.

Mr. LANHAM. Why do they not enjoy the benefits of the National Youth Administration, and does this legislation give them any additional advantages over other youths of America?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. No. I should say it does not give them any additional advantages over other youths of America. The Indians were eliminated from the National Youth Administration for the reason, I assume, that there was an item in last year's bill for Indian education, and should this House eliminate this from this bill, then the Indian children would be discriminated against and would not have the benefit of any assistance whatever.

Mr. LANHAM. But this gives them no preference over the youths who are enjoying benefits under the National Youth Administration?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is correct.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. HOBBS. I rise to inquire merely what relationship this appropriation bears to that made to the National Youth Administration for American citizens other than Indians?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. It has no relationship whatever to that.

Mr. HOBBS. I mean in amount.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. It is undoubtedly smaller in amount than the amount to other American youth.

Mr. HOBBS. The gentleman is mistaken, if my memory is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. It is only $15,000 for the entire United States.

Mr. HOBBS. I understand, but the maximum to other American citizens is infinitesimally small in comparison to this.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I am quite certain that the gentleman is mistaken. As I have just stated, the amount is only $15,000 for the Indian youth of the entire United States.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Is this $50,000 which it is proposed be advanced to the Indians reimbursable?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes; it is reimbursable, but the item is not $50,000, but is only $15,000 for the entire United States. I think it ought to be a larger sum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate nos. 35 and 37 and concur therein with amendments.

The motions were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 46: Page 43, line 16, strike out "$700,000, reimburseable" and insert the following: "$500,000, reimbursable, and in addition thereto the Secretary of the Interior may also incur obligations and enter into a contract or contracts not exceeding the total amount of $750,000 and his action in so doing shall be deemed a contractual obligation of the Federal Government for the payment of the cost thereof, and appropriations hereafter made for continuing construction of this project shall be available for the purpose of discharging the obligation or obligations so created."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 46 and concur in the same.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain this change to the House?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I should be pleased to. This amendment provides an appropriation of $500,000 together with a contract authorization of $750,000 for beginning construction of the Colorado River Indian irrigation system, making a total of $1,250,000 available for contract. This is the estimated cost of the dam and the headworks, and testimony given before the Senate committee by the Director of Indian Irrigation was to the effect that if this money and authorization were granted it would enable the work to be done by the same contractor at a great saving of Federal funds to the Government of the United States. I am sure that the gentleman from Pennsylvania wants to save a little money.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 46 and concur in the same.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 53: Page 45, in line 1, strike out "$2,288,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,219,275."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 53 and concur in the same with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 53 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,169,275."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 54: Page 49, after line 5, insert the following: "The appropriation of $100,000 contained in the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1935, for cooperating with public-school districts in Glacier County, Mont., in the improvement and extension of school buildings to be available to both Indian and white children, as authorized by the act of June 7, 1935 (49 Stat. L. 327), is hereby made available under the same conditions as specified in the said Second Deficiency Appropriation Act until June 30, 1938, for improvement and extension of school buildings in rural communities in district no. 9, Glacier County, as well as other public-school districts within said county."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 54 and concur in the same.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, there was appropriated $100,000 in the year 1935 for cooperating with public-school districts in Glacier County, Mont. This was for the purpose of meeting the expense of educating Indian children. This is an amendment which was proposed by Senator WHEELER, and I want to quote his words in explanation of its purpose. It does not carry any new appropriation of money. It simply is desired to make the existing legislation permit the use of the item of $40,000 in any rural community in Glacier County where they have any considerable number of Indian children; in other words, to make available money heretofore appropriated by this Congress for the purpose of enabling school districts to meet the expense of educating Indian children in the various school districts of Glacier County.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield gladly to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Why was not this money used in 1935?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Because, as I understand, the Comptroller General ruled that there was some defect in the legislation prohibiting the use generally in school districts in the county. The purpose of this amendment is to cure that defect and permit this money to be used in any school district in that county where there are a considerable number of Indian children.

Mr. RICH. Was that the intent and purpose of the item originally passed in 1935?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. That was the intent and purpose of the law as originally passed. This amendment carries no additional appropriation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next Senate amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 73: Page 65, after line 13, insert: "There is hereby authorized to be expended out of the fund 'Interest on judgment, Court of Claims, Creek Indian Nation', now standing to the credit of the Creek Nation of Indians in the Treasury of the United States, the sum of not exceeding $2,000 to be paid, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, to attorneys for said Creek Nation of Indians employed under the authority of the act of Congress approved May 24, 1924 (43 Stat. 139), the payments to be made in such sums as may be necessary to reimburse the attorneys for such proper and necessary expenses as may have been incurred or may be incurred in the investigation of records and preparation, institution, and prosecution of suits of the Creek Nation of Indians against the United States under the above-mentioned act of May 24, 1924: Provided further, That the claims of the attorneys shall be filed by said attorneys with the Secretary of the Interior and shall be accompanied by the attorneys' itemized and verified statement of the expenditures for expenses and by proper vouchers, and that the claims so submitted shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

I may say for the benefit of the Members that this paragraph is similar to one carried in the bill in 1932 which authorized tribal funds, not Federal funds, mind you, but funds of the Creek Nation, to be used for expenses incurred by attorneys in the prosecution of suits filed by the Creek Nation against the United States in the Court of Claims pursuant to the Jurisdiction Act of May 24, 1924. Some cases are active at the present time and the attorneys employed on behalf of the tribe estimate that the $2,000 provided in this paragraph will be sufficient to meet all expenses prior to the settlement of the suit. I assume, therefore, that there will be no objection to this item.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next Senate amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 74: Page 67, line 1, after the word "each", insert the following; "Provided further, That section 2 of the act of Congress approved August 12, 1935 (49 Stat., 571), shall not apply to the Five Civilized Tribes."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment. I desire to make a brief statement and will yield some time before a final vote is taken.

This amendment is what is known as the Thomas amendment, which was placed in the bill by the senior Senator from Oklahoma. It does not affect the Indians of western Oklahoma that I have the honor to represent in part, nor Indians in any other section of Oklahoma, except the Five Civilized Tribes.

It may be recalled that in 1924 the Jurisdictional Act for the Five Civilized Tribes was passed by the Congress. Many of you who were here at that time served with the Hon. W. W. Hastings who was the author of that jurisdictional bill.

These jurisdictional acts were so drawn as to give effect to the treaty provision which provided in substance that no charges or claims shall ever be made by the United States for the division of their estates and tribal property among the members of these particular Five Civilized Tribes. Suits were filed under this act, and after 11 years of proceedings the act of August 12, 1935, was passed out of a clear sky, which provided in substance that every expense of administration the Government promised never to set up against these tribes should now be set up against them in violation of the treaty guaranty that the Government made with the Five Civilized Tribes.

The Indians did not have an opportunity to be heard in reference to this matter. It was inserted in the middle of a large second deficiency bill, which was passed under a gag rule; and, as I remember, no points of order could be raised. The proposed Senate amendment no. 74 in this Interior Department appropriation bill seeks merely to correct the wrong done the Five Civilized Tribes by the act of 1935 and turns them back to the original Jurisdictional Act, which gives effect to the provisions of the treaty that no charges or claims shall ever be made against them for administration expenses. That was a solemn agreement made by the Government of the United States by and with these particular tribes of Indians.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. They did not have a chance to say a word?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. As the gentleman from Oklahoma has suggested, the Indians were not given the courtesy of a hearing. They had no opportunity to appear before any committee and present their side of the case.

Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as this amendment does not affect the Indians in the district represented by me in Congress, and not being personally familiar with issues involved, I took the liberty of taking the matter up with the Interior Department, having addressed a letter to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs asking him what the attitude of the Commissioner would be with reference to this amendment. I also asked him to give me any information he cared to for the benefit of the Members of the House. With your permission, I desire to read into the RECORD at this time the letter I have just received from the Acting Secretary of the Interior in answer to my letter of inquiry.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may read the letter which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will read the letter.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, July 15, 1937.

Hon. JED JOHNSON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. JOHNSON: Reference is made to your letter of July 13 to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs concerning Senate amendment no. 74 of the Interior Department appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1938.

The purpose of this amendment is to exclude suits filed in the Court of Claims by the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Nations, under authorization contained in specific jurisdictional acts, from the operation of section 2 of the Deficiency Appropriation Act approved August 12, 1935 (49 Stat. 596). A number of suits have been filed pursuant to the jurisdictional acts. Some of these suits have been disposed of but others still are pending.

I call to your attention the circumstances leading to the enactment of section 2 of this act of August 12, 1935. Following hearings conducted by the House Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, to which hearings representatives of this Department were not invited and of which we knew nothing, section 2 was inserted in the deficiency act. Representatives of this Department were not heard in connection with the section, although representatives of the Attorney General were called and did testify before the Appropriation Subcommittee. The first we knew of the situation was when the appropriation bill was reported to the House. This legislation on an appropriation bill was protected by a special rule.

The section in brief provides that in all suits by an Indian tribe or band then pending in the Court of Claims which had not been tried or submitted, or in any suit thereafter filed by any tribe or band of Indians, the court shall consider as an offset against any amount found to be due such tribe or band all sums expended gratuitously by the United States for the benefit of any such tribe or band of Indians. Amendment no. 74 will prevent the United States from offsetting against any claim or judgment in favor of any of the Five Civilized Tribes any sum or sums expended in behalf of the members of these tribes by the United States out of gratuity appropriations made by Congress for the benefit of Indians.

It is the view of this Department that the act of August 12, 1935, should not have been made retroactive, and should not now be applied to suits filed under previously enacted jurisdictional acts containing no provision for the offset of gratuities. Gratuity expenditures for the benefit of individual members of a tribe should not in equity and in good conscience be charged against the tribe or band itself in any legitimate claim that the latter may have against the United States. The substantial sums appropriated by Congress for the education and civilization of the Indian wards of the Nation are spent largely for the pay of employees and the discharge of the duties owing by the United States to its Indian wards. Gratuity appropriations so made and spent should not be charged as an offset against any legitimate claims which the tribes may have against the United States.

The Indians affected by the numerous jurisdictional acts relating to the Five Civilized Tribes are much disturbed by the effect section 2 of the deficiency act may have on their claims and consider that section as another act of bad faith on the part of the United States in administering their affairs.

This Department did not sponsor the amendment but we have no objection thereto. The adoption of the amendment will afford relief to a few tribes. It is evident, however, that other tribes are greatly disturbed and that eventually section 2 of the deficiency act will have to be reconsidered by the Congress. It is hoped when that time comes representatives of this Department will have an opportunity to be heard.

Sincerely yours,

CHARLES WEST,
Acting Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, in all my experience in Congress, I have never seen, heard, or read such a remarkable letter as the one that has just been submitted by the gentleman from Oklahoma, signed by the Acting Secretary of the Interior, Mr. West. In the first place, what has Mr. West or any other official in that Department to do now with the cases which are pending against the United States Government in the Court of Claims. It is not the duty, as I see it, for the Department of the Interior or any officer in that Department to defend suits filed by Indian tribes. That duty rests with others and for Mr. West to attempt to express an opinion on a matter of this kind is something out of the ordinary. Certainly the gentleman from Oklahoma was entitled to an answer to his inquiry but a proper answer would have been a suggestion that he ask the Department of Justice which is charged with the responsibility of defending these Treasury raids.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield so that I may answer the question?

Mr. COCHRAN. I will yield in a second. I desire to go ahead with my statement now. I hope to have time left to yield to the gentleman but if I do not he is in control of the time and will have an opportunity to answer.

Many cases were filed under the Jurisdictional Act to which the gentleman refers. I was here when the jurisdictional acts were passed and I well remember the chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee at the time. Subsequent developments show that Congress gave little attention to the wording of the acts. We threw the doors wide open and put the Government in a terrible hole. I will show the House just what happened.

Growing out of those acts the Five Civilized Tribes filed suits against the United States in the Court of Claims for how much? I am not going to ask you to take my word for it. Here are the official figures—$850,000,000. Read the hearings before the Appropriations Committee and the letter from the General Accounting Office. Some of the cases have been disposed of, but many of them are pending.

The Government won practically all of the cases because the Department of Justice was permitted to offset the Indians' claims, and what you are asked to do now is to repeal the section that permitted the Government to secure a favorable decision.

I was responsible for the amendment in the deficiency act which this proviso seeks to set aside. It is true we did not call before us the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, because it was a legal matter which they had absolutely nothing to do with. It is their duty to administer the laws Congress passes, not to try cases in the Court of Claims. However, we did call the recognized agents of the Government who were trying to protect the Treasury of the United States in these suits. Under our Constitution it is the duty of the Attorney General, and not the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to defend such causes instituted against our Government. That is why we did not call them. At the expiration of those hearings by direction of the committee, of which I am chairman, I turned the matter over to the former chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the late Mr. Buchanan. It so happens I was sick in the hospital at the time the Appropriations Committee held its hearing and also at the time the section was considered and passed.

Efforts have been made to set that section aside time and time again. Bills have been reported by the Indian Affairs Committee, but, with others, I have succeeded in defeating every one with one exception. That was in the Klamath case, and the bill passed when I was again confined to my bed. That was a year ago, and it cost the taxpayers just nearly $5,000,000, because only last month the court decided that case and denied the right to offset the Indians' claims, the Government lost.

I do not ask you to accept my word about this matter. If you will refer to my remarks on pages 1768 to 1771 in the Appendix of the RECORD, you will find a letter from the Attorney General of the United States, also a letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, in which they state that if these two lines remain in the bill it will eventually cost the taxpayers of this country approximately $20,000,000. The Government of the United States has expended in gratuities to the Five Civilized Tribes over $19,000,000. All the Government of the United States asks is to be allowed to offset that amount in the cases pending before the Court of Claims.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COCHRAN. I will yield to the gentleman in just a moment.

That is all the Government wants to do. You will find in my remarks a list of other jurisdictional acts concerning claims which are subject to offsets.

If you concur in this amendment, you will be justified in repealing entirely the amendment in the deficiency act. Why treat the Five Civilized Tribes differently from all the other Indian tribes? Let us be fair. When I offered my amendment to section 213 of the Economy Act the other day I knew what I was doing. I said, "If we are going to make this apply to the employees in the regular establishments, then it should also apply to everybody working for the Government." The same applies here. If you want to be honest with all the Indians, do not ask the House to concur in this amendment, but ask the House to repeal the section. That is what you should do. Do not pick out the Five Civilized Tribes and say, "We will give you $20,000,000", and tell all the other Indian tribes, "You do not get anything." Those of you who represent the other Indian tribes, remember that your Indians will be calling on you to do the same for them that would be done for the Five Civilized Tribes by this amendment.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I will yield in a moment.

The entire question involved in this amendment is whether or not you want the legal representatives of the United States in their fight against the tremendous claims filed by the attorneys for the Indians to charge off the gratuities, the money, if you please, that the taxpayers of the United States have advanced to these Indians. When you and I are settling a claim and we sit down at a table to find out how we stand, you let me charge off the amounts I have advanced to you, and then say, "Pay me the rest." That is all the Government asks to be allowed to do in these cases.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. During the last 3 or 4 years the Government has spent several billion dollars on relief of the unemployed in this country. Assuming some of the people who are receiving relief should in the future have a claim against the Government by reason of either accident or property being taken, would the gentleman have the Government say to these citizens, "We are going to charge against you the money which was given to you while you were unemployed, as we are doing to the Indians"? Answer the question "yes" or "no." Would the gentleman charge that amount up to them?

Mr. COCHRAN. I will answer the gentleman and tell him what I would do. If at any time during the period of my service in the House a claim bill ever comes in here to reimburse a State for a claim against the United States Government, I will oppose that bill, because we have advanced each State millions and millions since the depression.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I did not ask the gentleman that question. I asked the gentleman if an individual now receiving relief from the United States Government should have a claim, would the gentleman have the amount given as relief charged up against that person?

Mr. COCHRAN. No. We are dealing now not with individual Indians but with the tribes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Why? Because the white man is organized throughout the country and has something to say, whereas the Indian is unorganized. We can readily see where we can be very independent with the poor, unfortunate Indian, but the white man is organized.

Mr. COCHRAN. That is not the question here. Mr. Speaker, a bill has passed the Senate which provides that the section in the deficiency act referred to shall not apply to all Indian tribes. A similar bill has been reported to the House by the Committee on Indian Affairs. If it is proper to do this for the Five Civilized Tribes, it is proper to do it for all the tribes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Not just now. Why not wait and let us take the legislation which has come from our legislative committee, bring it on the floor under the regular rules of the House, and let the House vote on it?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Why did the gentleman not do that with the section he added to the deficiency act?

Mr. COCHRAN. Because an emergency existed. Let the House vote on it. The Indian Affairs Committee could have called that bill up on Calendar Wednesday, the other day when it had the call, but did not call it up.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LEAVY. Does not the gentleman grant that in this particular case the situation is quite different from the situation with respect to the other Indian tribes throughout the country, in that this involves a treaty the Government made with the Indians in 1898, and it is now a question either of living up to the treaty obligation or repudiating it?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. The same claim that we have violated our treaties is made by every Indian tribe. Some of the treaties on which these suits are based date back to 1790. The total amount involved is over $3,000,000,000. We are talking about money now. When you are talking about millions you are not talking about real money these days, but here we are talking about billions. Now you are going to hear some of the gentlemen from Oklahoma get up in a few minutes and tell you this is not a fact. Just read the hearings before the Appropriations Committee and before the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments and you will find out the Department of Justice is responsible for the statement as to the amount. Those officials should know, as they are charged with defending the suits.

You are also going to hear the Five Civilized Tribes, according to these same gentlemen, are suing for a small amount, but just read the hearings I refer to and you will see the amount is over $800,000,000. Remember, this is the Five Civilized Tribes alone.

The attorneys representing the Indians are responsible for this amendment. They are the ones who are bearing down on the Members of the Congress. It is my view, Mr. Speaker, we should not permit this amendment to pass. It has absolutely no place in this bill. It would have been subject to a point of order had it been offered from the floor of the House. The bill goes over to the Senate where the Senator from Oklahoma places it in the measure, where under their rules they seem to be able to do as they please; it is not debated but agreed to, and it comes back here with the majority of the House conferees in agreement and the chairman of the conference committee asking the House to recede and concur. Recede and concur in doing what? In giving away nearly $20,000,000 of the taxpayers' money, the money of your constituents and my constituents.

The Indians of this country are being well taken care of by the Government of the United States. They are being just as well taken care of, and in many instances better, than your constituents or my constituents. What are we doing for them in this bill? For every Indian in this country you appropriate $1,000.

In conclusion, I may say I have been making this fight for years. I am going to continue to make it as long as I am able, because I know I am right. I am supported by the Attorney General of the United States, I am supported by the Comptroller General of the United States, and I repeat that if you will read my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD, page 1768, you will find that those officials say this amendment will cost nearly $20,000,000, and further, if the Congress should pass this amendment that the chairman has asked us to agree to, then every other tribe will be justified in coming to the Congress and asking us to do the same thing for them. If that should be done, it would cost hundreds of millions of dollars. There is but one thing to do and that is to vote down the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS].

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I suspect this is the most misunderstood proposition that has been before the House within the knowledge of those who are Members of the House at this time. I want to answer one or two statements made by my colleague from Missouri and I shall answer every one of them from the record of hearings held on this subject before committees of the House.

In the first place, the provision to which this Senate amendment is directed is the rider which was placed on the second deficiency appropriation bill, being the act of August 12, 1935. This rider went on there, as has been pointed out, without hearing either in the Senate or in the House and without the knowledge of either body, and was a rider on an appropriation bill. I have said heretofore that had the House known about it the House could have interposed a point of order against the rider, but I have discovered since that time that that was not even the case. It was brought to the floor of the House under a rule given by the Rules Committee which made it impossible for even a point of order to lie against it. I did not know such a rule was possible, but I am told that is what happened.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. Gladly.

Mr. TABER. I think everyone in the House knew what was going on. The Attorney General's office was called before the Appropriations Committee and hearings were held on this particular matter.

Mr. NICHOLS. No; the Attorney General's office was called before a subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. TABER. Certainly.

Mr. NICHOLS. And I will leave it to the knowledge of the House and to their judgment whether they knew such a rider was on the appropriation bill, but be that as it may, had it not been for the fact that this rider was attached to this bill, without the knowledge of the House, or with the knowledge of the House, those who were interested in the matter and knew the facts would, of course, have raised a point of order had that been possible.

At the time the second deficiency bill was up for consideration Mr. Harry Blair, Assistant Attorney General, and George B. Stormount were called before the committee, or were permitted to come before the committee at their own request, and it was upon statements made by them that the rider was prepared. This was done without the knowledge of any of us folks who were interested in this matter. I certainly know that I knew nothing about it. If you will follow me, I will try to straighten this whole situation out to you, and do it briefly.

The rider provided that the Government on suits which were pending or were to be heard before the Court of Claims would charge against any judgment obtained by any tribe or band as offsets any moneys expended gratuitously on or for that tribe or band of Indians, but there was a provision placed in the rider as follows, and I quote from the rider itself:

> And said section shall not be deemed to amend or affect the various acts granting jurisdiction to the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims listed on page 678 of the hearings before the subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations on the second deficiency appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1935.

This excepted every tribe of Indians in the United States with the exception of the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma. Why? Because those tribes of Indians, when they had filed their jurisdictional claims, had said in them—and I want to be fair about this:

> The Government shall charge off against us moneys gratuitously expended on our Indians.

Now, why did not the jurisdictional bill for the Five Civilized Tribes say that? Because in the treaties entered into, not in 1700, but in 1896, treaties entered into by and between the Five Civilized Tribes and the Government of the United States, the Government said to those Indians, "We want to bring Oklahoma into this Union of States; we want this great Indian Territory to become one of the States of the Union."

They said, "We cannot do it unless you let us take the lands which the Government has given you, and let us survey them, let us break them down into town lots, let us break them down into individual allotments", and the Indians said no, "We don't want to do that way. When you brought us out of Florida and the States in the South you told us we could have this land forever for our own to do with as we would", and they said that they were satisfied and that they would stay right where they are; but the Great White Father from 1893 until 1898 importuned those Indians day after day, week after week, month after month, and finally, as an inducement to those five tribes to permit the Government to allot their lands individually and to survey their lands, said, "If you will let us do this, we will agree with you in solemn treaty that the money that is expended to do it will never be charged against you. We want this as a State, and, Mr. Indian, if you will let us use it for that purpose we will not ever charge you anything for the work and the expenditure of money that the Government expends in order to get it."

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes.

Mr. DISNEY. The object in doing this thing was to allot the lands so that the white folks could buy them.

Mr. NICHOLS. Partially. Mr. Speaker, I now quote from the Choctaw-Chickasaw treaty of June 28, 1898:

> That no charge or claim shall be made against the Choctaw or Chickasaw Tribes by the United States for expense of surveying and platting the lands as town sites or for grading or for appraising and allotting the lands or for appraising and disposing of the town lots herein provided.

I quote further treaty entered into with the Creek Tribe of Indians on March 1, 1901:

> The United States shall pay all expenses incident to the surveying, platting, and disposition of town lots and the allotments of lands made under the provisions of this agreement.

Let us see what are set up as gratuities, claims, and charges against these Indians. I hold in my hand in the case of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations against the United States, the defendant's statement. This is the statement of the United States, setting forth gratuities. Let us see what it is that the United States wants to charge against these Indian tribes as gratuities, and I read from their own pleadings:

> Agency building repairs, allotting, appraising, appraising and selling lands, appraisal and sale of restricted lands, keeping allotment records; equalization of allotments, examining records in disputed citizenship cases, investigating leases, leasing of minerals and other lands, probate expenses, protecting property interests, removal of intruders, sale of allotted lands, sale of town lots, sale of town sites, sale of unallotted lands, surveying, surveying and allotting of lands, surveying, platting, and appraising town sites, surveying selected coal and timber lands, timber estimating.

All to the total sum of $12,267,989.25. My friends, all that the Five Civilized Tribes want is only that to which they are entitled. My distinguished friend has said that if these suits are permitted to go on it will cost the Government an estimated $20,000,000. He says also that the Five Civilized Tribes have filed suits against the Government in the sum of $800,000,000. Let us go to the record and see. I quote from the hearings before the Committee on Indian Affairs of the United States Senate, and this was in the Seventy-second Congress, and in that hearing on page 13549 there is a table produced there which shows that the total of all claims filed by all Indian tribes in the entire United States, not just five little tribes down in Oklahoma, but the total of every Indian nation in the United States is $772,117,772.25.

The gentleman must be in error about his statement, and can it cost the Government anything? Let us see about that. The gentleman would have you believe that by the adoption of this amendment it would cost the Government of the United States $20,000,000. That is not so. What must happen before through the adoption of this amendment it could cost the Government a single nickel? Of course, you all understand this provides for no appropriation. There is no appropriation of money involved here. Here is what would have to happen before it could cost the Government a cent. They must first win their case in the Court of Claims. Then, if they are successful, they must go with the United States on its route of appeal to the circuit court of appeals and the Supreme Court of the United States. If they are successful in those three steps, then they must come back to this Congress. First, probably it would be necessary to pass a bill to authorize the appropriation of funds to pay the judgment obtained in the highest court in the land, and then before they could get the money it would be necessary that you, ladies and gentlemen of this body and the other body at the other end of the Capitol, should, by appropriations through the United States Treasury, appropriate the money to pay the judgment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. NICHOLS. There has been a great deal said about the tremendous sums of money that these Indians have gained in judgments against the United States. There has been a great deal said about the huge attorneys' fees that have been paid to lawyers in these cases. I ask you again to go with me to the record. The record of the Court of Claims discloses this fact: It shows that 51 cases have been filed for the Five Civilized Tribes; 16 of the 51 have been disposed of; 16 of them have been disposed of; 14 of the cases which have been disposed of were decided in favor of the Government; 14 of the 16 that have been decided were decided in favor of the Government; 2 have been decided in favor of the tribes. How much money do you suppose the tribes got under those two judgments? It would not break the Government. Their long list of attainments totals $154,-605.20, and no more. Let us see if this will break the Government. Thus in 16 suits disposed of the tribes have recovered less than 1 percent of the amount sued for. Do those figures show that the finances of the United States are seriously endangered?

Let us see about the attorneys. In 13 years of work—this is also from the record—in 13 years of trial of cases for the Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes attorneys for those Indians have collected in fees the staggering sum of $14,000, and I quote from the record, and I challenge anyone to show it is wrong.

These five tribes of Indians are only asking you to put them on the same footing that you have 24 other tribes of Indians. The distinguished gentleman from Missouri said, "Why should you do anything for the Five Tribes that you will not do for the others?" I want to know why you will do something for all the rest of them that you will not do for the Five Tribes?

When this rider was adopted it excluded every other tribe in the United States with the exception of these tribes, and these tribes have a solemn treaty agreement, as late as 1901, with your Government, which treaty was ratified by the other body of this Congress, telling them that in consideration of their turning over their lands in Oklahoma this money never would be charged against them.

I appeal to you only in the spirit of fair play and sportsmanship to forget, if you can, the prejudice that holds in your breast against these red men of Oklahoma who have been pictured here as despots.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield.

Mr. DUNN. I want to say that when that appropriation comes up for the poor Indians I am going to vote for it.

Mr. NICHOLS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I am not a little amazed at the statements made by the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS], for whom I cherish a very deep and abiding affection, but I am afraid the recent statements made relative to the record will not stand the light of close scrutiny. For instance, when the gentleman says this is discrimination against the Five Civilized Tribes and that in the case of no other tribe are offsets permitted, I would suggest that on page 675 of the hearings on the second deficiency act of 1935 he read the testimony of the Assistant Attorney General of the United States. He very specifically states that in the case filed by the Blackfeet Indians a claim of some $6,130,000 was offset by gratuities, and so forth, in the sum of $5,508,000. My information is that all other tribes are in a position where these offsets can be made and that we have been trying to keep the civilized tribes within the purview of these offsets. But here comes an amendment written in by the Senate of the United States that seeks to give these Five Civilized Tribes a preferential status, which is eminently unfair both to the Treasury and to the rest of the Indians of the country.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Not just now.

Mr. NICHOLS. The gentleman made reference to me in a rather disparaging manner.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Oh, no.

Mr. NICHOLS. The gentleman says I did not quote the record.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I cannot yield just now until I finish my statement. Here is the record. The gentleman can read it any time.

We have approximately 330,000 Indians in the country. Twenty thousand of them no longer wear the tribal blanket. They are the unorthodox Indians, who have gone out to become moving-picture actors, baseball players, and medicine men. That leaves three hundred and ten thousand and odd. We appropriate about $31,000,000 annually for the Indians. They share in all the benefits that are made available to the rest of the people of the country. They share in the benefits of hard roads and all other things.

In addition thereto we have made available by appropriations of Congress $1,000 per capita approximately as a special benefit for the Indians of the country. It seems to me that we have treated them very decently, if you please. We recognize the fact that the Government of the United States stands to the Indian in the relationship of guardian to ward. Under the treaties that go back to 1790 we have been trying to do our duty by those Indians, and we have done a pretty good job.

They started filing claims against the Federal Government on various grounds and want to take back the value of what they once gave, and that is where we got the felicitous expression "Indian giver." First, you give something and then you take it back. They gave some lands and received in return shelter and assistance from the Government, and now they want to file claims. I read again from the record before the Appropriations Committee in 1935 to show that the Solicitor General said that the claims do not amount to $800,000,000, but rather to one billion seven hundred and ninety-seven million dollars and odd.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. Those were not claims by the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Oh, no.

Mr. NICHOLS. That was the total of all Indian claims.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is right; but I take it if we measure our regard for the Indians, we must refer to what we have done for all of them and not just the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I cannot yield.

There is the record as far as all the tribes are concerned. My friend from Oklahoma may be right as to what is involved in connection with the Five Civilized Tribes. We are treating these other Indians in that fashion. When they file claims, we are offsetting the things that the Federal Government has made available in the form of gratuities, advances, and so forth, but now come the Five Civilized Tribes through an amendment, amendment no. 74, written into this bill by the Senate asking for special, preferential treatment. Here are the Cherokees and the Choctaws, here are the Creeks and Chickasaws, and here are the Seminoles, known as the Five Civilized Tribes, asking that no offset be permitted against the claims which they might file. They put themselves in the position of saying they are better than other Indians. Is there any distinction between a Choctaw and a Nez Perce Indian? Is there any distinction between a Chickasaw and a Navajo or an Arapaho? Is there any distinction between a Seminole and a Flandreau Indian?

Mr. THOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. THOM. Let me ask the gentleman whether or not it is true that by treaty we said to these particular Indian tribes that we would bear certain expenses.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think that is probably true.

Mr. THOM. Should we not keep our treaties?

Mr. DISNEY. These things are recited in that treaty.

Mr. DIRKSEN. All these things were not contained in the treaty. For instance, the Blackfeet——

Mr. NICHOLS. I am talking only about the Five Tribes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I just want to get at the substance of this.

Mr. DISNEY. The gentleman cannot get at the substance of it without the treaty.

Mr. DIRKSEN. There was no treaty provisions, for instance, for hunting grounds. That was thrown out. There was not anything in the treaty with reference to the right to hunt and fish in Glacier National Park. That was thrown out; it was not recognized.

Mr. NICHOLS. Will not the gentleman be fair? That has nothing to do with the bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am quoting exactly from the record.

Mr. NICHOLS. That has nothing to do with the bill, I would remind the gentleman. The Blackfeet Indians are in Idaho and Montana. This amendment applies only to the Five Tribes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. All right; the gentleman from Oklahoma recited the whole list of things for which a claim could not properly be offset against the Indians.

Mr. NICHOLS. By the Five Tribes only.

Mr. DIRKSEN. He did not recite those things that did not come within the treaty and that have not been enumerated there, and those, among other things, constitute the basis for some of the offsets they have been insisting upon under section 2 of the Deficiency Appropriation Act of 1935.

Mr. NICHOLS. I will say to the gentleman that the things I enumerated are the very things that were charged off.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. On page 678 of the hearings on the second deficiency appropriation bill, under the heading, "Cases in which offset cannot be pleaded", there are 43 cases pending in the Court of Claims, involving approximately $850,000,000, brought by the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. NICHOLS. I make reference to the same hearings. The gentleman referred to an amount of money far exceeding $1,000,000,000 representing the claims brought by all the Indian tribes in the United States.

In another hearing before the committee they set up the fact that $772,000,000 involved all of the claims filed by all tribes in the United States. I hand the gentleman that information.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Except those that were not completed by the Comptroller General at the time the statement was made.

Mr. NICHOLS. So far as what the gentleman is referring to is concerned, this was not made to apply to 24 of the western tribes of the United States, although it was left to apply to the Five Tribes.

Mr. COCHRAN. On page 677 of the hearings, Mr. Blair, Assistant Attorney General, was asked by Mr. Buchanan what the total was they were suing for in these 98 cases—meaning all the Indians—and Mr. Blair replied:

A little over $3,000,000,000.

That is right there in the hearings.

Mr. NICHOLS. I may say if Mr. Blair made that statement, I think he is in error about the $3,000,000,000. My check of the figures does not disclose that.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I want to finish my statement by appealing to the common sense of the Members in this matter involving these aboriginal inhabitants who, it is recognized, owned the country before the white man came here. But under various treaties as made with these Indians we made up to them by way of benefits of one kind or another for what we acquired. It is essentially true that the Indian is a shiftless sort of person. He would not have done anything with the country, anyhow. We have tried to be just as good as a guardian can be to a ward all this time. We have proceeded under these various treaties, dating back to 1790. Suddenly some attorney recognizes the legal beauties of a claim that may be preferred against the Federal Government, so they appeal to Congress for the right to present their claims in court. Congress generously afforded that right. In 1935 Congress spoke again by saying that gratuities and advances would be offset against these claims. Now come the Indians and insist that such benefits should not be filed as offsets. If amendment no. 74 is defeated—and I trust it will—it will be the equivalent of the guardian saying to the ward, "If you are going to sue me on claims that may date back to 1790, I am going to exercise my right to offset those claims with the benefits that I have purveyed to you over a period of years."

Is there anything unfair about that?

Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely necessary to defeat amendment 74 and take it out of the bill completely unless we want to open the doors of the Federal Treasury to a lot of Indian lawyers.

If this amendment remains in the bill, this Congress will be beset by every Indian tribe in the country, whether they have a treaty with the Government or not, to make available to them, the same preferences that are contemplated by the pending amendment. This amendment is the little seep that will break the dam and open up easy access to the Federal Treasury. No matter how much may have been obtained by the Indians in previous suits on claims, the fact is that the Federal Treasury is exposed to judgments that might reach into the billions and the time to stop it is now. I sincerely hope the House will do its proper duty today and decisively defeat amendment no. 74.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. O'NEAL].

Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, what I am about to say has nothing to do with the merits or demerits of this controversy. There was an old magistrate in my district who once said that he liked to hear but one side of a case, because it confused him if he heard both sides.

That is my objection to using an appropriation bill as a vehicle for legislation. No Member of the House could have presented this matter in an appropriation bill without having it go out on a point of order. I agree it should not have been put into the deficiency bill in the first place.

What happened? We went into conference. The House realizes that it did not have the right to put it in the bill. We knew nothing of it as a House committee until we went into conference; the Senator from Oklahoma had inserted in the bill this amendment. It involves millions of dollars and has to do with equities that could only be determined, if done intelligently, by a study and testimony. He put it in the bill and we are asked in this short time to sit as judge and jury and pass upon the relative merits of each side's contention.

Mr. Speaker, that is not business. It is not good common sense. It certainly if not fair to ask this group to make a decision involving millions of dollars of taxpayers' money simply on what we hear from those gentlemen who stand upon the floor and make a short statement. May I ask each of you, how many of you feel that you know anything about this subject? How many of you feel that you know where the equities are? Who is competent to pass upon this of those who have sat here and heard these arguments? Mr. Speaker, if this were the court of last resort, we might take a chance and decide the matter, but this is not the only remedy.

These gentlemen may come in the first of next year or may present a bill this year and the matter then can be considered on its merits and an intelligent decision arrived at. I do not believe the House feels we are proceeding in an orderly or intelligent way in attempting to pass upon this matter simply because some Senator wants it, or because it has met with the enthusiastic support of gentlemen from that section of the country, who, no doubt, are very much concerned about it.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. As a matter of fact, the Senate has already passed a bill of the character the gentleman describes. It is on the Speaker's desk now. The House committee has reported a similar bill, which is on the calendar, and if the House Committee on Indian Affairs had desired to do so a few weeks ago, when it had the call on Calendar Wednesday, it could have called up that bill which had already passed the Senate.

Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I hope the committee will in a businesslike way defeat the motion.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTWRIGHT] such time as he may desire.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. JOHNSON, covered the whole subject in his opening statement so far as this amendment is concerned. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] also made a fine statement, and, as members of the Supreme Court sometimes do when they do not wish to render a long opinion, I concur in what the gentlemen have had to say. I will, however, very briefly summarize the situation.

In 1924 the jurisdictional acts of the Five Civilized Tribes were passed by Congress. Hon. W. W. Hastings, a Member of Congress, originated the idea of permitting these tribes to sue the Government in order that their affairs might be finally settled. These jurisdictional acts were so drawn as to give effect to their treaty provisions, which provided in substance that no charges or claims shall ever be made by the United States for the division of their estates and other tribal property among the members of these tribes.

Suits were filed under these acts, and, after 11 years of proceedings, the act of August 12, 1935, was passed out of a clear sky. It provided in substance that the very expenses of administration, which the Government had promised never to set up against these tribes, should now be set up against them in violation of their treaty guaranties. The Indians did not have an opportunity to be heard on this matter. It was inserted in the middle of a large second deficiency bill and was passed under a "gag" rule and no point of order could be made at that time against it.

The proposed Senate amendment no. 74 in this Interior bill seeks merely to correct the wrong done to these Five Civilized Tribes by the act of 1935 and to turn them back to the original jurisdictional acts, and thus give effect to the provisions of their treaties that no charges or claims shall ever be made against them for these administrative expenses.

The best argument for this amendment made this afternoon was made by an opponent, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. O'NEAL], when he said the act of 1935 should never have carried the provision authorizing gratuity offsets. That is exactly why we should take it out now by adopting the Thomas amendment.

Let us in good conscience keep faith with the Indians.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. NICHOLS) there were—ayes 27, noes 70.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-seven Members are present, not a quorum.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 88, nays 242, not voting 101, as follows:

ROBINSON to be held in the Senate Chamber Friday, July 16, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian, and that the committee appointed by the Speaker of the House to attend the funeral shall act in conjunction with the committee of the Senate to make the necessary arrangements.

Resolved, That upon the return of the House to its Chamber following the services in the Senate Chamber the Speaker shall, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Senator, declare the House adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

The resolution was agreed to.

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns tomorrow it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1938

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 87: Page 75, after line 14, insert the following: "The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States $105,000 of any funds on deposit to the credit of the Menominee Indians in Wisconsin (except the Menominee log funds), and to expend said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for a per-capita payment of $50 to each enrolled member of the Menominee Tribe: Provided, That such payment shall be in lieu of the payment authorized by the act of June 15, 1934 (48 Stat., p. 964), for the fair market stumpage value of timber cut on the Menominee Reservation during the fiscal year 1937: Provided further, That in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior the payment herein authorized may be made in two installments."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for a question.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, sometimes I question the advisability of making a wide distribution of funds to the Indians, even though they be funds of the Indian tribes, for this reason: The Indians, as I now see the situation, are supposed to be wards of the Federal Government, and there are 230,000 of them. We are spending annually an increasing amount for the preservation of the Indians. Many of the tribal funds which I have observed during the handling of this bill in the past year have been depleted. Whenever the tribes deplete their funds they come back to the Federal Government and ask to be given additional grants of money out of the Federal Treasury in order that the Indians may have enough money to support themselves.

It seems to me, if we are trying to put the Indians on a self-supporting basis, the amount of money paid annually out of the Federal Treasury for the Indians should become less and less if we are doing a good job of making them self-supporting. Instead of that, each year it costs the Federal Government more. As long as we are the guardians of these Indians we should protect their treasuries in respect of the amounts of their own funds we permit the tribes to spend.

Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to consider this amendment very carefully before we allow the distribution of $50 to each Indian in this tribe. I think someone in the House should give information concerning this amendment to the Members of the House who have not had the opportunity of hearing about these tribes and the amounts of money they have in reserve.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has asked rather a long question, if that is all one question. Seriously, however, his statement is to the point, and I agree with the gentleman generally in his observation. I agree, Mr. Speaker, per-capita payments should not be granted if and when there is any possibility of the funds being depleted. However, these Indians are among the richest in the United States. There is only one other tribe in the entire United States which has more money than the Menominee Tribe of Indians. At this time, as I recall, they have approximately $1,500,000 on hand. This item is similar to the item which is carried in the current law and has been previously carried. The tribal funds of these Indians have not been depleted. The Indians have a substantial income. They requested this per-capita payment, and the committee was unanimous, as I recall, in asking that this be granted.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] is more familiar with the affairs of this particular tribe than am I. I now yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin to make any statement he may desire and to answer any questions which any Member may have with reference to this tribe of Indians.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, may I call the attention of the House to the fact that this is not a payment out of the General Treasury, but is merely a payment of $105,000 to provide $50 per capita to the members of the Menominee Tribe of Indians of the State of Wisconsin.

The Menominees, as the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee has stated, have on deposit with the Federal Government approximately $1,500,000 of their own funds, so this money can be taken out of that fund without seriously depleting it. There is no danger of depleting their funds, as was suggested by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], for the reason that this fund of $1,500,000 draws interest and each year becomes larger and larger. Furthermore, the Menominee Tribe of Indians have the finest stand of timber in the Central West. They have a sawmill on their reservation. They cut this timber and cut it scientifically. A great deal of credit can be given to the late Senator La Follette for passing in 1908 what is known as the La Follette Act, which provided that the timber on this reservation should be cut selectively. This has been one of the finest experiments in selective cutting of timber in the history of this country.

They do not go into that reservation and cut all the timber that is in sight, as happens in normal or ordinary logging operations, but they are permitted to cut only the mature timber, and the reservation is large enough and they have enough timber so that with their selective cutting they can cut a sufficient amount of timber every year to keep the sawmill going pretty well. There is also a pretty good market for their timber, and I believe the mill is properly managed. I hope that any so-called abuses that may have existed in the past have now been cleared up; and those of us who are interested in the Menominee Reservation believe that the reservation, operating on a business basis and with selective cutting of timber, will have a steady income that will increase each year the amount that is on deposit to their credit in the Federal Treasury.

If they have this money and if it is to do them any good, or if it is to do anyone any good except the particular Indians who have an opportunity to work in the sawmill, there must be these per-capita payments distributed among the members of the tribe on the reservation.

In 1934 I introduced in this body a bill, which was passed and became law, that provided that instead of per-capita payments there should be payments out of the depletion of the timber; in other words, that the fair stumpage value of the timber cut should be set aside to be distributed among the members of the tribe instead of per-capita payments. I do not know why that is not working out the way it should at the present time. I do not know why they come in here today and ask for per-capita payments in lieu of the payments they would receive under the act of 1934; but apparently they feel it is best, for the time being at least, to continue these per-capita payments.

As one who is interested in this tribe, I am hopeful that in the future there will not be any necessity for per-capita payments, but that they will use this fund that accumulates from the cutting of the mature timber. However, I want to assure the House that the members of the Menominee Tribe of Indians are not getting anything under the provisions of this amendment from the Government for nothing. As a matter of fact, our tribe gets very little from the Federal Government. The education of the Menominee Indian children is provided for by the tribal fund. You will recall that a few weeks ago I pointed out that the Menominees are the only ones who are not getting any benefits from the fund that provides for the care of timber on the various reservations, because the Government feels, apparently, that so long as the Menominees have any money of their own they should not benefit from the general provisions of a law for the benefit of Indians generally.

We have not been getting anything from the Federal Government and we believe that these per-capita payments out of their own fund are amply justified.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. HOUSTON. As I understand, the dividends they now receive from the sale of timber on this reservation go into the fund and the gentleman contends that they should be paid out of that fund instead of receiving per-capita payments.

Mr. BOILEAU. That was the intention of the bill I introduced in 1934, which was passed. However, this bill is in lieu of payments under that act.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is the gentleman in favor of making this payment?

Mr. BOILEAU. I am in favor of this payment now, and I will frankly tell the gentleman I do not know why the act I have referred to is not working out as satisfactorily as I believe it should. I intend to investigate and try to make it work out satisfactorily, but I may say that the Department recommends this provision.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Wisconsin 2 additional minutes.

Mr. BOILEAU. I understand the Department favors this method of payment. The other may be a little complicated. I cannot undertake to tell the gentleman why they are not operating under the law that was passed, because I do not know, but I say to the gentleman, as one who is interested in this tribe, I shall make an investigation, and if it is possible to carry out the provisions of the act of 1934 so that we will not have to come back for per-capita payments, I want to see that done. When I introduced that bill on behalf of the Menominee Indians they assured me it was their intention not to come back for per-capita payments. I do not want to say anything here that will preclude me in the future, in the event it becomes necessary to ask for such payments, but I do wish to say to the gentleman that I do not believe per-capita payments should be made if the matter can be worked out in the manner provided for in the act of 1934. However, I may say this does not deplete the accumulations from the sale of timber that have gone into the fund.

Mr. HOUSTON. All the receipts from the sale of timber go into this fund?

Mr. BOILEAU. It all goes into their fund; yes.

Mr. HOUSTON. What about the second growth of trees? Do they continue to plant as they cut?

Mr. BOILEAU. They do some planting, I believe, but they have sufficient timber from natural replanting. Let me point out to the gentleman that this is one of the finest experiments in reforestation and in the maintenance of forest reserves ever conducted in this country. They cut their timber so there is natural reseeding and a continuous growth. Since 1908 it has been going on in this way, and it has proven very satisfactory, and it has been very helpful to those in this country who are interested in reforestation to see how this has worked out.

Mr. HOUSTON. And the timber is not going to be depleted in the next few years.

Mr. BOILEAU. No; it will not be, because of the fact we do selective cutting, and that is the only thing that is going to protect the Menominee Indians, and it is also the reason the chairman can say today that the Menominee Tribe of Indians is the second richest tribe of Indians in the United States. There are only 2,000 of them, but they have some property left because the La Follette Act prohibits the exploitation of the Indians of Wisconsin. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division, the Chair announcing himself in doubt, there were—ayes 115, noes 9.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 89: Page 85, after line 23, insert: "Gila project, Arizona, $1,250,000; said Gila project, including the waters to be diverted and used thereby and the lands and structures for the diversion and storage thereof, to be subject to the provisions of the Boulder Canyon Project Act of December 21, 1928, and subject to and controlled by the provisions of the Colorado River compact signed at Santa Fe, N. Mex., November 24, 1922."

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Nevada that the House recede and concur.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division of that question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to a division of the question. The question is whether the House shall recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the chairman of the committee yield, so that we can have some time on this amendment.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. As I understand, the gentleman from Utah has demanded a division of the question. That is, to vote separately on receding and on concurring.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, we do not want to recede or concur until we know what is going on.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. The gentleman will not have to vote on either one until there is ample time for debate.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICH. If we agree to the motion, will we be deprived of the privilege of discussing this matter before the House?

The SPEAKER. The motion to concur is debatable. The first proposition is on the division of the question. The question is on the motion that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RICH) there were—ayes 58, noes 58.

The SPEAKER. The Chair votes "aye."

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote upon the ground that there is no quorum present, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. Two hundred and nineteen Members present, a quorum.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Forty-nine Members have risen, a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered. The question is, Shall the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment?

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 122, nays 191, not voting 118, as follows:

ROBINSON, the Chair now, in accordance with that order, requests the Chaplain of the Senate to conduct the services.

Miss Helen Howison, of the city of Washington, sang Lead Kindly Light.

Lead Kindly Light, amid the encircling gloom,
Lead Thou me on!
The night is dark, and I am far from home—
Lead Thou me on!
Keep Thou my feet; I do not ask to see
The distant scene—one step enough for me.

I was not ever thus, nor prayed that Thou
Shouldst lead me on.
I loved to choose and see my path; but now
Lead Thou me on!
I loved the garish day, and, spite of fears,
Pride ruled my will; remember not past years.

So long Thy power hath blessed me, sure it still Will lead me on,
O'er moor and fen, o'er crag and torrent, till
The night is gone;
And with the morn those angel faces smile
Which I have loved long since, and lost a while.

The Chaplain of the Senate recited from the Episcopal burial office as follows:

I am the resurrection and the life, saith the Lord. He that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die.

* * * * * * * *

I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that He shall stand at the latter day upon the earth, and though this body be destroyed, yet shall I see God, whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another.

* * * * * * * *

We brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out. The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord.

* * * * * * * *

Lord, let me know mine end and the number of my days, that I may be certified how long I have to live.

Behold, Thou hast made my days as it were a span long, and mine age is even as nothing in respect of Thee; and verily every man living is altogether vanity.

For man walketh in a vain shadow and disquieteth himself in vain; he heapeth up riches and cannot tell who shall gather them.

And now, Lord, what is my hope? Truly my hope is even in Thee.

Deliver me from all mine offences, and make me not a rebuke unto the foolish.

When Thou with rebukes dost chasten man for sin, Thou makest his beauty to consume away, like as it were a moth fretting a garment; every man therefore is but vanity.

Hear my prayer, O Lord, and with Thine ears consider my calling; hold not Thy peace at my tears; for I am a stranger with Thee and a sojourner, as all my fathers were.

Oh, spare me a little, that I may recover my strength before I go hence and be no more seen.

Glory be to the Father and to the Son and to the Holy Ghost. As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, world without end. Amen.

(St. John 14: 1)

Jesus said, Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in Me. In My Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also. And whither I go ye know, and the way ye know. Thomas saith unto Him, Lord, we know not whither Thou goest; and how can we know the way? Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father but by Me.

As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father. The Spirit himself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God; and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with Him, that we may be also glorified together. For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us. For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God. We know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. What shall we then say to these things? If God be for us, who can be against us? He that spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things? Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us. Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us. For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

Here endeth the lesson.

Let us pray.

One sweetly solemn thought
Comes to me o'er and o'er;
I am nearer home today
Than I've ever been before.

Nearer my Father's house,
Where the many mansions be;
Nearer the great white throne,
Nearer the crystal sea.

Nearer the bound of life,
Where we lay our burdens down;
Nearer leaving the cross!
Nearer gaining the crown!

But lying darkly between,
Winding adown through the night,
Is the silent, unknown stream,
That leads at last to the light.

Father, be near when my feet
Are slipping o'er the brink
For it may be I am nearer home—
Nearer now than I think.

Amen.

O Father of mercies, O God of all comfort, in whom we live and move and have our being, we pray Thine especial blessing upon these dear children of Thine. Oh, may they feel that underneath are Thine everlasting arms. May they know that though they pass through the rivers, Thou art with them; and through the waters, they shall not overflow them. Though they walk through the fire, they shall not be burned; neither shall the flames kindle upon them; for Thou art the Lord their God, the Holy One of Israel, their Saviour. Deal tenderly with them in their affliction. Comfort, strengthen, and stablish them. Lift up the light of Thy countenance upon them, and breathe upon them that peace which the world can neither give nor take away, that peace which passeth all understanding. Through Jesus Christ our Lord.

O Lord, Jesus Christ, who by Thy death didst take away the sting of death, grant unto us Thy servants so to follow in faith where Thou hast led the way that we may at length fall asleep peacefully in Thee and awake after Thy likeness through Thy mercy, who liveth with the Father and the Holy Spirit, one God, world without end. Amen.

O Almighty God, who hast knit together Thine elect in one communion and fellowship, in the mystical body of Thy Son, Christ our Lord, grant us grace so to follow Thy blessed saints in all virtuous and godly living, that we may come to those unspeakable joys which Thou hast prepared for those who unfeignedly love Thee. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Almighty God, with whom do live the spirits of those who depart hence in the Lord, and with whom the souls of the faithful, after they are delivered from the burden of the flesh, are in joy and felicity, we give Thee hearty thanks for the noble and gracious example of our beloved friend, Thy servant, who hath but yesterday fallen on sleep. Grant that we, with all those who are departed in the true faith of Thy holy name, may have our perfect consummation and bliss in Thy eternal and everlasting glory. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

O God, the God of the spirits of all flesh, in whose embrace all creatures live in whatsoever world or condition they be, we beseech Thee for him, Thy blessed child, whose name and dwelling place and every need Thou only knowest. Lord, vouchsafe him light and rest, peace and refreshment, joy and consolation in paradise, in the companionship of saints and loved ones, in the presence of Christ, in the ample folds of Thy great love. Grant that his life, so wonderful here, so full of love and tenderness, may yet unfold itself in Thy sight and find sweet employment in the spacious fields of eternity.

If in aught we can minister to his peace, be pleased of Thy love to let this be; and so keep us from every act which may deprive us of the sight of him as soon as our trial time is over or mar the fullness of our joy when the end of the day hath come.

Pardon, O Gracious Lord and Father, whatever is amiss in this our prayer, and let Thy will be done, for our will is blind and erring, but Thine is able to do exceedingly abundantly above all that we ask or think; and we only ask in the name and for the sake of Jesus Christ our Lord and Savior. Amen.

And now, Lord, support us all the day long of this troublous life until the shadows lengthen and the evening comes and the busy world is hushed and the fever of life is over and our work is done. Then in Thy mercy grant us a safe lodging, holy rest, and peace at the last. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Father, in Thy gracious keeping
Leave we now Thy servant sleeping.

Amen.

Miss Helen Howison sang the following three verses from the hymn Abide With Me:

Abide with me! Fast falls the eventide;
The darkness deepens: Lord, with me abide!
When other helpers fail, and comforts flee,
Help of the helpless, O abide with me!

I fear no foe with Thee at hand to bless:
Ills have no weight, and tears no bitterness.
Where is death's sting, where, grave, thy victory?
I triumph still, if Thou abide with me.

Hold Thou Thy cross before my closing eyes;
Shine through the gloom, and point me to the skies:
Heaven's morning breaks, and earth's vain shadows flee:
In life and death, O Lord, abide with me!

The Chaplain of the House of Representatives pronounced the benediction as follows:

May the peace of God that passeth all understanding keep your hearts and minds in the knowledge of God and of His Son, Jesus Christ, our Lord.

And now may the blessing of God Almighty, the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit remain with you always. Amen.

At 12 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m., the funeral ceremonies having been concluded, and Mrs. Robinson and relatives and friends of the deceased Senator and the invited guests retired from the Chamber.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in compliance with the unanimous-consent order entered on yesterday, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 44 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously entered, adjourned until Tuesday, July 20, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JULY 16, 1937

The House met at 11:40 a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, Father Almighty, at whose word night yields to day, be Thou our guide and we shall fear no ill. We rejoice that when we draw near to Thee, change and vicissitude pass away and the sense of security and stability brings us peace. Heavenly Father, we thank Thee that life is ever lord of death, and love can never lose its own. O Thou Holy One of God, despised and slain, may we dwell with Thee in Thy secret place and abide under Thy shadow. As Thy children, help us to go forth with brave hearts. Inspire us with a triumphant faith that sees through doubt, endures through temptation, and whenever fortune frowns, trusts Thee. Blessed Lord, we thank Thee for life; it is very brief, it is very grand, very sacred, and of infinite value, because it is the good gift of a good God. We pray in the name of our blessed Redeemer. Amen.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JULY 19, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Merciful God, our Heavenly Father, as we pause in prayer at Thy mercy seat may we hear Thee in conscience and in the dictates of a higher selfhood. Quicken our souls, for the best influence in all this world is a spiritualized manhood. We pray that by vision and by virtue we may be a voice for the oppressed, the suffering, and the sinning. Give us, we entreat Thee, a truthful knowledge of ourselves for the freshening of our ideals and for the answers of our fevered questions. Help us, we beseech Thee, for we are compounds of weakness and of strength, and the difficult task is to separate the bad from the good, the wise from the unwise. May this day be the beginning of a week of earnest living and earnest doing. Abide with our President, our Speaker, and the Congress, and be in all their counsels. Thine shall be the praise. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, July 16, 1937, was read and approved.

Rodgers, late an employee of the House, an amount equal to 6 months' compensation and an additional amount, not to exceed $250, to defray funeral expenses of the said Joseph G. Rodgers.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include two statements by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

SHALL WE SAVE OUR MARKETS FOR AMERICAN FATS AND OILS?

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD on the trade treaty with Norway.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, the National Grange and other farm organizations are seeking to enlist the cooperation of Congressmen, as well as fellow Grangers, dairymen, and other agricultural producers for the protection of an American industry now threatened by a proposed reciprocal trade agreement with Norway. I am now, and have been for over a quarter of a century, a member of the Grange. For the many years of my public life, as Oregon State senator and Governor, and now in Congress, I have been an uncompromising champion of the dairymen and have, as a member of the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives, interested myself in farm legislation. We have in Washington many kinds of lobbyists, not all of them helpful, but I have found at least two here who are unceasing in their efforts in behalf of American farmers—Fred Brenckman, of the National Grange, and A. M. Loomis, of the Dairy Union.

THE PRESENT EMERGENCY AND THE RECIPROCAL TARIFF ACT

Now, the friends of the farmer in Washington are working together on a matter which affects both producers and consumers of products which are prosaically called "fats and oils." It happens that the State Department is, under the Reciprocal Tariff Act, considering a trade agreement with Norway. Until the Reciprocal Tariff Act was passed, in 1934, all treaties were ratified by the Senate. Under that act, renewed this session, trade treaties or agreements are made by the State Department independently of the Congress. It appears to me that under this system farmers have been sacrificed for the benefit of industry. By this I mean that foreign agricultural products have been given our American markets in exchange for foreign markets for American automobiles and adding machines. Under the most-favored-nation clause of the act, lowering of tariff on any commodity for one nation gives all nations the same privilege. I voted against renewal of this act; now I want to help to overcome its disadvantages.

THE NORWEGIAN TREATY AND WHAT YOU CAN DO ABOUT IT

You will recall that Norway, "land of the midnight sun", sends its sailors forth into the ports of the world, and that its fishermen are famed as the most hardy and successful whalers. They bring home the products of their venturesome journeys at sea and Norwegian people must find a market for the whale oil, which is one of their chief exports. Our friends in Norway seek to have the United States, through a reciprocal-trade agreement, admit to our markets millions of pounds of whale oil to be sold here in competition with the products of the farmers of America. If this treaty goes through, this whale oil can be made into oleomargarine here at a cost of less than 8 cents a pound. As it is now, under a tariff which we have placed for the protection of our American farmers, the whale oil, which is worth around 5 cents on the world market, would have to be sold here raw for 8 cents. The Norwegians have always been large producers of fats and oils; formerly they were used for lamps, lanterns, and grease. Now their whale oil is a substitute for our lard and tallow and it is used for soap, as a butter substitute in oleomargarine, and for many other commercial purposes. This low-tariff wall of 3 cents a pound on certain foreign fats and oils was erected by Congress in 1934 for your protection. Shall we allow those who bargain for us through the State Department to breach that wall for the purpose of the hardy Norwegians if it will work injury to our own farm people who have been so hard-pressed since 1920?

In order to be entirely fair, we must consider several phases of this problem and we must be informed if we are to make an intelligent decision. I am asking the Members of this House to study this matter and to make representation to the State Department, telling them what they think of the proposal to place the American producers outside the protection of this small tax of 3 cents levied on foreign fats and oils. Remember, if the tax is remitted for Norway, it must, under the most-favored-nation clause, be remitted to all who have such products to send us.

WHAT PRODUCERS WILL BE AFFECTED?

If this 3-cent tariff or tax is removed by the State Department, it will lower the income of many types of producers in America, including dairymen, beef-cattle growers, and practically all the livestock industry, cottonseed, corn, and soybean growers. It will actually affect owners and workers on at least four-fifths of all the farms in the country. It is not merely one section of the country which would be affected but practically all sections, because there are so many kinds of animal and vegetable oils and fats produced. This slight tariff wall brought about increased prosperity which the American farmers have enjoyed recently. Because it gave the farmers buying power, it helped the businessmen and industry. Why should we Americans deny ourselves this advantage for the benefit of any European country?

This is not a romantic subject, but the figures of the vastness of the world's business in fats and oils are impressive. They constitute a very large percentage of the world's commerce in agricultural products. I was amazed when I learned the magnitude of this business. It has come about very largely through the scientific skill of modern chemists, and the advancement which has followed chemical research. Practically all the fats and oils, vegetable and animal, may be so refined and used that they come into competition with our own farm products raised throughout the whole country—such as butter, lard, tallow, cottonseed oil, soybean oil, and corn oil; also the oil produced through the fisheries. The quantities are so great that we measure them, like the national debt, in "billions." All imported fats and oils come into competition with our own agricultural products. Why should we give any other nation the privilege of flooding our markets with their oils and fats?

SPECIAL BENEFITS OF THE 3-CENT TAX

In 1936, 8,000,000 tons, or 16,000,000,000 pounds, of oil were moved in ships in foreign commerce. That is more than twice the amount of all the fats and oils produced in the United States, which turns out six and one-half billion pounds a year. Most of our domestic fats and oils are consumed within our own borders, as we export only small quantities. We have always been importers of certain oils, which have come in over the 3-cent tax, not intended to be prohibitive, but protective only. The noncompetitive oils are not included in this story, which is limited to those entering into competition with American farm producers. Last year, over this 3-cent wall, which was 4½ cents on some oils, we imported over 1,700,000,000 pounds of oil, or oil-bearing materials. These were subject to the tax and were admitted to our manufacturing industries and our commerce. I wonder if we need to import a billion and a half pounds of oils? Why can we not produce them here? We need new crops of which we have no surplus, and we very specially need crops which could take up the lands now used for our surplus crops, like wheat, corn, and cotton. The disposal and control of these surplus crops is a vexing national problem.

It is my belief that our dairy products today are 25 percent higher than they would be had we not placed this tax on imported ingredients for oleomargarine. The State Department is great and majestic, but, like other departments in Government, it should function for the everyday welfare of our people, and those who milk old Bess are an important part of our population.

The soybean industry, a fairly recent importation from the Asiatic shores, has grown tremendously. When I came to Congress in 1933, soybean oil was produced in this country to the extent of twenty-six and one-half million pounds; in 1936 it was nine times as much, or more than 225,000,000 pounds. Farmers who raised soybeans got 64 cents a bushel in 1933, and in 1935 the price had advanced to $1.02 a bushel, for the tremendous crop of nearly 45,000,000 bushels. This increase in production amounted in shining money to nearly $17,000,000 income for American farmers, and remember, it came from lands which might have been used for our troublesome surplus crops.

Tallow is one of the most important fats in our production. In 1933 it brought 3 cents a pound; today it brings 8½ cents, and the benefits due to this increased price are over $40,000,000. These welcome dollars were paid to stock farmers in better prices for their cattle, and helped dairy farmers because of the higher cost of competing oleomargarine.

What is the story as it relates to the cotton farmers of the South, who find the sale of cotton seed so important? When I first wrote "M. C." after my name, these farmers received $10.35 a ton for their seed. Last year it was $31.33 a ton, and the amount of additional money brought to cotton farmers because of that increased price was over $100,000,000.

This year we look for a 200,000,000-pound production of corn oil, a source of great profit to farmers. Peanut-oil production has increased since 1933 from twelve and one-half million to over 70,000,000 pounds. And so the amazing effects of encouragement of home production have been felt by farmers everywhere in our fair land.

Now, every pound of these oils produced in our country has meant money to American farmers, and the farmers have put that money into circulation for the benefit of industry and business. On the contrary, every pound of the foreign fats and oils landed on our shores benefits a competitor for our production and for our money. Are our farmers in a position to allow that unfair competition to rob them of much-needed income? That 3-cent tax has helped to build up the oil and fat industries of this country. Why not continue to demand that any necessary imports should come over the low protective wall of 3 cents a pound? Modern transportation has made the world so much of a neighborhood that it has been necessary to restudy and recast our trade relations, but every other nation has protected its own people. Unless we in the United States continue this policy of aiding those throughout the country who produce those different oils and fats, a large proportion of the 19,000,000,000 pounds of oils in the world's trade would be brought to American ports.

I am well aware that many of those employed in our industries and factories are made by propaganda to think they are adversely affected when farm prices are increased. They believe it is to their interest to be able to buy cheap food. No one but the greediest of greedy owners could justly take that viewpoint, because the workers, when given higher wages, are willing that the farmers should share their prosperity through higher prices for the products of their labor. Prices of farm products have never gone to the prohibitive point, and people of farm and factory should work together to help each other. All America prospers when the farmer receives a reasonable price for his product. He spends his income for the products of industries. His taxes, which are now harder to pay than they have ever been, help to fill the Public Treasury. Prosperity cannot come to the American farmer nor to the manufacturer if farm products must be sold for less than the cost of production. Are we in a position to lose the advantage in price and public income which we have enjoyed because of the 3-cent tax which has brought increased millions to the producers of this country and extended our farming operations?

PUBLIC REVENUE A FACTOR

Now, this matter of protection of so large and important a section of the American producers is not the only point at issue. Since we placed the tax on foreign fats and oils in 1934 our Government has collected about $69,000,000 from this duty. The collections on Philippine coconut oil must, under our agreement, be returned to that Government, but the net revenue to our Treasury through this 1934 3-cent tax has been more than $26,000,000. This is almost enough to fill the gap made by the 3½-percent farm interest rates which we have recently had such a struggle to retain through congressional action. Now the same sort of group which would require our farmers to pay the highest interest rates on Government money are proposing that those farmers should allow an important part of their markets in this country to be destroyed for the benefit of Norwegian fishermen. We honor the Norwegian people who have settled among us and have the most friendly feeling for their country, but we should not be called upon to make such a sacrifice when we are just coming out of an unprecedented agricultural depression.

We must help the Grange and other farm organizations who are seeking to do justice to American farmers. The State Department must not allow interference with our small protective tax, even in the trade agreement with Norway. The welfare of American farmers should not be sacrificed in the Norwegian reciprocal-trade agreements as they have recently been sacrificed in other trade agreements. Now is the time when we can protect our farm earnings by vigorous action.

This recital of increased prices for certain farm commodities during the past 4 years must impress every listener with the fact that something has been done for the farmer by the group controlling legislation in Washington over this period. The farmer has never had better friends in public life, but he must, of course, express his own opinion in an unmistakable manner.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the case of any person who was employed by any corporation, all of the stock of which was owned by the Federal Subsistence Homesteads Corporation of Delaware, and who was transferred to a position in the Department of the Interior with the same or substantially similar duties but at an increase in his rate of compensation, if there have been heretofore withheld or deducted from any amounts, otherwise payable to such person out of Government funds, any amount on account of any payment of salary to such person, subsequently disallowed or held to have been illegally made under any decision of the Comptroller General that such transfer to such position in the Department of the Interior constituted an administrative promotion within the provisions of section 7, as amended and extended, of the Treasury-Post Office Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1934, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to such person a sum equal to the amount so withheld or deducted.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF BOUNDARIES OF THE PAPAGO INDIAN RESERVATION (ARIZONA)

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1806, to extend the boundaries of the Papago Indian Reservation in Arizona.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever all privately owned lands except mining claims within the following-described area have been purchased and acquired as hereinafter authorized, the boundary of the Papago Indian Reservation in Arizona shall be extended to include the west half of section 4; west half of section 9, township 17 south, range 8 east; all of township 18 south, range 2 west, all of fractional township 19 south, range 2 west; and all of fractional townships 18 and 19 south, range 3 west, except sections 6, 7, 18, 19, 30, and 31 in township 18 south, range 3 west, Gila and Salt River meridian. This extension shall not affect any valid rights initiated prior to the approval hereof nor the reservation of a strip of land 60 feet wide along the United States-Mexico boundary made by proclamation of the President dated May 27, 1907 (35 Stat. 2136). The lands herein described when added to the Papago Indian Reservation as provided in this act shall become a part of said reservation in all respects and upon all the same terms as if said lands had been included in the Executive order issued by the President on February 1, 1917: Provided, That lands acquired hereunder shall remain tribal lands and shall not be subject to allotment to individual Indians.

SEC. 3. The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2188, to amend section 3 of the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984–988), relating to Indian lands in Arizona.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984–988), be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. (a) The Secretary of the Interior, if he shall find it to be in the public interest, is hereby authorized to restore to tribal ownership the remaining surplus lands of any Indian reservation heretofore opened, or authorized to be opened, to sale, or any other form of disposal by Presidential proclamation, or by any of the public-land laws of the United States: Provided, however, That valid rights or claims of any persons to any lands so withdrawn existing on the date of the withdrawal shall not be affected by this act: Provided further, That this section shall not apply to lands within any reclamation project heretofore authorized in any Indian reservation: Provided further, That this section shall not apply to the lands ceded and excluded from the San Carlos Indian Reservation in Arizona by the agreement of February 25, 1896, ratified by the act of June 10, 1896 (29 Stat. 358).

"(b)(1) The order of the Department of the Interior signed, dated, and approved by Hon. Ray Lyman Wilbur, as Secretary of the Interior, on October 28, 1932, temporarily withdrawing lands of the Papago Indian Reservation in Arizona from all forms of mineral entry or claim under the public-land mining laws, is hereby revoked and rescinded, and the lands of the said Papago Indian Reservation are hereby restored to exploration and location, under the existing mining laws of the United States, in accordance with the express terms and provisions declared and set forth in the Executive orders establishing said Papago Indian Reservation: Provided, That damages shall be paid to the superintendent or other officer in charge of the reservation for the credit of the owner thereof, for loss of any improvements on any land located for mining in such a sum as may be determined by the Secretary of the Interior to be the fair and reasonable value of such improvements: Provided further, That a yearly rental not to exceed 5 cents per acre shall be paid to the superintendent or other officer in charge of the reservation for deposit in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Papago Tribe for loss of the use or occupancy of any land withdrawn by the requirements of mining operations.

"(2) In the event any person or persons, partnership, corporation, or association desires a mineral patent, according to the mining laws of the United States, he or they shall first pay to the superintendent or other officer in charge of the reservation, for deposit in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Papago Tribe, the sum of $1 per acre in lieu of annual rental, as hereinbefore provided, to compensate for the loss of the use or occupancy of the lands withdrawn by the requirements of mining operations; but the sum thus deposited, except for a deduction of rental at the annual rate hereinbefore provided, shall be refunded to the applicant in the event that patent is not acquired: Provided, That an applicant for patent shall also pay to the superintendent or other officer in charge of the said reservation, for the credit of the owner thereof, damages for the loss of improvements not theretofore paid, in such a sum as may be determined by the Secretary of the Interior to be the fair value thereof.

"(3) Water reservoirs, charcos, water holes, springs, wells, or any other form of water development by the United States or the Papago Indians shall not be used for mining purposes under the terms of this act, except under permit from the Secretary of the Interior approved by the Papago Indian Council: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as interfering with or affecting the validity of the water rights of the Indians of this reservation: Provided further, That the appropriation of living water heretofore or hereafter affected by the Papago Indians is hereby recognized and validated subject to all the laws applicable thereto.

"(4) Nothing herein contained shall restrict the granting or use of permits for easements or rights-of-way; or ingress or egress over the lands for all proper and lawful purposes; and nothing contained herein, except as expressly provided, shall be construed as authority for the Secretary of the Interior, or any other person, to issue or promulgate a rule or regulation in conflict with the Executive order of February 1, 1917, creating the Papago Indian Reservation in Arizona or the act of February 21, 1931 (46 Stat. 1202)."

ADMISSION TO CITIZENSHIP OF CERTAIN ALIENS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6785, for the admission to citizenship of aliens who came into this country prior to February 5, 1917.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. LANZETTA. Will the gentleman withhold his request for a moment?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. LANZETTA. I believe the gentleman understands what this bill purports to do. It purports to give citizenship to people who have been here for 20, 30, and 40 years or more and who have been unable to become American citizens because of their inability to comply with the educational requirements of our naturalization law. This is a humane piece of legislation, and in view of the laws which are being passed by Congress barring aliens from employment on Government work and depriving them of W. P. A. positions, I think our Government owes it to these people who have been in this country a great number of years to admit them to citizenship. In most countries persons are admitted to citizenship on the basis of length of residence in the country.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. In most countries they cannot become citizens at all.

Mr. LANZETTA. I do not think that is true.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. This is the most liberal country in the world in that respect.

Mr. LANZETTA. I received information from various countries that citizenship is granted after a certain period of residence. My bill takes care of persons who in the main have American families.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. If the gentleman will not object to my request to pass this bill over without prejudice, I will be glad to look into the matter until the calendar is called the next time; otherwise I shall have to object.

Mr. LANZETTA. If the gentleman wishes to further study the bill, I shall not object.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

NATURALIZATION OF ALIEN VETERANS OF THE WORLD WAR

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4291, to extend further time for naturalization to alien veterans of the World War under the act approved May 25, 1932 (47 Stat. 165), to extend the same privileges to certain veterans of countries allied with the United States during the World War, and for other purposes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the author of the bill if this covers simply an extension of time granted in bills we have heretofore passed?

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, this bill is similar to the bill, H. R. 2739, passed in the Seventy-fourth Congress, but strikes out the words "having been denied entry into the military and naval forces of the United States." Many of these aliens joined the armies in France prior to our entry into the war, so they cannot prove they were denied service in this Army.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Does the gentleman state this bill is similar to bills we have heretofore passed?

Mr. LESINSKI. This is the same bill, except for the wording.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I want to know about the difference. Will the gentleman please state the difference again?

Mr. LESINSKI. The difference is that line 10 in the old bill is struck out, reading as follows:

Having been denied entry into the military and naval forces of the United States.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. To whom does the gentleman refer when he uses the phrase "having been denied"?

Mr. LESINSKI. The aliens who went across prior to our entering the war.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman states "having been denied."

Mr. LESINSKI. They left the country, so they could not be denied.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Is this the only class? The gentleman is not including anybody who has made application here but could not get in?

Mr. LESINSKI. No one at all, except the aliens who left the country before we were in the war.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Heretofore we have been very liberal, and I think justly so. I have always favored this kind of a bill letting in all of these veterans. However, we have extended the time several times. Is this going to open the door in any way so that we are going to give citizenship to some fellow who has complicated the situation by getting into some other country, and if we give him citizenship now it will complicate our relationship with some other country?

Mr. LESINSKI. No; it does not include such a man at all. The reason for introducing this bill is that some of the judges claimed they would not grant citizenship to these veterans on account of certain words in the Connally-Cannon bill, which have been struck out in my bill.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois if he has anything to offer.

Mr. MASON. This bill applies only to veterans of the World War who were aliens and joined the other armies before we got in.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision (a) of section 1 of the act entitled "An act to further amend the naturalization laws, and for other purposes", approved May 25, 1932 (47 Stat. 165; U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 8, sec. 392b (a)), shall, as herein amended, continue in force and effect to include petitions for citizenship filed prior to May 25, 1938, with any court having naturalization jurisdiction: Provided, That for the purposes of this act clause (1) of subdivision (a) of section 1 of the aforesaid act of May 25, 1932, is amended by striking out the words "all such period" and in lieu thereof inserting the words "the 5 years immediately preceding the filing of his petition."

SEC. 2. The provisions of section 1 of this act are hereby extended to include any alien lawfully admitted into the United States for permanent residence who departed therefrom between August 1914 and April 5, 1917, or who departed therefrom subsequent to April 5, 1917, for the purpose of serving, and actually served prior to November 11, 1918, in the military or naval forces of any of the countries allied with the United States in the World War and was discharged from such service under honorable circumstances: Provided, That before any applicant for citizenship under this section is admitted to citizenship, the court shall be satisfied by competent proof that he is entitled to and has complied in all respects with the provisions of this act; and that he was and had been a bona fide lawfully admitted resident in the United States for 2 years before the passage of this act.

SEC. 3. The Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, shall prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the enforcement of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. DONDERO. Not at all.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. If the gentleman will submit that request, I will be very much obliged to him.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

There was no objection.

ACCOMMODATIONS FOR HOLDING COURT AT SHAWNEE, OKLA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4605, relating to the accommodations for holding court at Shawnee, Okla.

S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. II, title 28, sec. 182), is amended by striking out ": Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Shawnee are furnished without expense to the United States."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "out", strike out the remainder of line 7 and down to and including line 10 and insert the following: "the period at the end of the proviso and adding the following: 'until, subject to the recommendation of the Attorney General of the United States with reference to providing such rooms and accommodations for holding court at Shawnee, a public building shall have been erected or other Federal space provided for court purposes in said city.'"

The committee amendment was agreed to.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, under such terms and conditions as he may deem proper, to exchange a tract of land of approximately 1,202 acres, near Smokemont, N. C., known as the Towstring tract and forming a part of the Cherokee Indian Reservation, for three tracts of land, totaling approximately 1,547 acres, in the vicinity of Ravensford, N. C., known as the Boundary Tree, Ravensford, and Tight Run tracts and forming a part of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park, conditioned upon the consent of the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians to the acquisition by the State of North Carolina of a right-of-way, which shall vary in width between 200 feet and 800 feet, for the Blue Ridge Parkway across the said reservation, and further conditioned upon payment to the said Cherokee Indians by the said State of North Carolina of such compensation as shall have been determined by the said Secretary as just and reasonable for the said right-of-way. When the foregoing conditions have been complied with, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby further authorized to grant to the State of North Carolina a right-of-way as hereinbefore provided for.

SEC. 2. The consent of the said Cherokee Indians to any proposed exchange and the acquisition of a right-of-way by the State of North Carolina as provided for herein shall be considered as expressed in the event the tribal council has, by the majority vote, agreed thereto within 60 days after the passage of this act, or in the event the said Cherokee Indians have, in a general election held thereafter and in which a majority vote in favor thereof, agreed thereto.

SEC. 3. No exchange shall be consummated pursuant to the provisions of this act unless and until the consent of the State of North Carolina is first had and obtained thereto as indicated by an act of its legislature.

SEC. 4. Upon the consummation of the exchange made pursuant to the provisions of this act, the lands transferred to the Indians shall be held in trust by the United States for the said Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians and shall be nontaxable and nonalienable the same as the balance of said lands and the lands transferred to the National Park Service shall become and be a part of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park and shall be subject to the provisions of the act of Congress approved August 25, 1916 (39 Stat. 535), as amended: Provided, That should any of the exchanged area or parkway right-of-way herein dealt with cease to be used for park purposes, the title thereto shall revert to its status prior to the exchange.

With the following committee amendments:

PAYMENT FOR CERTAIN LANDS APPROPRIATED BY THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4399, authorizing payment for certain lands appropriated by the United States, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to make this explanation: H. R. 4399 is an appropriation bill to pay for certain coal lands taken from the Indians of my State for Government purposes several years ago. Congress paid for all of the land—1,010,000 acres, mostly grazing land—with the exception of 36,000 acres of coal land. The Congress instructed the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain the value of the coal land and report back to the Congress, which was done. I introduced a bill for the appropriation of money to pay for it, which bill was killed in the last session of Congress. I anticipated there would be objection to this appropriation bill, so at the same time I introduced it I also introduced a companion bill, H. R. 3162, giving these Indians the right to go into the Court of Claims and establish the value of the coal lands and present any and all other claims they had against the Government. While I do not find any fault with the objection to the appropriation bill, I do hope that the next bill, H. R. 3162, which is merely a jurisdictional bill, will be allowed to pass at this time. If this Congress is unwilling, as directed by a former Congress, to assume the payment of this just claim, then the least we can do is to pass this jurisdictional bill and let the Indians involved present their claim to the Court of Claims. To do less is to deny justice to them, to ignore a solemn, just claim predicated upon a treaty, and to shut our ears and eyes to the facts.

Some gentlemen of this house, regardless of the merit of pending bills, object to their consideration on the ground of economy, but justice should not be denied or delayed on the principle of economy or any other principle. The premise of economy in delaying a meritorious claim is false and only forestalls the day of reckoning and at the same time overlooks the piling up of interest which, under our Supreme Court decisions, attaches from the inception of the claim and runs until it is ultimately paid. It is a simple thing to object to a bill which, by reason of its merit, will eventually pass, but such a course usually proves to be false economy. This jurisdictional bill should pass on its merit.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT]?

There was no objection.

CONFERRING JURISDICTION UPON THE UNITED STATES COURT OF CLAIMS TO EXAMINE CLAIMS OF VARIOUS INDIAN TRIBES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice. I have asked for a report on it and I have not yet received it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

There was no objection.

TO AMEND ACT OF MARCH 26, 1934

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7512, to amend the act approved March 26, 1934.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. HARLAN. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. In view of the fact that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER], author of the bill, is not present this morning on account of a death in his family, would the gentleman mind asking leave that the bill go over without prejudice?

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, instead of objecting to the present consideration of the bill, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. I did not know the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] was not present.

SALE BY SECRETARY OF WAR OF SUPPLIES AND EQUIPMENT TO PROSPECTIVE MANUFACTURERS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1972, to authorize the Secretary of War to sell, loan, or give samples of supplies and equipment to prospective manufacturers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it would seem to me there is no limitation here concerning the amount of property that the Secretary of War could give away. There is a strong inference in the bill that the property is given to contractors in anticipation of their bids, in order that they may have a better understanding of the needs of the departments.

Should there not be some restriction in the bill that would authorize the Secretary of War to give this property only for that purpose; and should not the words "in anticipation of a bid", or something of that nature, be inserted in the bill? I have every faith and confidence in the Secretary of War, of course, not to violate this, but some future Secretary of War might violate the confidence that we are reposing in him.

Mr. FADDIS. I may say to the gentleman that the committee took that into consideration during the hearings on the bill. We were assured that it was not necessary, that every safeguard was taken.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Then, may it be recorded that the intention of Congress is that the Secretary of War shall give this property to the contractors only in anticipation of a bid?

Mr. FADDIS. Surely. I am glad the gentleman brought that point out, because the point was brought out in the committee hearings also.

Mr. WOLCOTT. And the amount that is necessary is only that amount which will give the bidder a clear understanding of the needs of the Department.

Mr. FADDIS. Yes. I am glad the gentleman brought that point out.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, in his discretion and under rules, regulations, and limitations to be prescribed by him, to sell, loan, or give to contractors and private firms which are or may likely be manufacturers or furnishers of supplies and equipment for the use of the War Department or of the Army, under approved production plans, such drawings, manufacturing and other information, and samples of supplies and equipment to be manufactured or furnished, as he may consider will best promote the interests of national defense.

MAINE-NEW HAMPSHIRE INTERSTATE BRIDGE AUTHORITY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7542, granting the consent of Congress to a compact entered into by the States of Maine and New Hampshire for the creation of the Maine-New Hampshire Interstate Bridge Authority.

"INTERSTATE BRIDGE AUTHORITY FOR THE PORTSMOUTH-KITTERY BRIDGE AND APPROACHES THERETO

"COMPACT BETWEEN THE STATE OF MAINE AND THE STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE

"Whereas the single highway bridge serving as the sole facility for vehicular traffic over and across the Piscataqua River between the State of New Hampshire and the State of Maine is wholly inadequate to care for and accommodate such traffic over said river between the said two States and therefore causes such traffic congestion in and upon the streets and highways of the city of Portsmouth, N. H., and the town of Kittery, Maine, that the lives and property of the citizens of said communities and the travelers on said streets and highways are constantly endangered; and

"Whereas the antiquated and obsolete wooden pile bridge serving as the sole facility for railroad traffic over and across the Piscataqua River between the State of New Hampshire and State of Maine is wholly inadequate to care for and accommodate the railroad traffic between the said two States; and

"Whereas the narrow drawspan of said wooden pile railroad bridge, the sole facility permitting passage of water traffic up and down said river, is wholly inadequate to permit the passage of steamers and vessels of broad beam from the sea inland to serve the large industrial plants now situate on the banks of said river and therefore constitutes an obstacle to further enlargement of these industries and the development of numerous other industrial sites located so that passage through said bridge is absolutely necessary; and

"Whereas the only remedy for the conditions now existing is the construction of a bridge across said river which by coordinating the facilities required by vehicular and railroad traffic will remove the obstacle to water traffic; and

"Whereas the solution of this problem will result in great economy and benefit not only to the States of Maine and New Hampshire but to the Nation and will require the cordial cooperation of the States of New Hampshire and Maine in the encouragement of the investment of capital as well as the formulation and execution of the necessary plans and such result can best be accomplished through the joining of the two States of Maine and New Hampshire by and through a common agency.

"Now, therefore, the said States of New Hampshire and Maine do hereby agree and pledge each to the other as follows:

"ARTICLE I

"Said States agree to and pledge, each to the other, faithful cooperation in the planning, execution, and construction of a suitable vehicular and railroad bridge with suitable highway approaches thereto and drawspan therein; holding the same in high trust for the benefit of the Nation and of the said two States.

"ARTICLE II

"There is hereby created 'The Maine-New Hampshire Interstate Bridge Authority', which shall be a body corporate and politic having the powers and jurisdiction hereinafter enumerated and such other and additional powers as shall be conferred upon it by the legislature of either State, concurred in by the legislature of the other State, or by act or acts of Congress as hereinafter provided.

"ARTICLE III

"The Authority shall consist of six members, three residents of the State of New Hampshire and three residents of the State of Maine. The New Hampshire members to be chosen by the State of New Hampshire and the Maine members to be chosen by the State of Maine in the manner and for the term fixed and determined from time to time by the legislatures of either State, respectively. Any member may be removed or suspended from office as provided by the law of the State from which he shall be appointed.

"ARTICLE IV

"The members of the Authority shall, for the purpose of doing business, constitute a board and may adopt suitable rules and regulations for its management.

"ARTICLE V

"The Authority shall constitute a body both corporate and politic with full power and authority (1) to sue and be sued; (2) to have a seal and alter the same at pleasure; (3) to adopt from time to time and amend bylaws covering its procedure, rules and regulations governing use of the bridge, and any of the other services

The annual productive capacity for such lands shall be determined and declared as promptly as possible after the passage of this act, but until such determination and declaration are made the average annual cut therefrom shall not exceed one-half billion feet board measure: Provided, That timber from said lands in an amount not less than one-half billion feet board measure, or not less than the annual sustained yield capacity when the same has been determined and declared, shall be sold annually, or so much thereof as can be sold at reasonable prices on a normal market.

If the Secretary of the Interior determines that such action will facilitate sustained-yield management, he may subdivide such revested lands into sustained-yield forest units, the boundary lines of which shall be so established that a forest unit will provide, insofar as practicable, a permanent source of raw materials for the support of dependent communities and local industries of the region; but until such subdivision is made the land shall be treated as a single unit in applying the principle of sustained yield: Provided, That before the boundary lines of such forest units are established, the Department, after published notice thereof, shall hold a hearing thereon in the vicinity of such lands open to the attendance of State and local officers, representatives of dependent industries, residents, and other persons interested in the use of such lands. Due consideration shall be given to established lumbering operations in subdividing such lands when necessary to protect the economic stability of dependent communities. Timber sales from a forest unit shall be limited to the productive capacity of such unit and the Secretary is authorized, in his discretion, to reject any bids which may interfere with the sustained-yield management plan of any unit.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized, in his discretion, to make cooperative agreements with other Federal or State forest administrative agencies or with private forest owners or operators for the coordinated administration, with respect to time, rate, method of cutting, and sustained yield, of forest units comprising parts of revested or reconveyed lands, together with lands in private ownership or under the administration of other public agencies, when by such agreements he may be aided in accomplishing the purposes hereinbefore mentioned.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to classify, either on application or otherwise, and restore to homestead entry, or purchase under the provisions of section 14 of the act of June 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 1269), any of such revested or reconveyed land which, in his judgment, is more suitable for agricultural use than for afforestation, reforestation, stream-flow protection, recreation, or other public purposes.

Any of said lands heretofore classified as agricultural may be reclassified as timberlands, if found, upon examination, to be more suitable for the production of trees than agricultural use, such reclassified timberlands to be managed for permanent forest production as herein provided.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized, in his discretion, to lease for grazing any of said revested or reconveyed lands which may be so used without interfering with the production of timber or other purposes of this act as stated in section 1: Provided, That all the moneys received on account of grazing leases shall be covered either into the "Oregon & California land-grant fund" or the "Coos Bay Wagon Road grant fund" in the Treasury as the location of the leased lands shall determine, and be subject to distribution as other moneys in such funds: Provided further, That the Secretary is also authorized to formulate rules and regulations for the use, protection, improvement, and rehabilitation of such grazing lands.

SEC. 5. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into full force and effect. The Secretary of the Interior is further authorized, in formulating forest-practice rules and regulations, to consult with the Oregon State Board of Forestry, representatives of timber owners and operators on or contiguous to said revested and reconveyed lands, and other persons or agencies interested in the use of such lands.

In formulating regulations for the protection of such timberlands against fire, the Secretary is authorized, in his discretion, to consult and advise with Federal, State, and county agencies engaged in forest-fire-protection work, and to make agreements with such agencies for the cooperative administration of fire regulations therein: Provided, That rules and regulations for the protection of the revested lands from fire shall conform with the requirements and practices of the State of Oregon insofar as the same are consistent with the interests of the United States.

TITLE II

That on and after March 1, 1938, all moneys deposited in the Treasury of the United States in the special fund designated the "Oregon & California land-grant fund" shall be distributed annually as follows:

(a) Fifty percent to the counties in which the lands revested under the act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. 218), are situated, to be payable on or after June 30, 1938, and each year thereafter to each of said counties in the proportion that the total assessed value of the Oregon & California grant lands in each of said counties for the year 1915 bears to the total assessed value of all of said lands in the State of Oregon for said year, such moneys to be used as other county funds.

(b) Twenty-five percent to said counties as money in lieu of taxes accrued or which shall accrue to them prior to March 1, 1938, under the provisions of the act of July 13, 1926 (44 Stat. 915), and which taxes are unpaid on said date, such moneys to be paid to said counties severally by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, upon certification by the Secretary of the Interior, until such tax indebtedness as shall have accrued prior to March 1, 1938, is extinguished.

From and after payment of the above accrued taxes said 25 percent shall be accredited annually to the general fund in the Treasury of the United States until all reimbursable charges against the Oregon & California land-grant fund owing to the general fund in the Treasury have been paid: Provided, That if for any year after the extinguishment of the tax indebtedness accruing to the counties prior to March 1, 1938, under the provisions of Forty-fourth Statutes, page 915, the total amount payable under subsection (a) of this title is less than 78 percent of the aggregate amount of tax claims which accrued to said counties under said act for the year 1934, there shall be additionally payable for such year such portion of said 25 percent (but not in excess of three-fifths of said 25 percent), as may be necessary to make up the deficiency. When the general fund in the Treasury has been fully reimbursed for the expenditures which were made charges against the Oregon & California land-grant fund said 25 percent shall be paid annually, on or after June 30, to the several counties in the manner provided in subsection (a) hereof.

(c) Twenty-five percent to be available for the administration of this act, in such annual amounts as the Congress shall from time to time determine. Any part of such percent not used for administrative purposes shall be covered into the general fund of the Treasury of the United States: Provided, That moneys covered into the Treasury in such manner shall be used to satisfy the reimbursable charges against the Oregon & California land-grant fund mentioned in subsection (b) so long as any such charges shall exist.

All acts or parts of acts in conflict with this act are hereby repealed to the extent necessary to give full force and effect to this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, the House has just passed a bill entitled "A bill relating to the revested Oregon & California Railroad and reconveyed Coos Bay wagon road grant lands situated in the State of Oregon."

Of course, the title means very little to a Member unless he has read the bill and report very carefully. A few weeks ago when the bill providing for the purchase of additional land, known as the Sugar Pine Forests, which adjoins the Yosemite National Park, was pending, I objected to an amendment which would have provided that the Government would have been required to pay taxes to the counties where the land is located. I told the House at the time that this was a most unusual procedure and that we should not embark upon the general policy of the Government paying taxes to States and subdivisions of States on Government-owned land. I am pleased to say that the House defeated that amendment, and the bill as it became a law did not contain that provision.

During the debate on that bill I called attention to the fact that there was one case where the Government was paying nearly $300,000 a year to counties in Oregon in connection with some lands which were originally granted to the Oregon & California R. R. Co. and the Coos Bay Wagon Road Co., title to the lands being revested to the United States in 1916 and 1919 because the grantees violated the covenants contained in the granting acts. My statement might not have been entirely correct at the time when I said it was costing the Government that amount in taxes because some will claim that this money in part was paid out of the Federal Treasury as cost of administration. The real fact is that the taxes have been taken out of the receipts from the sale of lumber and it matters not whether or not the Government's share went directly for taxes or administration, because the receipts did not equal the necessary costs of administration and taxes. Nevertheless, it has been costing the Government that amount.

The bill that the House just passed corrects this situation, and further than that, it provides that $8,500,000 which was advanced to the Oregon and California land-grant fund, and which never has been repaid to the Treasury, will be repaid under this legislation, and still further, the cost of administration, taxes, and so forth, is to come out of the receipts from the sale of timber and not out of the Treasury of the United States.

If the Senate passes this bill and it is signed by the President in its present form, the taxpayers are going to be saved not only the amount that is being taken annually out of the Treasury at the present time, but further than that, the Treasury will be reimbursed for the $8,500,000 which was advanced under the terms of the act of June 9, 1916.

This is a meritorious piece of legislation and I am pleased to see the House take favorable action thereon.

I want to compliment the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DEROUEN], chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands, and his associates on the committee, for bringing in this bill. The gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY] presented the report and it was so complete and so easily understood that not one single objection was advanced. Mr. DEMPSEY deserves the thanks of the taxpayers for his work in this respect. I hope the Senate will pass the bill without delay.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2888, granting a leave of absence to settlers of homestead lands during the year 1937.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it seems to me we should stop this somewhere. We have been extending this privilege from year to year throughout the depression. I do not think it is fair to those who want to take up legitimate claims to continue this privilege year after year without some showing that the economic condition is such that it is necessitated, and for this reason I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MOTT. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

C., title 16, sec. 513), is hereby authorized to acquire by purchase any lands within the boundaries of the Angeles National Forest in the State of California which, in his judgment, should become the property of the United States in order that they may be so managed with other lands of the United States as to minimize soil erosion and flood damage, and to pay for said lands from the entire receipts from the sale of natural resources or occupancy of publicly owned lands within the said national forest, which receipts are hereby authorized to be appropriated for that purpose until said lands have been acquired.

With the following committee amendment:

AMENDING PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE ACT OF 1934

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7561) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes", approved March 24, 1934.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Contrary to what the bill might appear to be, I understand that it is a further limitation on immigration and I wish the gentleman from Hawaii would explain briefly what the bill is about.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is correct. When the Philippine Independence Act was passed it permitted, under certain conditions, the immigration of Philippine labor into the Territory of Hawaii. This repeals that condition and makes it impossible for any further immigration of that sort. I may say to the gentleman that the provision of the Independence Act was never invoked, and this repeal makes it no longer possible to invoke it in the future.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the last sentence of section 8 (a) (1) of said act which reads as follows: "This paragraph shall not apply to a person coming or seeking to come to the Territory of Hawaii who does not apply for and secure an immigration or passport visa, but such immigration shall be determined by the Department of the Interior on the basis of the needs of industries in the Territory of Hawaii", is hereby repealed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

AMENDING LIQUOR ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 1936

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7508) to amend the Liquor Enforcement Act of 1936.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. This bill apparently indicates that it is of minor importance, but as I read the bill I am very confident that from the standpoint of enforcement the Government of the United States is going back to the old prohibition days, provided the law is actually enforced. If this bill becomes a law, and it is enforced, there is absolutely no doubt but that it is going to require an army of enforcement agents to carry out its purposes. This bill indicates by its wording it would merely require the Federal Government to protect States which permit the manufacture of only beer and wine, regardless of the alcoholic content, from the importation of distilled spirits. The bill in effect would require the Government to protect all States, whether wet or dry, against the importation of distilled spirits in violation of their laws.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, the bill is in the exact language of the second section of the twenty-first amendment. If the Congress meant what it said, specifically and impliedly, when it submitted the twenty-first amendment, then the importation or transportation of intoxicating liquors into States for sale or use in violation of their laws should not only be prohibited, but some penalty should be provided for the violation of that provision of the twenty-first amendment.

The creation of a new enforcement agency is not contemplated by this bill. This act, if passed, would be exactly like many other Federal statutes, subject to enforcement by the Department of Justice, just as many other Federal statutes are enforced. There is no ground for the gentleman's apprehension that any great body of enforcement officials will be created. There is no purpose that any such body should be created. This is merely an act of good conscience. This is merely saying that the thing prohibited by the second section of the twenty-first amendment shall be made criminal and a means provided for enforcement of that provision of the Constitution by providing that its violation shall be punished as for a misdemeanor. I cannot conceive of any reason why any Member should object to such a provision. Without it we have the constitutional prohibition against the importation of intoxicating liquors into States for use or sale in violation of their laws without any penalty for its violation.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. This bill carries out the promises that the gentleman from Missouri and all others made——

Mr. COCHRAN. I did not yield for a speech. What does the bill do, in the gentleman's opinion?

Mr. MICHENER. I am telling the gentleman. This carries out the promise that the gentleman from Missouri, and all others who favored resubmission of the eighteenth amendment, made in Congress, made on the floor, at the time of the submission. I was one of those who voted to resubmit the eighteenth amendment. I did it, as the gentleman did, on the promise and with the understanding that dry States, States desiring to be dry, would be protected against importation from wet States. Every Member of Congress understood that. That was a specific promise.

Mr. COCHRAN. Why not amend the bill, then, to include only the dry States?

Mr. MICHENER. The Committee on the Judiciary, regardless of how they feel today on the wet and dry question, have reported this bill unanimously for the purpose of carrying out the terms of the twenty-first amendment to the Constitution, and for the express purpose of keeping the word of those who believed in resubmitting the eighteenth amendment. I hope the gentleman, because of lack of information, will not object to this bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will say to the gentleman that I do not have any lack of information. I made an inquiry about this bill. I am just looking at it from the standpoint of common sense. We do not want another army of prohibition agents. If you want to protect the dry States, why not amend your bill so as to limit it to the dry States? Why do you say any State?

Mr. TARVER. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. COCHRAN. Not right now, as I have asked the gentleman from Michigan a question. Why do you say any State?

Mr. MICHENER. If the gentleman will read the bill——

Mr. COCHRAN. I have the bill in front of me. I asked the gentleman the question, Why do you say any State, when you want to protect only the dry States? As far as protecting the dry States is concerned, I am with the gentleman. Where is there any report from the Attorney General? Where is there any report from the Federal Alcohol Administration? Where is there any report from the Treasury Department on this bill?

Mr. MICHENER. Where is there any report from a country constable? You might go on down the line.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, the regular order.

Mr. MICHENER. If you are going to require reports from everybody, why not go all the way?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill go over without prejudice.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I can see nothing that can be accomplished by the bill going over without prejudice. If the gentleman is opposed to the bill, let him object. I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the bill today. They can call it up on the next Consent Calendar date, and in the meantime perhaps I can get a report.

PENSION BENEFITS TO PEACETIME VETERANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7531, to afford protection of pension benefits to peacetime veterans placed on the pension rolls after March 19, 1933, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I may say I am not going to object, but I am merely asking for information. Why is it necessary for the Congress of the United States to repeal an Executive order? Under the authority which we gave to the President to issue Executive orders, at the time the economy bill was enacted, one of which this seeks to abrogate or repeal, did we not give him authority to countermand his own Executive orders? Is there not anybody on the majority side who can explain why it takes an act of Congress to repeal an Executive order, and whether this is the usual thing or whether this is the exception to the general rule?

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. I do not claim to have any special knowledge about the matter, but my recollection is that when the Economy Act was passed we provided that any regulations or Executive orders that were in effect 2 years after date would become law. That is my impression. Some member of the committee may have a different recollection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think, as a matter of precedent, we should decide whether it is necessary for the Congress to repeal Executive orders, and whether we retain to ourselves authority to amend Executive orders in the same authorization.

Is not somebody here from the Committee on Pensions who can explain why this bill is necessary, and why another Executive order repealing Executive Order 6098 is not all that is required?

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. Does not the gentleman recall that that provision was in the act? I am not positive, but that is my recollection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not recall whether it was in the act or not. That might be the reason for it, but surely somebody should know whether it is the reason for it or not. Apparently I am not going to get the information, but I have no objection to the bill, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph X of Executive Order No. 6098, dated March 31, 1933 (Veterans' Regulation No. 10 (38 U. S. C., ch. 12, appendix)), as amended by paragraph 1, Executive Order No. 6568, dated January 19, 1934 (Veterans' Regulation No. 10 (c). is hereby canceled as of the date of enactment of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INDIAN WAR PENSIONS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5787, granting pensions and increases of pensions to certain soldiers who served in the Indian wars from 1817 to 1898, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the first day of the next month after the approval of this act, the rate of pension to surviving soldiers of the various Indian wars and campaigns who are now on the pension rolls or who may hereafter be placed thereon under the provisions of the acts of July 27, 1892; June 27, 1902, and May 30, 1908, as amended by the act of February 1, 1913; or under the act of March 4, 1917, or the act of March 3, 1927, shall be $65 per month: Provided, That any such survivor who is now or hereafter may become, on account of age or physical or mental disability, helpless or blind, or so nearly helpless or blind as to need or require the regular aid and attendance of another person, shall be paid the rate of $72 per month: Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to reduce any pension under any law, public or private, and that hereafter pensions granted under this act or acts referred to in this section shall commence from the date of filing of application therefor in the Veterans' Administration.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That from and after the first day of the next month after the enactment of this act, all surviving soldiers of the various Indian wars and campaigns who are now on the pension rolls or who may hereafter be placed thereon under the provisions of the acts of July 27, 1892, June 27, 1902, and May 30, 1908, as amended by the act of February 19, 1913, or under the act of March 4, 1917, or the act of March 3, 1927, shall be entitled to receive a pension not exceeding $55 per month and not less than $20 per month, proportioned to the degree of inability to earn a support as determined by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, and in determining such inability each and every infirmity shall be duly considered, and the aggregate of the disabilities shown be rated: Provided, That any such person who has reached the age of 62 years shall be entitled to receive a pension of $25 a month; in case such person has reached the age of 68 years, $35 a month; in case such person has reached the age of 72 years, $45 a month; and in case such person has reached the age of 75 years, $55 a month: Provided further, That any such person who is now or hereafter may become, on account of age or physical or mental disabilities, helpless or blind, or so nearly helpless or blind as to need or require the regular aid and attendance of another person, shall be paid the rate of $72 a month: And provided further, That no one while an inmate of the United States Soldiers' Home or of any National or State soldiers' home shall be paid more than $50 per month under this act.

"SEC. 2. That the increased rates of pension herein provided shall be effective from and after the first day of the month following the enactment of this act as to those then in receipt of Indian war service pension, and as to those with claims then pending who are shown to be entitled to pension under one of the acts enumerated herein, and as to all other cases where entitlement under this act is shown, such pension shall commence from the date of filing application therefor in the Veterans' Administration on and after the enactment of this act, and in such form as may be prescribed by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs: Provided, That pension of $72 per month granted under this act on the basis of requiring the regular aid and attendance of another person shall commence from the date of receipt in the Veterans' Administration of the evidence showing the requisite condition or the date of filing application therefor on and after the enactment of this act, whichever is the later date, but such pension of $72 per month shall not be awarded to any person for any period during which he is maintained in an institution by the United States Government or a political subdivision thereof and is being furnished with nursing or attendant service: Provided further, That in no event shall the rates of pension provided in this act be effective prior to the first day of the month following the enactment thereof."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

OIL WORLD EXPOSITION, HOUSTON, TEX.

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 385, authorizing the President to invite the States of the Union and foreign countries to participate in the Oil World Exposition at Houston, Tex., to be held October 11 to 16, 1937, inclusive.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice there are two resolutions providing for oil expositions. Will not some Member on the majority side explain this resolution?

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. I shall be pleased to explain it. In the first place, this bill will not cost the Government 5 cents expense. The expense will be borne by the city of Houston and the State authorities.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. There will be no expense to the Federal Government?

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. None whatever.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And there is no intention on the part of the sponsors to come back at any future time to try to secure a Federal contribution?

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. Absolutely none.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized to invite by proclamation, or in such other manner as he may deem proper, the States of the Union and all foreign countries to participate in the proposed Oil World Exposition, to be held at Houston, Tex., from October 11 to 16, 1937, inclusive, for the purpose of exhibiting samples of fabricated and raw products of all countries produced by the petroleum industry; and the exhibiting of the tools and equipment used by the industry; and bringing together buyers and sellers for promotion of trade and commerce in such products.

SEC. 2. All articles that shall be imported from foreign countries for the sole purpose of exhibition at the Oil World Exposition upon which there shall be a tariff or customs duty shall be admitted free of the payment of duty, customs, fees, or charges, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; but it shall be lawful at any time during the exhibition to sell any goods or property imported for and actually on exhibition, subject to such regulations for the security of the revenue and for the collection of import duties as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided, That all such articles when sold or withdrawn for consumption or use in the United States shall be subject to the duty, if any, imposed upon such articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of withdrawal; and on such articles which shall have suffered diminution or deterioration from incidental handling and necessary exposure, the duty, if paid, shall be assessed according to the appraised value at the time of withdrawal for consumption or use, and the penalties prescribed by law shall be enforced against any person guilty of any illegal sale, use, or withdrawal.

SEC. 3. That the Government of the United States is not by this resolution obligated to any expense in connection with the holding of such exposition.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out section 2 and insert the following:

"SEC. 2. That all articles which shall be imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at the Oil World Exposition to be held at Houston, Tex., from October 11 to 16, 1937, inclusive, by the Oil World Exposition, or for use in constructing, installing, or maintaining foreign buildings or exhibits at the said exposition, upon which articles there shall be a tariff or customs duty, shall be admitted without payment of such tariff, customs duty, fees, or charges under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; but it shall be lawful at any time during or within 3 months after the close of the said exposition to sell within the area of the expcsition any articles provided for herein, subject to such regulations for the security of the revenue and for the collection of import duties as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That all such articles, when withdrawn for consumption or use in the United States, shall be subject to the duties, if any, imposed upon such articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of their withdrawal; and on such articles which shall have suffered diminution or deterioration from incidental handling or exposure, the duties, if payable, shall be assessed according to the appraised value at the time of withdrawal from entry hereunder for consumption or entry under the general tariff law: Provided further, That imported articles provided for herein shall not be subject to any marking requirements of the general tariff laws, except when such articles are withdrawn for consumption or use in the United States, in which case they shall not be released from customs custody until properly marked, but no additional duty shall be assessed because such articles were not sufficiently marked when imported into the United States: Provided further, That at any time during or within 3 months after the close of the exposition any article entered hereunder may be abandoned to the Government or destroyed under customs supervision, whereupon any duties on such article shall be remitted: Provided further, That articles which have been admitted without payment of duty for exhibition under any tariff law and which have remained in continuous customs custody or under a customs exhibition bond and imported articles in bonded warehouse under the general tariff law may be accorded the privilege of transfer to and entry for exhibition at the said exposition under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: And provided further, That the Oil World Exposition shall be deemed, for customs purposes only, to be the sole consignee of all merchandise imported under the provisions of this act, and that the actual and necessary customs charges for labor, services, and other expenses in connection with the entry, examination, appraisement, release, or custody, together with the necessary charges for salaries of customs officers and employees in connection with the supervision, custody of, and accounting for articles imported under the provisions of this act, shall be reimbursed by the Oil World Exposition to the Government of the United States under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and that receipts from such reimbursements shall be deposited as refunds to the appropriation from which paid in the manner provided for in section 524 of the Tariff Act of 1930."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INTERNATIONAL PETROLEUM EXPOSITION, TULSA, OKLA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7127, authorizing the President to invite the States of the Union and foreign countries to participate in the International Petroleum Exposition at Tulsa, Okla., to be held May 14 to May 21, 1938.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the same questions concerning this exposition.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, the same replies fit this situation as those given by the gentleman from Texas to the last situation. No money is being asked of the Federal Government. The only thing sought from the Federal Government by this bill is the usual provision regarding the handling of property brought in, so far as the draw-back of customs duties is concerned. If the property is sold here, they pay duty, of course.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The sponsors of this project will not come back later to ask for any money from the Federal Government?

Mr. DISNEY. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized to invite by proclamation, or in such other manner as he may deem proper, the States of the Union and all foreign countries to participate in the proposed International Petroleum Exposition, to be held at Tulsa, Okla., from May 14, 1938, to May 21, 1938, inclusive, for the purpose of exhibiting samples of fabricated and raw products of all countries used in the petroleum industry and bringing together buyers and sellers for promotion of trade and commerce in such products.

SEC. 2. SEC. 3. That the Government of the United States is not by this act obligated to any expense in connection with the holding of such exposition and is not hereafter to be obligated other than for suitable representation thereat.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SPECIAL MEXICAN CLAIMS COMMISSION

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 437, to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a commission for the settlement of the special claims comprehended within the terms of the convention between the United States of America and the United Mexican States concluded April 24, 1934", approved April 10, 1935, and to redefine the jurisdiction of the Special Mexican Claims Commission in certain particulars.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Whereas the act entitled "An act to establish a commission for the settlement of the special claims comprehended within the terms of the convention between the United States of America and the United Mexican States concluded April 24, 1934", approved April 10, 1935 (49 Stat. 149), provides for the establishment of the Special Mexican Claims Commission and confers upon that Commission jurisdiction to hear and determine all claims against the Republic of Mexico, notices of which were filed with the Special Claims Commission, United States and Mexico, established by a convention of September 10, 1923, in which the said Commission failed to award compensation, except such claims as may be found by the committee provided for in the Special Claims Convention of April 24, 1934, to be general claims and recognized as such by the General Claims Commission; and

Whereas the said Special Claims Convention of April 24, 1934, provides that the jurisdiction in and validity of the claims found by the said committee to be general claims shall be determined in each case when examined and adjudicated by the commissioners or umpire in accordance with the provisions of the General Claims Convention of September 8, 1923, and the protocol of April 24, 1934, or the Special Claims Convention of September 10, 1923, and the protocol of June 18, 1932, in the event it shall be found by the commissioners or umpire to have been improperly eliminated from the special claims settlement; and

Whereas certain claims filed with the said Special Claims Commission, United States and Mexico, established by the said convention of September 10, 1923, were found by the said committee to be general claims, but have not yet been the subject of any determination by the said General Claims Commission; and

Whereas the said Special Mexican Claims Commission, established in pursuance of the said act approved April 10, 1935, expires by the terms of the said act on August 31, 1937; and

Whereas, by the terms of the protocol of April 24, 1934, between the United States of America and the United Mexican States, the said General Claims Commission expires on October 24, 1937, and the two Governments have undertaken, upon the basis of the joint report of the members of the said Commission, to conclude a convention for the final disposition of the claims pending before the said Commission, the said convention to take either the form of an agreement for an en-bloc settlement of the said claims or the form of an agreement for the disposition of the claims upon their individual merits by reference to an umpire; and

Whereas the committee provided for in the Special Claims Convention of April 24, 1934, found that the amount to be paid by the Government of Mexico in settlement of the special claims comprehended in that convention was $5,448,020.14, it being understood that the sum thus determined was susceptible of increase after express decision of the General Claims Commission in case the said Commission might decide to be within the jurisdiction of the Special Commission any one or more of the claims which the said committee found to be general claims; and

Whereas the said Special Mexican Claims Commission, in the event that the total amount of the awards made by it upon all claims is greater than the amount which the Government of Mexico has agreed to pay to the Government of the United States in satisfaction of the claims, is required by the said act approved April 10, 1935, to reduce the awards on a percentage basis to such amount; and

Whereas in the circumstances set forth, it is not now possible to ascertain which, if any, of the claims found by the said committee to be general claims will be found by the said General Claims Commission to be special claims, nor what will be the amount of the total en-bloc settlement provided for in the said Special Claims Convention of April 24, 1934; and

Whereas payments on awards of the said Special Mexican Claims Commission from funds paid to the Government of the United States by the Government of Mexico under the Special Claims Convention of April 24, 1934, should not, in justice to the beneficiaries, be deferred until the question of the jurisdiction of the claims now pending before the General Claims Commission, by virtue of the classification of such claims as general claims by the joint committee, shall have been finally determined in the manner provided for in the said convention of April 24, 1934, or in the said protocol of the same date: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the jurisdiction of the Special Mexican Claims Commission established in pursuance of the act approved April 10, 1935 (49 Stat. 149), shall not be deemed to include any of the claims found by the committee provided for in the Special Claims Convention of April 24, 1934, to be general claims.

SEC. 2. That for the purposes of the reduction of awards on a percentage basis as provided for in section 4 of the act approved April 10, 1935 (49 Stat. 149), the amount which the Government of Mexico has agreed to pay to the Government of the United States in satisfaction of the claims shall, subject to the provision in section 3 hereof, be deemed to be the sum of $5,448,020.14, set forth in the report of the said committee provided for in the said convention of April 24, 1934.

SEC. 3. That in the event of the reclassification as special claims of any of the claims found by the said committee to be general claims, the claims so reclassified shall be passed upon by a commission to be established in conformity with the said act of April 10, 1935, and the total amount payable by the Government of Mexico to the Government of the United States on account of the claims so reclassified, together with interest on all deferred payments under the Special Claims Convention of April 24, 1934, shall be added to the sum of $5,448,020.14 set forth in the report of the said committee. The total amount awarded by the commission so established upon the claims so reclassified shall be added to the total amount of the original awards made by the Special Mexican Claims Commission, and any necessary readjustment of the awards of the Special Mexican Claims Commission and those that may be made by the commission to be established pursuant to this section shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury on the basis prescribed by section 4 of the act approved April 10, 1935.

SEC. 4. Upon the certification to the Secretary of the Treasury of the awards of the Special Mexican Claims Commission, he shall proceed to make payments as provided for in section 9 of the act approved April 10, 1935; and upon the certification to the Secretary of the Treasury of awards upon any claims reclassified as special claims he shall after making the readjustments provided for in section 3 of this resolution, accord priority of payment on such awards until the beneficiaries thereof shall have been placed upon an equal percentage basis as to payments with the beneficiaries of awards of the Special Mexican Claims Commission.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title of the bill was amended to read: "Joint resolution relative to determination and payment of certain claims against the Government of Mexico."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6916, to amend the laws relating to enlistments in the Coast Guard, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act of May 26, 1906, as amended (34 Stat. 200; U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 14, sec. 35), is hereby further amended to read as follows:

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the consideration of bill H. R. 6785, for the admission to citizenship of aliens who came into this country prior to February 5, 1917, No. 286 on the Consent Calendar.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall object unless the gentleman agrees to an amendment to which we agreed a while ago.

Mr. KRAMER. I agree to the amendment the gentleman proposes to offer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a new subdivision is hereby added to section 4 of the Naturalization Act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat. 596), as amended, to read as follows:

LEAVE OF ABSENCE TO SETTLERS OF HOMESTEAD LANDS DURING YEAR 1937

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the consideration of the bill H. R. 2888, granting a leave of absence to homestead settlers during the year 1937, No. 371 on the Consent Calendar.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman if this differs in any way from another bill which we considered earlier in the session concerning these rights and, second, may I ask him, what is the economic necessity for continuing from year to year the prohibition against these people exercising their rights under the homestead laws in order to acquire title?

Mr. MOTT. In answer to the first question, I may say that the bill presently under consideration differs from the former one in that it does not contain the Indian provision. As to the second question, the economic reason, there are a great many homesteaders throughout the United States who during the past 2 or 3 years have found it impossible to stay upon their land and to comply with the laws and the regulations and at the same time make a living. This bill simply permits them to go off of the land temporarily, after they have made a showing that they are not able to make a living by staying on the land and after that showing has been supported by the affidavits of two disinterested parties.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know what the bill purports to accomplish?

Mr. MOTT. The bill provides that a homestead entryman having taken up a homestead and who finds it impossible on account of economic conditions during the present year to stay on his land and make a living, and who is required to go off his land during that period in order to make a living, may be permitted to go off the land during the present year if he makes a sufficient showing and if that showing is supported by the affidavits of two disinterested parties who are familiar with the situation. The bill further provides an entryman receiving permission to go off his land will not have that time included within the time under which he is required to take up his homestead.

However, his time will be extended during the period he is off the land. It is a very interesting bill and affects homesteaders in all the Western States.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOTT. Certainly.

Mr. COSTELLO. I notice in the committee report a letter from the Department of the Interior in which the suggestion is made that two amendments be added to the bill. The one on page 2 would insert, in line 20, the words "or purchaser of", so that the line would read "any entryman or purchaser of ceded Indian lands", which would include the purchaser along with the entryman. However, I notice the committee did not add that amendment.

Mr. MOTT. My recollection is that the committee had no objection to the amendment. I have no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. There is another amendment at quite some length which the Department recommended in its report, and this amendment is known as section 5.

Mr. MOTT. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. COSTELLO. Is the gentleman planning to offer section 5 as an amendment to the bill?

Mr. MOTT. I was not planning to, but I would have no objection to such an amendment being offered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon for the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any homestead settler or entryman who, during the calendar year 1937 should find it necessary, because of economic conditions, to leave his homestead to seek employment in order to obtain the necessaries of life for himself or family or to provide for the education of his children, may, upon filing with the register of the district his affidavit, supported by corroborating affidavits of two disinterested persons, showing the necessity of such absence, be excused from compliance with the requirements of the homestead laws as to residence, cultivation, improvement, expenditures, or payment of purchase money, as the case may be, during all or any part of the calendar year 1937, and said entries shall not be open to contest or protest because of failure to comply with such requirements during such absence; except that the time of such absence shall not be deducted from the actual residence required by law, but a period equal to such absence shall be added to the statutory life of the entry: Provided, That any entrymen holding an unperfected entry on ceded Indian lands may be excused from the requirements of residence upon the conditions provided herein, but shall not be entitled to extension of time for the payment of any installment of the purchase price of the land except upon payment of interest, in advance, at the rate of 4 percent per annum on the principal of any unpaid purchase price from the date when such payment or payments became due to and inclusive of the date of the expiration of the period of relief granted hereunder.

SEC. 2. Any homestead settler or entryman, including any entryman on ceded Indian lands, who is unable to make the payments due on the purchase price of his land on account of economic conditions, shall be excused from making any such payment during the calendar year 1937 upon payment of interest, in advance, at the rate of 4 percent per annum on the principal of any unpaid purchase price from the date when such payment or payments became due to and inclusive of the date of the expiration of the period of relief granted hereunder.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: Page 2, line 20, after the word "entryman", strike out the word "on" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "or purchaser of."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer a further amendment, to add a new section to the bill at the end, to be known as section 3.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: After line 3, on page 3, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 3. Any homestead entryman or purchaser of ceded Indian land who is delinquent in the payment of the purchase money or interest, or both, due on the land embraced in his entry, entries, purchase, or purchases, and who is unable to make payment thereof in accordance with existing laws, shall be accorded the privilege of relinquishing any subdivision, or subdivisions, as shown on the approved plat, of his entry, entries, purchase, or purchases, so that the purchase money paid on the whole of such entry, entries, purchase, or purchases, will be sufficient to complete payment on the lands retained, which retained lands shall be in reasonably compact form. Relinquishments heretofore made may be accepted under the provisions of this section."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF THE LIQUOR ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 1936

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, a moment ago I objected to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7508) to amend the Liquor Enforcement Act of 1936.

I now ask unanimous consent to return to that bill and consider it. I realize the bill can be passed by suspension, so I do not want to take up the time of the House, although I feel my objection was sound.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to return to the consideration of the bill H. R. 7508. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 (a) of an act approved June 25, 1936, known as the Liquor Enforcement Act of 1936 (U. S. Stat. L., vol. 49, ch. 815, p. 1928), be, and the same is, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. (a) Whosoever shall import, bring, or transport any intoxicating liquor into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein in violation of the laws of said State, Territory, or possession of the United States, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SAN CARLOS APACHE INDIANS

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the consideration of the bill (S. 1231) authorizing payment to the San Carlos Apache Indians for the lands ceded by them in the agreement of February 25, 1896, ratified by the act of June 10, 1896, and reopening such lands to mineral entry.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I believe I shall ask that this bill be passed over without prejudice for the purpose of securing a report on it. I think the bill should be considered on the next day the Consent Calendar is called. I had a memorandum in reference to this bill which warranted me in taking the action I did. I, therefore, object, Mr. Speaker.

CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN AUXILIARY VESSELS FOR THE NAVY

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 2193) to authorize the construction of certain auxiliary vessels for the Navy, with House amendments, insist on the amendments of the House, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Mr. VINSON of Georgia, Mr. DREWRY of Virginia, and Mr. MILLARD.

CONSENT CALENDAR

TRANSFER OF CANCELED CHECK TO THE GOVERNOR OF ALASKA

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5809) authorizing the transfer of canceled check to the Governor of Alaska. This bill was passed over without prejudice.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, at the time this bill was first called I asked unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice, with the thought that it might be better to have this check preserved in the Nation's Capital as an object of interest to the many visitors who come to the Capital from all over the country. However, I have been informed by the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND] that the check is not on display in the Capital but is simply stored in a vault, and that the check might become an object of public interest if it were transferred to Alaska and made available there for sightseers to observe. For this reason I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida to return to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is authorized and directed to deliver to the Governor of the Territory of Alaska for transfer into the custody and retention by the Territorial Historical Library and Museum of said Territory at Juneau, Alaska, the original check and warrant issued for the purchase of Alaska from Russia by the United States, for the sum of $7,200,000, pursuant to the Treaty of Cession of March 30, 1867

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEVEES, FLOOD WALLS, AND DRAINAGE STRUCTURES IN OHIO RIVER BASIN

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 7646) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control and for other purposes", approved June 22, 1936, as amended.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes", approved June 22, 1936, is hereby amended by adding a third paragraph reading as follows under the heading "Ohio River Basin" in section 5:

"Levees, floodwalls, and drainage structures: Construction of levees, floodwalls, and drainage structures for the protection of cities and towns in the Ohio River Basin, the projects to be selected by the Chief of Engineers with the approval of the Secretary of War, in accordance with the report of the Chief of Engineers in House Committee on Flood Control Document No. 1, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, at a cost not to exceed $24,877,000 for construction which is hereby authorized to be appropriated for this purpose: Provided, That the protection for Pittsburgh, Pa., is to be interpreted as applying to the metropolitan district of Pittsburgh: Provided further, That the local cooperation required by section 3 is complied with: Provided further, That any funds appropriated for the fiscal year 1938 to carry out the provisions of the Flood Control Act of June 22, 1936, may be used for plant, material, supervisory, and skilled services necessary in the execution of the projects authorized herein, with relief labor furnished under the provisions of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to approve the expenditure of not to exceed $300,000 per year, from any appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for flood control, in removing accumulated snags and other debris and clearing of channels in navigable streams and tributaries thereof when in the opinion of the Chief of Engineers such work is advisable in the interest of flood control: Provided, That not more than $25,000 shall be expended for this purpose on any single stream in any one year.

SEC. 3. That, in order to further the declaration of policy and principles declared in sections 1 and 2 of the Flood Control Act approved June 22, 1936, and to supplement the preliminary examinations and surveys which the Secretary of War has heretofore been authorized and directed to make of waterways with a view to the control of their floods, the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause preliminary examinations and surveys to be made for run-off and water-flow retardation and soil-erosion prevention on the watersheds of said waterways, the costs thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for such purposes.

SEC. 4. That section 3 of the act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes", approved June 22, 1936, is hereby amended by adding the following subsection (d):

"(2) Agreements or covenants as to the permanent use of such lands; and

"(3) Contributions in money, services, materials, or otherwise to any operations conferring such benefits."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, please remind me when I have spoken 9 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this is an important bill. It is generally conceded that the Ohio River flood of 1937 was one of the major disasters of the Nation. It would take a good many years to construct works to prevent a recurrence of the damage and destruction of that flood. It is universally recognized that it is necessary to provide, however, at the earliest practicable date, for emergency and priority projects to protect the most populous areas in the lower Ohio River Basin.

Mankind has always been harassed by floods. When the first white man ever saw the Mississippi he saw the Father of Waters at its worst. There have been great floods in this country from the time of Indian legends. It is a part of the religion and tradition of every people that in the long ago there was a great flood.

It has been erroneously thought that floods have increased in number and frequency recently. There is no evidence that floods have increased in number in the United States. We had probably the largest flood that ever occurred on the Mississippi River in 1844. One of the largest floods that ever occurred on the Ohio River occurred in 1763, before the trees were cut and before the lands were plowed; but because of the increase in our population and because of the improvements in our country floods are becoming more destructive. It is conservatively estimated that 800,000 people were driven from their homes in the Ohio Valley in January and February of 1937, and that the damages to American citizens in that greatest of all industrial areas in this or any other country aggregated direct losses of $400,000,000, and that the indirect losses were around $400,000,000.

Congress was appealed to and we have not been derelict in our duty. We have appropriated, and the Chief of Engineers has spent in the past 9 years $12,000,000 in making plans for flood control and river improvements along more than 200 of the rivers of the United States. The Chief of Engineers submitted a comprehensive report on the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers. The President of the United States transmitted that report to the committee and he asked that the consideration of the full report be passed over until the next session of the Congress because of studies he had requested by other departments of the Government. The committee insisted, and the President agreed, that there should be priority projects for the populous centers of the Ohio River Basin, during the present session.

This bill authorizes appropriations of $24,877,000 for the construction of priority and emergency projects in the Ohio River Basin, consisting of river walls, levees, and drainage structures.

It is not assumed there will be any additional appropriation requested at this session of the Congress. The President of the United States states that he is going to allocate, under the terms of this bill, around $12,000,000 for the works out of the Emergency Act of 1937, during the next fiscal year.

While the authorized projects along the Ohio River during the next fiscal year are to be financed out of relief funds, under the Emergency Appropriation Act of 1937, it is imperative that Congress authorize the construction of the works. Under the terms of the Emergency Appropriation Act of 1937 no projects can be undertaken unless funds for completion are allocated. However, under section 10 of that act if the projects are approved by Congress the said limitation does not apply. It is imperative, therefore, that Congress authorize the flood-control works even if they are to to be paid for out of the relief funds, as such works are seldom completed in 1 year.

The committee amended the bill so as to authorize the use of about three or four million dollars out of the regularly appropriated flood funds to provide for plant and material, so as to authorize the Chief Executive to use relief funds for the flood-control works authorized. There are 155 projects along the Ohio River, and every project may be considered. The bill is but a partial solution of the large flood problem. It would take from 1 to 2 years to do the work in the pending bill. Under the comprehensive plan reported by the Chief of Engineers, it would probably have taken 15 years to complete the works recommended by him. Under the terms of this bill the projects are to be selected and approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War. We have the assurance of the Director of the Budget that in the event any of the regularly appropriated money for national flood control is utilized in the purchase of plant and material, then the Director of the Budget will send in a supplemental recommendation to replace all funds so used in the first deficiency bill of the next session. I speak of section 1 of the bill. We conducted the hearings exhaustively, and in the hearings Members will find a list of 155 communities, with their population and damages in each community. They will find what it will cost to construct the works, also the local contribution required, because this bill is an amendment of the act of 1936, and the principle of local contribution obtains and is brought forward. The same principle obtains in the pending act as obtains in all other flood-control legislation heretofore passed by the Congress of the United States for flood-control works.

Under section 2 of the act there is authorized to be expended on any river where an appropriation has been made not to exceed $25,000,000 to clear the debris and straighten the river, because it was thought this would bring not only as good results but probably better than building the levees higher in some cases.

Section 3 of the act is but an enlargement and expansion of the policy adopted in 1936. Under the terms of that policy of flood control surveys by the Chief of Engineers are now supplemented by surveys for water retardation and soil erosion by the Secretary of Agriculture. Section 3 of the act makes surveys and examinations applicable to the streams that were reported or authorized prior to the passage of the act of 1936, and hence not named in said act.

Section 4 of the act is to provide for soil conservation and it is the exact language of the act of April 27, 1935, so as to provide for local cooperation.

Some 55 or 60 bills for preliminary examinations and surveys were introduced, referred to the committee, and by the committee to the Department of War and the Department of Agriculture, and favorable reports were submitted. All of them have been embraced in an omnibus section, in section 5 of the act. The bill under consideration is a partial response of the Congress of the United States to the great disaster that visited the Ohio Valley in 1936, and this legislation is imperatively necessary if flood-control works are to be constructed. It is a source of satisfaction for me to say at this time that the present administration has approved and passed more flood-control legislation than was ever passed before in all the preceding history of the United States, and that the present session of the Congress of the United States, in addition to providing for flood-control works in relief and emergency acts has appropriated more money for flood control than any other previous session of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. I want to find out if local communities and the States benefited have to make contributions of land.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I made it clear, and so stated, that this act provides that the principle of local contribution which obtained in the acts passed in 1936 for the Mississippi and all other rivers, is brought forward in this act. The principle of local contribution obtains, as the pending bill is an amendment to the omnibus Flood Control Act of June 22, 1936.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Under leave to revise and extend my remarks I am including a more detailed analysis of the bill, and facts that will be of benefit to those interested in projects along the Ohio River Basin.

I invite attention to the report of the Flood Control Committee on the pending bill. It contains facts and data showing that while the bill under consideration is only a partial plan, nevertheless, reference is made to the necessity for further flood-control legislation. The report shows that under the appropriations of Congress the Chief of Engineers has made careful plans and studies. It is no longer a question of plans, it is now a question of authorization and construction. Congress has adequate plans. The big question remaining for Congress is to adopt those plans.

Permit me to say further that floods have harassed mankind in all ages and in all countries. Mythical and historical writings in all countries are filled with references to great floods. The story of a flood that overwhelmed the entire world is one of the oldest in the traditions and records of man. The most widely known story of hungry waters in all literature is the flood of Noah's time. Flood legends in Europe, Asia, and Africa abound. They are found from Tierra del Fuego, in the south, to Alaska, and in both North and South America from east to west. The flood legend goes away back into the Indian lore of this country. Perhaps the earliest story of floods, according to the historian Bancroft, is told by the Papago Indians of Arizona. Montezuma was the hero of the legend. Many of the Indian legends parallel the story of Noah's Ark. Mankind has always been marked by the dread of floods.

There are records of historic floods in Europe and Asia in modern times. Holland and Hungary in Europe, China and India in Asia have suffered devastating floods.

The first civilized man to ever behold the Mississippi River saw the greatest of rivers at its worst. There was no civilization then; there were no farms to be devastated or cities to be destroyed. Hernando De Soto was thrilled at the magnificent beauty of the Father of Waters, but he was not afraid.

The flood of 1543 is the oldest of recorded floods along the Mississippi River. The next great flood of record was in 1718. Every 5 or 6 years there has been a destructive flood along the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers. Two of the greatest of these occurred in 1785 and 1844. The record flood in the lower Mississippi was in 1927, and in 1937 occurred the greatest flood that ever swept down the lower Ohio River.

Floods have not increased in frequency, but, because of the progress and advancement of man, the destruction is much greater. In 1785 there were 3,000,000 people in the United States; in 1937 the population had increased to 130,000,000. The industrial development along the Ohio River and its tributaries surpassed that of any other river in this or any other country.

AN OLD PROBLEM

The problem is old, but the remedies are new and recent. Prior to 1936 the Federal Government had contributed to flood control along the Mississippi and Sacramento Rivers. Prior to 1917 flood-control works along the Mississippi River were incidental; they were in aid of navigation. In the act of 1928 flood control along the lower Mississippi was declared to be a national problem. The substantial Federal expenditures for flood control in the lower Mississippi Valley have been made since the great flood of 1927.

PLAN

In 1927 and in 1928 Congress recognized the national aspects of flood control, and during the past 9 years more than 200 streams in the United States have been studied and investigated by the Corps of Engineers and reports covering flood control on the principal navigable rivers and their tributaries have been submitted to the Congress of the United States by the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army.

Under the law the reports cover navigation, flood control, hydroelectric power, and irrigation. These reports are thorough and exhaustive. All plans for flood control and flood prevention have been explored and investigated by the most competent engineers in the country.

FLOODS OF 1935 AND 1936

There were destructive floods in New England, and especially in New York and Pennsylvania, in 1935. The greatest flood in the history of Pittsburgh occurred in 1936. The losses were enormous. It is estimated the annual flood losses in the United States that can be prevented aggregate more than $300,000,000.

FLOOD-CONTROL PROGRAM AND POLICY

On June 22, 1936, Congress adopted for the first time a national flood-control program and a national flood-control policy. The policy declared that the Federal Government should improve, or participate in the improvement of, navigable waters and their tributaries, including the watersheds thereof, where the benefits exceeded the estimated costs if the lives and social security of the people are otherwise adversely affected. Some 270 projects in 30 States were approved; $300,000,000 was authorized to be appropriated. The works were to be constructed by the Chief of Engineers under the direction of the Secretary of War.

We have heard much of dust storms and soil erosion. It is said there is nothing new under the sun. Civilizations have perished because lands were abused. It is said that the Sahara Desert in the long ago was inhabited and cultivated, but the misuse and abuse of the land converted that broad expanse into a desert of sands. We hear much of soil erosion. The lower Mississippi Valley was formed by the erosion of soils. The Gulf of Mexico in prehistoric times extended far inland to the city of Cairo at the mouth of the Ohio River. As a result of erosions the lower Mississippi Valley was being formed and the mouths of the Mississippi River are still being extended out into the Gulf of Mexico at the rate of about 1 mile in every 21 years. But our lands are being needlessly eroded and our forests being ruthlessly destroyed. They have contributed to increased flood heights.

The policy of flood control adopted in 1936 provided for watershed control and soil-erosion prevention. Numerous examinations and surveys were provided for in the act of 1936. The surveys for flood-control works are under the Department of War. The surveys for water retardation, soil-erosion prevention, and reforestation are under the Department of Agriculture. The work of the two departments integrate; there is no conflict; there is coordination. Downstream protective works are supplemented and reinforced by upstream preventive measures.

On June 15, 1936, authorizations were made for the completion and expansion of flood-control works in the lower Mississippi River; adequate provision was made for navigation. The tonnage on the lower Mississippi River today exceeds by many times the tonnage of the Father of Waters in the halcyon days of steamboats. Passenger traffic has disappeared, but barges carrying many times the tonnage of freight transported along the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers at the time of the advent of railroads in the lower Mississippi Valley some 60 years ago, ply the streams.

ROOSEVELT ADMINISTRATION HAS PROMOTED FLOOD CONTROL

Not only has the present administration provided, for the first time in history, for a national flood-control policy, not only did the Congress of the United States in 1936 authorize the expenditure of more money for flood control than in all the previous history of the United States, but the Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, has appropriated during any session more money for flood control than has ever been appropriated in the history of the Republic.

It should be a source of satisfaction to the flood sufferers of 1935, 1936, and 1937 that the Government of the United States has made more generous provisions for rescue and rehabilitation than ever made in behalf of flood sufferers.

The Works Progress Administration has expended millions of dollars for maintenance and rehabilitation. The War Department expended some $5,000,000 in the flood fight of 1937. The people of the United States, through the American Red Cross, generously contributed $21,000,000 in the great Ohio-Mississippi flood of 1937. Ultimately flood losses must be absorbed by the Nation. The problem of flood control has gripped the attention of the American people in the year 1937.

Following the rush of the hungry waters of the Ohio, the most prolific flood-breeding river in the United States, in January and February 1937, a tidal wave of public opinion swept the Nation. There was a universal opinion that the appalling loss of life and property—a repetition of the 1937 calamity—must be prevented. Congress was appealed to.

OHIO RIVER

The population of the Ohio Valley suffered an unparalleled disaster. All previous flood heights were exceeded. The gages at Portsmouth, Cincinnati, Louisville, and Paducah exceeded previous recorded heights by some 10 feet.

DAMAGES

Nobody knows the amount of damages in the Ohio Valley. When the floodwaters receded Louisville estimated a loss of $71,000,000; Paducah's estimate was $25,000,000. The loss on thousands of farms and in hundreds of smaller towns and villages will never be known. It is believed that the direct damage along the Ohio River amounted to more than $400,000,000. This is not the whole story; families were made bankrupt, there was a cessation of business, citizens lost the savings of a lifetime. There were enormous direct losses. There were many deaths, but it is difficult to estimate the loss of life through accident, through disease and sickness, through undernourishment and lack of clothing and other necessaries of life because of the destruction of the means of livelihood. The floods came at night; they occurred during bitter cold weather. The discouragement to Americans who lost their all through no fault of their own will drag through the years. Some day we may be able to estimate in dollars and cents the direct losses, but it will be difficult, if not impossible, to measure the intangible and indirect losses. It is safe to estimate that in the great Ohio flood of 1937 the direct and indirect losses aggregated the staggering total of $800,000,000.

SOLUTION

The Flood Control Committee, as provided by law, on February 10, 1937, promptly passed a resolution calling up the Chief of Engineers to submit a comprehensive report in the light of the 1937 floods along the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers and their tributaries. The report was submitted to the President on April 6, 1937, and on April 28, 1937, this report was transmitted by the President to the Flood Control Committee of the House of Representatives. The report and letter of transmittal are published as Flood Control Committee Document No. 1, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session. The President advised that the consideration of the report be delayed until the next session of Congress, after stating he had requested a further and complete study of all the agencies of the Government involved.

The Chief of Engineers recommended the construction of a system of 45 flood reservoirs on the tributaries of the Ohio River in addition to those already authorized; the construction of levees and flood walls for cities and towns on the Ohio River; the construction of 24 flood-control reservoirs on the tributaries of the Mississippi River, including the tributaries of the Missouri, Arkansas, and White, and including a reservoir on the Red River; and certain modifications of the Mississippi River Flood Control Act of June 15, 1936, at an estimated cost of some $800,000,000, over a period of from 10 to 20 years, to the Government and to the local interests.

PARTIAL PLAN

Subsequently the President of the United States verbally recommended to the committee an amendment to the Flood Control Act of June 22, 1936, for an authorization of $24,877,000 for levees, flood walls, and drainage structures for the Ohio River Basin in accordance with the said report of the Chief of Engineers, the projects to be selected and substantially one-half the costs of construction for the fiscal year 1938 to be allocated from funds appropriated in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937.

HEARINGS

Thereupon a bill was introduced to carry out the recommendations of the President and hearings were conducted. The committee decided to limit hearings to the priority and emergency projects in the Ohio River Basin, with the understanding that hearings would be conducted on the comprehensive plan along the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers at the next session of the Congress.

SOIL CONSERVATION

On April 27, 1935, the Soil Conservation Act was adopted and provisions were made for local cooperation on lands not owned or controlled by the United States.

The act of June 22, 1936, authorized preliminary examinations and surveys on the streams mentioned in section 6 of that act. As stated, the War Department had already submitted many reports on other streams. The flood-control work along the streams and flood-prevention work along the tributaries coordinate.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATIONS AND SURVEYS

Many bills for preliminary examinations and surveys by the War Department and by the Department of Agriculture, as provided by law, have been introduced and referred to the Committee on Flood Control. The committee adopted the policy of including all such bills, where favorable reports had been submitted by the two departments, in one bill.

POLICY

The bill under consideration, H. R. 7646, is an amendment to the National Flood Control Act of June 22, 1936, and enlarges and properly expands the policy of the act.

SECTION 1

Section 1 authorizes levees, flood walls, and drainage structures in the Ohio River Basin, as recommended, and in accordance with the report of the Chief of Engineers in House Committee on Flood Control Document No. 1, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, projects to be selected by the Chief of Engineers, with the approval of the Secretary of War, at a cost not to exceed $24,877,000. It is understood that the President will make available out of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937 approximately $12,000,000 for such construction. Section 1 contains the provision that regularly appropriated funds may be used for plant, material, supervisory and skilled services necessary in the execution of the projects authorized. It is believed that there will be no diminution in the funds regularly appropriated for flood control, as such funds will be supplemented from relief funds by a much greater amount than any amounts that may be used for plants and materials.

Section 2 authorizes the Secretary of War, in approved projects where authorizations have been made and where appropriations have been made, to utilize not exceeding $300,000 per year and not exceeding $25,000 on any single stream, in removing debris and accumulated snags and in clearing the channels of navigable streams and their tributaries when, in the opinion of the Chief of Engineers, such work is advisable in the interest of flood control.

In the two Flood Control Acts of 1936 the cost of construction is borne by the United States. It is believed that in many cases flood control can be aided by clearing the channels to supplement levees and, in some cases, levees may be eliminated by clearing the channels. No additional authorization or appropriation is required by section 2.

SECTION 3

Section 3 authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture, under the policy of the act of 1936, to make preliminary examinations and surveys on projects on which the Secretary of War had been authorized and directed to survey and examine prior to the passage of the act of 1936. No additional authorization or appropriation is necessary or provided.

SECTION 4

Section 4 amends section 3 of the act of June 22, 1936, by including as already stated, the language of the Soil Conservation Act of April 27, 1935.

SECTION 5

Section 5 amends section 6 of the act of June 22, 1936, to authorize the Department of War and the Department of Agriculture to make preliminary examinations and surveys on the streams mentioned in said amendment to said act. These include the bills for preliminary examinations and surveys on which the War Department and the Department of Agriculture had submitted favorable reports, that would, ordinarily, be included in a single or omnibus bill.

PRIORITY AND EMERGENCY PROJECTS

The bill under consideration makes provision for the priority and emergency projects to be constructed in the lower Ohio River basin in the next 2 years. The principle of local contributions obtains; the same yardstick that was used in the Mississippi River Flood Control Act of June 15, 1936, and in the National or Omnibus Flood Control Act of June 22, 1936, obtains in the bill under consideration. The local interests are required to provide for rights-of-way and lands for levees and river walls.

There is no dispute among engineers that levees and river walls for the protection of populous centers in the lower Ohio River Basin must come first. They are to be followed by reservoirs and soil-conservation work later.

VALUABLE DATA AND INFORMATION

The hearings contain valuable data. Exhaustive statements were submitted by the Chief of Engineers, the division engineer, and the district engineers. Flood damages in the Ohio River Basin in 1936 and 1937 were reported. They appear on page 27 of the hearings. Under leave to revise and extend my remarks, I include the following statement of flood damages as submitted by the Chief of Engineers, to wit:

There is also in the hearings a statement of the costs of construction in the various districts along the Ohio River. The Weather Bureau, the Forestry Service, the Soil Conservation Service, and other bureaus of the Department of Agriculture submitted valuable information, all of which may be found in the hearings. The report of the Chief of Engineers and letter of transmittal of the President of the United States are also published in the hearings.

ERRONEOUS IDEAS ABOUT FLOODS

There are many erroneous ideas, and there is much misinformation respecting floods and the solution of the flood problem. Probably the most erroneous statement that I ever heard came from a lawyer in the lower Mississippi Valley whose law office was located on the landside slope of a Mississippi River levee. He had lived in the same little river town for 50 years. His theories were finespun and his notions were most weird; his remedies for flood control were utterly unsound.

There are many fallacious ideas widely held by people of intelligence. I mention but a few of the popular erroneous beliefs:

First. It is said that floods are largely the work of man; he is charged with being the despoiler of the lands and the destroyer of the forests. Run-off has been increased, but the fact remains that in mythical, as well as historical, times many major floods occurred before the forests were cleared or the grasses plowed.

Second. Again it has been stated that floods are much worse than they were when America was young. The greatest flood in the Mississippi Valley occurred in 1844. Probably the greatest flood in the Ohio Valley occurred in 1763. There is nothing wrong with the statement that floods are worse today than previously except that the statement is not borne out by the facts.

Third. It is said that the large rivers carry much more silt than they formerly did. This is especially alleged respecting the Mississippi River. Millions of years ago the Gulf of Mexico covered the region we now call the Mississippi Valley, and the Mississippi River emptied into the sea somewhere in the vicinity of Cairo, Ill. Erosion occurred then as now. The Mississippi River dumped an enormous burden of earth in the ocean. Slowly as the ages came and went the coast line was pushed to the south.

Fourth. It is stated that the bed of the Mississippi River is rising at an enormous rate on account of deposits of silt. It is thus alleged that the building of levees higher and higher is necessary. It is also alleged that the bottom of the Mississippi River at New Orleans is higher than the streets of the city. The fact is that the river is constantly cleaning out. Man is not responsible for all of the moods of the Mississippi River. The greatest erosion results from the wear and tear on the banks of the stream itself. The statement that the bed of the Mississippi River is rising is found to be utterly unfounded. Occasionally the river bed has risen a little in some locality, but just as often it is scoured deeper in another. All well-informed engineers agree that there is no general or continued trend either up or down.

The levees have been built higher and higher because the people have demanded better protection. Instead of the bottom of the river being above the streets of the city of New Orleans, the fact is that the approximate mean depth of the river at New Orleans is 105 feet below low water. There is no evidence that the river bed at New Orleans, or in the lower Mississippi Valley generally, has ever risen.

Fifth. Again, it is asserted that the way to prevent floods is to keep the waters out of the streams by forests and soil erosion. I do not underestimate conservation. I have already pointed out that some of the ancient floods were the most destructive.

Sixth. Probably the most common of all the erroneous theories is that floods can be completely controlled by reservoirs, and that reservoirs can be paid for by generating power at the dams.

In 1937 there were 2,000,000 cubic feet per second flowing past Cairo. The water which the Ohio River dumped into the Mississippi River during January and February would fill 100 reservoirs the size of the District of Columbia to a depth of 20 feet. The District has an area of 70 square miles. The water would have filled the Boulder Dam reservoir three times over and left an excess that would have covered the District of Columbia 156 feet deep.

I am not arguing against reservoirs. I am saying that dams alone will not do the job. It is wise to protect the valleys of the tributaries themselves by reservoirs when the cost is not too great. But local protective works are imperatively necessary. Including those already adopted and those recommended, there are some 80 reservoirs along the tributaries of the Ohio River. If all those 80 reservoirs had been in operation during the flood this year, only one-half of them would have been effective. There were no major floods in the upper stretches of the Ohio River, and the reservoirs there would not have prevented the floods in the lower river. Again, reservoirs on the tributaries of the Ohio River could not have solved the problem in 1937—too much of the heavy rainfall was concentrated right along the Ohio River itself. Tributary reservoirs would be of assistance in lowering flood crests, but they cannot prevent floods. Ohio floods must be kept out of the cities and towns by walls and by embankments. The Dayton reservoirs protected the Dayton area, but the Miami watershed is only a small fraction of the total Ohio watershed. The water which is kept out by the Dayton reservoirs has little effect on the flood stage of the river itself.

Thirteen earthen dams and one concrete dam are now being constructed on the tributaries of the Muskingum River. The Muskingum drainage area is only about 8,000 square miles. The Ohio watershed includes 204,000 square miles. None of the five Dayton reservoirs and none of the Muskingum reservoirs provides for the development of power. There is a reason. To be effective for flood control a reservoir must be empty, or relatively so at the beginning of the flood season. A dam with no head of water cannot generate electricity. Not one of the 19 dams in the Miami and Muskingum Valleys was designed for the production of electricity. The reason is the engineers were undertaking to control floods. Flood control in the main, and especially east of the Mississippi River, cannot finance itself.

The advocates of the development of power in reservoirs in the eastern United States that are constructed for flood control will be disappointed. Power and flood control in the same reservoir are incompatible. There is but one river east of the Mississippi River comparable to the West and Southwest where power and flood control are possible and practicable in the same reservoirs. That river is the Tennessee River. There is no other Tennessee River in the eastern section of the United States. Flood control and power are provided for at Boulder Dam. Provision can be made for flood control and for the development of power along the Red River, notably at Denison, Tex., and along the White River, but generally, as I have stated, east of the Mississippi River power and flood control in the same river are incompatible.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER CONQUERED

The flood of 1937 from Cairo to Helena was the highest in the history of that stretch of the Mississippi River. For the first time a major flood was carried in safety between the levees to the Gulf of Mexico. The engineers of the Army were entrusted with the flood control of the lower Mississippi River for the first time under the act of 1928. The theory that levees only would control the floods in the Mississippi River was exploded. A floodway to protect Cairo was provided. A floodway to protect the city of New Orleans was constructed. An outlet through the Atchafalaya has been opened up. A diversion to supplement the levees was provided. The levees were raised about 3 feet, but two additional important steps were taken—cut-offs have been constructed and diversions have been provided for. When the protective works have been completed the lower Mississippi River will be controlled.

OHIO RIVER THE NEXT BIG JOB

The next big task for flood control in the United States is the Ohio River. Levees comparable to those along the lower Mississippi River will not work along the Ohio River; it is a different kind of a stream. Continuous levee lines would not be practicable, for nearly everywhere ancient hills slope sharply down to the stream, constricting the flood plain to narrow bottoms. These same hills would prevent cut-offs and auxiliary floodways. The solution of the problem in the Ohio is levees and river walls to protect the cities and populous communities, and reservoirs along the tributaries to supplement the local protective works.

LIBERALIZATION OR FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION

It is evident that many of the reservoirs provided in the Omnibus Flood Control Act of 1936 will never be constructed. The local interests cannot provide for the lands and flowage rights. There are some notable exceptions. A populous area like Pittsburgh and a great State like Pennsylvania may provide for lands and flowage rights for reservoirs for the protection of the Pittsburgh area. The New England States, by proper compacts, may provide for the lands and flowage rights to protect the large centers of population in those States. Lands and flowage rights may be furnished for the rather small reservoirs in southern New York.

In the Southwest a similar situation obtains, but it is evident that along the White River, and other tributaries of the Mississippi River, as well as along the tributaries of the Ohio River, the local interests will be unable to provide the lands and flowage rights for reservoirs. State compacts will not avail. It is impossible to estimate the benefits to the different localities and to the different States.

In the comprehensive flood control bill that the country expects next session, I believe that there must be a liberalization of the Federal contribution toward the construction of reservoirs for flood control.

WHAT IS THE UNITED STATES GOING TO DO ABOUT THE PROBLEM OF FLOOD CONTROL?

If there are to be public expenditures for unemployment I know of no better way to disburse these funds than a flood-control program that would give priority to emergency work and prevent a recurrence of the 1937 flood in the lower Ohio and Mississippi Valleys. Great floods, like the sword of Damocles, hang over thousands and thousands of men, women, and children in the United States. I trust that the Committee on Flood Control will report, and that the Congress of the United States, at its next session, will adopt a comprehensive plan of national flood control for all of the rivers in all parts of our common country.

I like to think of America not so much as a land of banks and factories, not so much as a country of great cities and magnificent highways, but as the homes of the greatest and best people in all the world. The first duty of the Government is to protect the lives and property of its citizens.

I believe in internal improvements. Public works obtain in all progressive countries. I sympathize with the problem of unemployment in the great cities and populous communities. If the problem is to be solved, many workmen must leave their present places of abode. The Panama Canal was not constructed by those who lived in the vicinity of that monumental improvement. Laborers were transported for the work. The transcontinental railways in the United States were not built by those who lived on the plains and in the mountains. Here again labor was transported. Unemployment in the congested centers was relieved. Permanent public works will provide for unemployment; the funds will not be wasted or dissipated; permanent improvements will result.

The people of the United States are determined not to perish in great floods, but to be protected from great floods.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON].

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, I shall use a few moments to pay tribute to the chairman of the Flood Control Committee, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON].

This legislation we have here today is the result of a resolution that was submitted to General Markham, Chief of Engineers, from the Flood Control Committee under date of February 10, requesting a complete report on the Ohio River and its tributaries, the Mississippi and the Missouri and their tributaries. The Members of the House well remember the severe flood which we had at that time on the Ohio River, which was highly dramatized by the newspapers and the radio. We were all concerned about it. Today we come in with a bill authorizing an appropriation of $25,000,000 to aid in the flood protection of this stream. The chairman of our committee has stated that the loss due to this flood was estimated at $400,000,000, possibly twice that when you consider the economic loss in that section. Therefore, while I am happy over the amount this bill contains, I think it is regrettable that we did not bring a larger amount for flood control, not only for this river, but for other rivers in the United States.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLSON. Yes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It is fair to say that the committee delayed the consideration of the comprehensive plan reluctantly, and the committee intends to bring in a comprehensive bill not only for the Ohio River and its tributaries, but for other rivers, at the next session of the Congress.

Mr. CARLSON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It is also true that this bill was reported unanimously by the committee and has the approval of the Budget, the Department of Agriculture, and the War Department.

Mr. CARLSON. If the chairman will permit, I was just coming to that point. This bill has the approval of the committee and it comes with the assurance that next year we expect to go into this matter further and report to this House legislation that will deal with all of these streams with which we are vitally concerned. The Ohio River has a flood one year, your river in your community has a flood next year. In fact, we cannot tell where the flood will be. Therefore I am sincerely hoping that next year we will be able to bring in a comprehensive flood-control bill.

I want to discuss for a few moments one phase of this bill, and that is section 3. The War Department has complete charge of flood-control projects on major streams. The Department of Agriculture in the act of 1936 was given watershed control. This act enlarges that control. That is what I want to speak of. I think most of us feel the time has arrived in the United States when we must begin to have water control at its source. Therefore we used the words in this legislation "water run-off" and "water retardation." I think we should begin immediately to control water at its source. Personally I feel we have been great wasters as a nation. We have destroyed and wasted some of our great natural resources, especially land and water. We are destroying them rapidly. We have destroyed 100,000,000 acres of land by erosion. Dr. Hugh Bennett says we are losing every year 200,000 acres of our most fertile soil. Therefore I am very much interested in this particular phase of the legislation that deals with water run-off.

I am especially interested in that because in the Midwest we have seven or eight States that are vitally concerned in water conservation and water run-off. Personally I am convinced that the future of a large section of seven or eight States, including the Dakotas, Minnesota, Colorado, Kansas, Nebraska, Texas, Oklahoma, and New Mexico is going to be determined by the amount of water we can conserve and use. This legislation is a step in that direction.

I want to speak for the construction of ponds, or anything that we may build out in that section that will hold the water after it falls. As far as the State of Kansas is concerned, I am proud of our pond-building record. Since 1934 we have a program of 50,000 ponds in the State of Kansas. We have constructed now over 3,000 ponds, with a minimum capacity of 15 acre-feet of water. This has been done through the cooperation of the Works Progress Administration and the Governors of our State. I am very happy over the results we have achieved. The State of Kansas is assisting in this and it may be of interest to other States as to the aid we give. Our State gives a reduction in taxable value of $40 for every acre-foot of water that can be conserved in these ponds. It has done a great deal to aid in the construction of the ponds.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Kansas 2 additional minutes.

Mr. CARLSON. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERGUSON].

Mr. FERGUSON. In regard to the ponds in Kansas, I just had the privilege of flying over the State of Kansas right after a big rain, and from the air it looked like that area had turned into the lake region of Minnesota. You have done a very effective job, and a lot of water that ordinarily would have been wasted is now stored in the Kansas plains.

Mr. CARLSON. I thank the gentleman for that contribution, because so many people feel we do not have any water run-off. I would like to discuss the flood on the Republican River in May and June 1935, and only wish I had more time.

This stream has its source in Colorado and, after flowing half way across the State of Nebraska, turns down into Kansas and is a tributary of the Kansas River. Few realize the enormity of this flood.

The loss of life was greatest in the upper parts of the valley in Colorado and Nebraska, where the flood occurred at night. A total of 110 lives were lost. The loss of livestock was 20,593. More than 275,000 acres of farm land were damaged, most of which contained growing crops or hay. Several hundred miles of highways and railroads were destroyed or damaged, also 515 highway bridges and many railroad bridges. The number of homes destroyed or damaged was very large, especially in the upper part of the valley, where the water rose to unprecedented heights. In Kansas 1,485 homes and 1,552 buildings other than homes were flooded.

We are much concerned about legislation that will assist us in controlling these flood waters at their source.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentlemean yield for me to make a short statement, in view of the limited time?

Mr. CARLSON. I yield to the chairman.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The hearings on this legislation are valuable. They contain an exhaustive report by the Chief of Engineers covering flood control and reservoirs for power and flood control. They contain probably the most exhaustive statements ever made by the Soil Conservation Service, by the Forestry Service, and by the Weather Bureau with respect to floods. There are many other statements that would be valuable to those interested in floods, as well as a letter from the President of the United States transmitting the report of the Chief of Engineers to the Committee on Flood Control.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has again expired.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I realize that the time is very limited for debate on the pending bill, and there is really not much necessity for further debate, because the distinguished chairman of the committee has fully covered the bill in his splendid remarks, and there appears to be very little, if any, opposition to the measure.

I have very actively supported and worked for the passage of flood-control legislation during the entire time I have been privileged to serve as a Member of Congress, and am glad to have an opportunity to raise my voice in support of this bill. While this measure does not go as far as I would like, yet we realize that under the program of the President it is all that we can hope to get at this time.

I have been especially active in my efforts to secure proper consideration and the passage of further legislation for the benefit of that area in Tennessee along the Mississippi River in the district which I have the honor to represent. This is the largest unprotected area along the Mississippi River, embracing some half a million acres of the finest land to be found anywhere. I have been assured by the Government engineers that sufficient provisions have been made both in legislative authority and appropriation of funds to provide for the extension of the levee from Tiptonville, Tenn., to the mouth of the Obion River, and that this work will be under way just as promptly as possible. I am hoping that in the legislation which is contemplated for the next session of Congress that proper provisions will be made for flowage rights for the unprotected part of this area, and I shall certainly continue my efforts to accomplish this result.

I have also been especially active in endeavoring to secure proper and very badly needed assistance for dredging and channel improvement of the Obion, South Fork, Forked Deer, and Hatchie Rivers in Tennessee. A most serious drainage and flood problem has existed on these rivers for some time, and I am especially gratified that provision is included in this bill whereby this much-needed improvement can be made on these rivers. I have conferred repeatedly with the engineers and have been assured that this work will be done as promptly as possible.

The pending bill should be passed by all means, and the investigations of the Army engineers carried forward as now contemplated and a report made, and further flood-control legislation extending even greater benefits should be passed early in the next session of Congress.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from California [Mr. BUCK].

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, would time permit, I had intended to discuss the bill more thoroughly. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the bill at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, had the pending bill come up under different circumstances; that is, under the ordinary rules of the House, or a special rule which permitted amendment, I had intended to offer an amendment for the serious consideration of the House.

A comprehensive flood-control system for the Sacramento River in California was authorized in the Flood Control Act of March 1, 1937, and modified and extended by the Flood Control Act of May 15, 1928. Not going into unnecessary detail, I should like to call attention to the fact that the total cost of this entire flood-control system was estimated at $51,000,000, and that the Federal appropriation authorized for the execution of the parts of the project undertaken at Federal cost was $17,600,000. This authorization, with the passage of the present non-Military Establishment bill, will be entirely exhausted. The amount of money appropriated in that bill for the continuation of the Sacramento River flood-control work is not sufficient to complete the necessary work of wave-wash protection, levee set-back, or bank revetment.

In response to a resolution adopted by the Committee on Commerce of the United States Senate, December 13, 1935, the Board of Army Engineers has proceeded to review the previous reports with a view to determining whether any modification in the existing project with respect to the maintenance of these project works is advisable at the present time. Under date of June 24, 1937, Maj. Gen. E. M. Markham transmitted the report of the Board, together with his own recommendations, to the Senate committee. Of course, this document was not available to the House Committee on Flood Control, whose chairman, Mr. WHITTINGTON, had already the day before introduced the pending bill in the House; and it would have been impossible for the committee to have included these recommendations in its report.

However, the recommendations provide for a further expenditure by the Federal Government for the maintenance of the enlarged channel of the river below Cache Slough, including the protection of its shores and the maintenance and operation of gages on navigable streams and channels. The State of California is to assume the maintenance of the weirs at the head of the bypasses, except for the construction of such protection of the river bank as may be necessary to insure their permanence. State or local contributions of one-third of the cost of bank-protection works and levee set-backs are recommended. With this contribution, the estimated further cost to the Federal Government will amount to a total of $2,500,000. This work will be undertaken over a period of 5 years, beyond which period the Board of Army Engineers does not make any recommendations at this time. It is obvious that by the end of that period, further consideration of construction and protection will have to be given, particularly in view of the fact that during this same period of 5 years, construction on the Kennett Dam under the Central Valley water project will be proceeding. Toward this dam there has already been authorized a Federal appropriation of $12,000,000. It is obvious that its completion will have a beneficial effect on both navigation and flood control, but it will not completely solve the situation, for not all of the water in the lower Sacramento will come through Kennett Dam. The work recommended by the Board of Army Engineers to the extent of $2,500,000 will, however, accomplish what is immediately and urgently needed in the execution of bank-protection works recommended by the California Debris Commission.

It had been my purpose to offer an amendment adding a new section to the bill providing that the project for the control of floods in the Sacramento River, Calif., should be modified in accordance with the report of the Chief of Engineers, dated June 24, 1937, to which I have referred, and subject to the conditions set forth in said report. Amendments not being in order under suspension of the rules, it will be necessary for me to ask one of the California Senators to urge the inclusion of a similar provision in the bill when it is before the Senate; and when the bill comes back to conference, if such amendment is adopted, I sincerely hope that it will have the approval of the conferees.

I have taken the time of the House to explain this matter somewhat in detail so that when such a conference report does come back the Members may be informed. This is not a new work—it is a continuation of an existing work on which over $50,000,000 have been spent, and is vitally necessary to the protection of the Federal interest in both navigation and flood control.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I hope that Pittsburgh and other places endangered by floods will, in the near future, obtain sufficient appropriations for the prevention of floods.

If we were to spend a billion dollars for the prevention of floods, it would not be one cent too much. In 2 years hundreds of millions of dollars' damage was brought about because of these disasters. The construction of reservoirs, dams, ponds, canals, and other projects would undoubtedly not only prevent disastrous floods but forest fires, dust storms, and droughts. No place in the United States or its possessions would ever need to be without water if such projects were constructed.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DIXON] 1 minute.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, it would be presumptuous for me to attempt to deal with the technical engineering features for the elimination of future floods. General Markham has already very ably explained the survey made by the Army engineers to this committee. I come before you, however, to remind this committee of its obligation to the citizens of the Ohio Valley.

There is little need of my delving deeply into the millions of dollars in property damage, as well as the loss of hundreds of lives. However, I should like to mention that it was estimated that the flood drove 103,000 from their homes; 24 counties of the State of Ohio were affected by the flood and there was extreme damage in 8 of those counties. The Red Cross alone cared for and fed 84,000 persons in Ohio, and Cincinnati alone suffered a loss in property damage of approximately $27,000,000.

But the figures tell only part of the tragic story. Mothers, fathers, brothers, sisters, and friends separated and dependent upon charity, crowded together in every conceivable kind of shelter, thousands upon thousands homeless—sickness, suffering, and disease tells a powerful story that cannot be calculated in terms of the dollar mark.

Fifty-five disastrous floods have occurred in the Ohio Valley during the last 60 years. General Markham in a recent statement asserted the entire program would not cost as much as the damage done by the recent flood. The damage of the January flood alone equaled $440,000,000. No record seems to have been kept of the total damage of floods, but if $440,000,000 is a modest estimate for damage caused by the past flood, it would be more conservative to place the grand total in excess of a billion dollars for the past 60 years. If we have lost a billion dollars in past floods, we certainly could expect to lose no less in the future, so the investment of $310,000,000 or thereabouts would bring a dividend of $690,000,000, truly a handsome saving to our Government.

I should like to quote to the gentlemen of the committee a few striking points brought out in a splendid article appearing in the Washington Herald January 27, 1937:

> Comprehensive plans for the restraint of floodwaters were worked out in detail by competent engineers and have been available for years, proving that flood control is possible. Responsibility, therefore, for inaction rests largely upon the Federal Government, and the problem exists today mainly because the methods of solution have not been used. There has always been a great deal of talk about flood control, but little action. For at least one decade specific recommendations have been in the Government files. Some of the recommendations have been waiting so long resurveys were necessary.
> Congress last year approved a program of flood control that according to Army engineers would eliminate all danger of floods in the Ohio Valley, but the Budget Bureau failed to approve the spending of the money that would have taken that program off the blueprints and put it in action. The program would build great reservoirs on the headwaters of the Ohio River, impounding surplus waters in flood seasons and releasing them in dry seasons. That program would have entailed the expenditure of $310,000,000; certainly an insignificant sum beside other New Deal expenditures.

The time is here; there should be no further delay; the entire Nation is anxious for the Federal Government to begin this work under the direction of Army engineers. The great Queen City of the West, Cincinnati, with its wonderful diversified business, its truly American citizens, who when misfortune visited Chicago, Johnstown, San Francisco, and all other places and serious trouble resulted, were always listed as the first to recognize suffering and disaster with a fine feeling for an American duty and contributed to the fullest extent with money, doctors, nurses, and supplies. Because of this the entire United States is anxious and willing that some worth-while plan be immediately adopted so that preparations for the elimination of future disasters, such as the flood of 1937, may be undertaken. [Applause.]

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CROWE] such time as he may desire.

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Speaker, in supporting H. R. 7646, by Hon. WILLIAM M. WHITTINGTON, chairman of the Flood Control Committee, I support legislation of unusual merit. Floods in any river and tributaries such as the Ohio become a National Federal problem. Cities are unable to cope with the overflow of many miles above them.

There are various estimates of the losses in the Ohio Valley and its tributaries during the 1937 floods. The War Department placed the losses at something over $400,000,000. Others estimated at figures greatly in excess of this amount. Losses always in the finality from all sources amount to more than can be seen on the surface at the time of the loss.

In my representation in Congress of the Ninth Indiana District there is approximately 150 miles of water front on the Ohio River, starting at just above Lawrenceburg, Ind., and extending to just below the cities of Jeffersonville and Clarksville, Ind. Those two cities were almost entirely submerged by the recent floods. Their losses reach into millions of dollars, as well as tremendous losses at other cities between those two, and in addition to that great losses by farmers on farm lands and buildings, crops, stock, and so forth. This legislation, however, is the forerunner to more permanent legislation and will take care of levees and water walls to cities where the losses were the greatest. It is imperative that this be done and done as speedily as possible before we are menaced with recurring floods next year.

Over the long-haul program of flood control means will be interwoven into it of reforestation and the elimination of soil erosion. Ground covering and conserving the water where it falls is imperative to save the soil, to raise the water level, to reproduce our timberlands, and to allow our river channels to ultimately clean themselves from silt and cause a more uniform flow of water throughout the year in the streams. Temporarily, however, in advance of that must come levees and water walls to protect cities from the return of devastating floods such as those had in the Ohio and its tributaries in the years 1936 and 1937. The chairman of the Flood Control Committee [Mr. WHITTINGTON] is entitled to a lot of thanks by every Member of the House whose district is affected by the floods.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN] such time as he may desire.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I want to express my appreciation for the fact that the chairman of the Committee on Flood Control, Mr. WHITTINGTON, permitted us to include in the pending legislation a provision for preliminary surveys of the Nishnabotna and Boyer Rivers in our congressional district and I hope to be able to add the Nodaway in the very near future. It has always been my contention that control of floodwaters should begin on the smaller tributaries of the larger streams. Such action will serve the dual purpose, namely, of preventing vast damage in the lowlands of the Mississippi and Ohio and at the same time conserve moisture in Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, and other like regions where it is needed.

The conservation of water at its origin will in a larger sense contribute to the preservation of soil fertility. It is impossible to estimate how many hundreds of acres of rich soil is carried away in every one of our major floods to be spread on the Delta at the mouth of the Mississippi where it is lost to our farmers.

The measure that Chairman WHITTINGTON has brought to the House is directing the energy of the Federal Government in the direction outlined above and for that reason is most commendable. I am sure that the citizens of our congressional district will appreciate the consideration, and there is no doubt but what posterity will benefit from the procedure.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] 8 minutes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I am glad for all the indications which point unerringly, I hope, to the passage of this bill this afternoon; and, as one Congressman who comes from a district that has been sorely stricken in the recent floods of 1937, I take this opportunity to thank everybody who has had anything to do with the preparation of this bill and those who will vote for its passage, because it is a very meritorious bill. I am sorry only that it provides for only $24,877,000. It should provide for at least twice this amount. My own individual district has lost nearly $24,000,000 in the recent 1937 flood. This amount will, however, be a start in the right direction. This is not a free grant by any means. But we are going to have to match that $24,000,000 in order to get it. In this connection I want to discuss, just for a minute, how this bill comes up for consideration at this time, especially for those of our friends who are always with us on these flood-control propositions. And I want you to know that the passage of this bill does not answer every call for flood relief. This bill is only the first step in what I hope will develop into a Nation-wide plan. This bill goes only in one direction. It provides primarily for the erection and construction of municipal flood defenses.

The bill authorizes $24,877,000 to be used in just about that one way. And it provides that, in order for any municipality to get one single dollar of this money for flood defenses, that municipality must provide all the rights-of-way necessary for the construction, and must arrange to pay all damages resulting from the removal of roads or railroads, and similar changes that may be necessary. The municipality, will in effect, say to the Government: "Here is the land, here is a place; now come along and build for us a flood wall or levees. There is many a town—in fact, practically all the towns along the Ohio River—that will not be able to meet the requirements of this bill. Cincinnati probably can do it, Louisville maybe can do it, Huntington, W. Va., thinks it can do it, but I doubt very much if my own home city of Ironton, Ohio, 95 percent of which was under water, will be able to meet the requirements of this bill. Let me give you some figures which I received from the Army engineers this morning with reference to what will be required of us. The Army engineers estimate that in order to keep out the floods that are classed as the regular floods that come nearly annually, our city will have to spend at least $1,000,000. This proposed protection will not protect against the 1913 or the 1927 floods. It will only hold back the backwater which comes in from a small stream in the lower end of our city. Of this one million the city of Ironton will have to come forward with more than $300,000, which is the estimated value of the rights-of-way and damages.

I am afraid that we cannot do this. I am afraid that the legal debt limitations have already been reached in our city. I expect to have the proper officials investigate to determine whether we can avail ourselves of the benefits of this law. Something will have to be done to enable the municipalities which suffered so badly to secure relief. For a law which only carries relief to the strong, and which denies it to the weak, will not be well received in the long run. If it opens the door to more satisfactory opportunities later it will have served its purpose. I now yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The gentleman should bear in mind that when we change the yardstick of basing contributions it will apply or should apply not only to this bill now under consideration but to the act passed in 1936 and to all other flood-control acts. The yardstick should be uniform throughout.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. While I expected to develop this further, I am glad the chairman brought that point out at this time because as things now stand it will be humanly impossible for most of the local communities on the Ohio River to come forward with their portion. I believe that the communities should participate to a certain extent, for otherwise the whole thing could be used as a football of politics, and a lot of small communities would want to have construction out of proportion to their appraised value; but I hope that the time will soon come when the percentage for participation will be lowered, when we will not have to put up an equal share, because then every little city, every little town, will strive to avail itself of the worth-while help tendered by this act, and walls will be built around many of these little towns.

We cannot provide enough money this year to make all the improvements necessary. In fact, it would be impossible to carry on all this work in 1 year or even in 5 years, and I shall encourage the municipalities in my section to make an effort to meet the requirements of this bill and shall continue to do what I can to bring the most practical relief possible to all the small cities.

That brings me to this point: This is not the only flood-relief bill from which relief will come in this session of Congress. My understanding is that we will have about sixty million in addition to this twenty-four million. Most of this sixty million has already been allocated or at least it has tentatively been allocated and much of it will go to the construction of dams and reservoirs in the Pittsburgh territory. These dams will hold back great reservoirs of water. Whenever that is done that will help every community lower down the river. These dams and reservoirs above Pittsburgh will call for the expenditure of several millions of dollars by the State of Pennsylvania or the municipalities that are located near the improvements. The people must provide all rights-of-way, and so forth. Of course, that section being the largest manufacturing section in the world, may be able to furnish these funds. I hope they can. We will all benefit from it.

This brings me to the further point that there is one dam in particular that is very important. In fact, I think it is the most important unit in the whole flood-control program. We must do something about seeing to it that this project is carried on at once. I refer to the Bluestone Dam located on the headwaters of New River. This is the one dam that will do more to help all the people along the Ohio River than any other one project that the Army engineers have passed upon. That is located, as I have said, on the headwaters of the New River, probably 60 miles from its confluence with the Gauley River, which join about 30 miles above Charleston to form the Kanawha River. And the Kanawha empties into the Ohio at Point Pleasant, W. Va.

When that dam is finished, it will have cost approximately $10,000,000. It is estimated it will hold back enough water so that 3 feet on the average will be taken off the crest of floods at all points from where it flows into the Ohio River at Point Pleasant for about 150 miles as it flows down toward Cincinnati. Of course, I mean floods which are caused primarily by unusual precipitation of rain or snow in that vast mountain region which drains into the Ohio. The Bluestone will be a wonderful project. It will be located in the mountain section close to the line between the southeastern part of West Virginia and the southwestern corner of old Virginia.

But what is holding that up? The law at this time provides that the people living in the vicinity of that project or some political subdivision of the State must come forward and provide the rights-of-way necessary for this improvement. This would require the purchase of the dam site, and also many thousands of acres of land, for this reservoir will cover many thousands of acres. The total cost of land and damages would be about two million. The population is sparse in that section and the value of land per acre is very low. The people in the immediate section would receive little or no benefit from the construction of that reservoir, and they could not furnish the funds with which to purchase the rights-of-way. This dam does not mean much to them, and this reservoir will impound a large amount of water and thus keep it out of the main stream in floodtime. It will also have that great storage of water which can be released in the summer to maintain a steady flow of water when needed.

A dam, similar to the one proposed at Bluestone, has been constructed over at Grafton, W. Va. This is a gigantic structure. It is as large as the Norris Dam. This dam is known as the Tygart Dam. It is almost completed. I visited it a few days ago, and it has been paid for altogether by the Government. The rights-of-way were purchased by the Government, the dam was constructed by the Government, and everything done by the Government, as it should be done. The benefits are Nation-wide. The Government should do the same thing with the Bluestone Dam. The benefits there will be Nation-wide. The Government should provide the right-of-way in all this mountainous country, because Cincinnati, Huntington, and all of the many cities along the Ohio River will benefit by reason of this improvement.

May I say to the Members of the House that a delegation is expected to go down and see the President in a day or two to find out whether or not he will provide some relief money or some other kind of money with which to buy that land so that the Army engineers can go ahead with that project. I understand that the plans are all prepared, and if the Government would buy the land the work could start just as soon as the bids could be received and the contract awarded legally.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I may say I am in sympathy with the gentleman's statement with respect to the Bluestone Reservoir. As a member of the committee of conference it was intended by section 3 of the omnibus act to include that reservoir and have it provided for under the terms of that act, just as the Conchez proposition in New Mexico was provided for.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I thank the gentleman and we will appreciate his help. The plans have been furnished and the Army engineers say that in 2 weeks they could proceed with the necessary preliminary arrangements if they had the money.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. How much power will be generated at that dam when completed?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. What dam does the gentleman mean?

Mr. RANKIN. The Bluestone Dam.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I do not know anything about that. In fact I hope it will be held as a flood-control project and not a power project. I hope there will not be any power generated, as far as I am concerned, for the reason that if we have to provide for a power dam it will cost so much we will not get any flood relief. I have heard many prominent engineers testify as to whether it is wise to combine power and flood control into the same projects. They all disapprove of that plan. They claim that for power purposes there must be kept a full head of water against the dam, while for flood control the reservoir should be emptied before the flood and filled up with floodwaters.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I was wondering if, as a matter of fact, under the relief bill, which allows large sums of money for the Public Works Administration, it would not be possible to get some money out of those funds?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. My understanding is that Mr. Hopkins has agreed that in the general allocation of relief work he will be able to assign enough relief work to amount to about $48,000,000. It is not always safe to rely on a general statement, for the amount of labor available in one of these mountain sections is very uncertain, and again we find that relief labor is not adaptable to flood-control projects. The building of huge steel and concrete structures is dangerous and skilled men are usually required. The average relief workers have had no experience and are not qualified to do it, although I am glad to say that upon the occasion of my recent visit to the Grafton Dam a good deal of work was being done by relief. The constructing engineer told me much of it was satisfactory. I saw many men doing carpenter and similar work. I hope that Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Hopkins will see to it that we get a very good contribution in this respect. While this bill may not be of much benefit to my section I am supporting it loyally. I hope that Congress will continue to look with favor on a comprehensive flood-control program so that we will within the next 5 or 10 years have provided ourselves so that we can compel Old Man River to stay away from our doors. [Applause.]

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WITHROW].

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Flood Control a question. I am wholeheartedly supporting this legislation, but I am particularly interested in a survey of the Kickapoo River.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. My recollection is the Flood Control Committee reported that bill, the House passed it, and it is now pending in the other body. I may say it is the purpose of the other body, and I am so advised, to include all preliminary examination and survey bills that have been introduced in that body, and passed by this body, and not passed by the other body by way of amendment, and I think that course should be pursued with respect to the river mentioned by the gentleman.

Mr. WITHROW. In case the Senate bill and House bill go to conference, it will be the policy of the conferees to include the Kickapoo survey?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. All survey bills have been passed by either body, and not by the other, will be included.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of the time on this side to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, first, I desire to congratulate the chairman of the Flood Committee, Mr. WHITTINGTON, and the members of the Flood Committee for the noteworthy work that they have done in reporting a bill with much merit. Their work has been most difficult, actuated by the many floods that have occurred in the United States the past few years, leaving behind nothing but ruin. Unquestionably, it is true that the committee has not been able to include in this general bill all the bills introduced with the purpose of remedying flood conditions, but it evidences a determined intention on the part of the committee to continue from year to year such a bill which when executed will eventually eliminate the greater part of flood destruction throughout the entire United States.

It is true that work necessary in the reducing of flood hazards is costly. The building of dams and locks, the building of reservoirs and retaining walls, the clearing of channels is expensive. But with the completion of the work we will have the knowledge that many lives will be saved; we will have the knowledge that hundreds of millions of dollars of homes and other private property will be saved; we will have the knowledge that thousands of men out of work will receive employment. Their work will be something worth while, something of a permanent nature, something that will be of benefit to millions of people. The great majority of the people are not adverse to the Government engaging the services of the unemployed on worth-while projects. They appreciate that those who are unable to find work must be provided for. The only criticism that I have found is that the Government has too often employed these men on unworthy projects. Too often the unemployables have been assigned to work that accomplished little or no good. The delegation of men on work of this nature would receive the hearty endorsement of every taxpayer. The people of the United States are united behind us in the expenditure of money for the control of floods. They know that for every dollar we spent in this work, thousands of dollars will be saved in property in the various flood areas.

In the main, this bill provides for the expenditure of $24,877,000 for the construction of levees, flood walls, and drainage structures for the protection of cities and towns in the Ohio River Basin, the projects to be selected by the Chief of Engineers, with the approval of the Secretary of War. It provides that any funds appropriated may be used for plant, material, supervisory, and skilled services necessary with relief labor furnished under the provisions of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937. You are all familiar with the January flood of the Ohio River, which resulted in the loss of many lives and the destruction of hundreds of millions of dollars in property.

The entire population of several cities had to leave their homes and the necessity arose for the sending in of Federal troops. The President of the United States, the War Department, the Flood Committee, every Governor of those affected States, the various chambers of commerce and business organizations urge a prompt remedy. They are waiting for us to come to their assistance, and I am sure that we will not disappoint them.

In addition to the Ohio River phase this bill provides for an authorization for preliminary surveys and examination in a list of localities under section 5. There is a total list of 51, reaching from the Atlantic to the Pacific, embracing practically every State. It makes us realize that flood disasters play no favorites. The history of floods brings us to a realization that quiet rivers of the present day may in a generation overflow their banks, bringing ruin to its inhabitants. I speak from experience.

The Flood Committee has most kindly included in this bill an authorization for a preliminary examination and survey of the Galena River in Illinois and Wisconsin. The Chief of Engineers and the War Department has requested it. Living in Galena, Ill., and being vitally interested in a remedy for flood conditions there, I have gone extensively into the history of the Galena River. I have found that floods have been reported in the Galena River Valley long before the first white settlement. The Galena River flows into the Mississippi River. The earliest floods in the Galena River Valley were the result of abnormally high water in the Mississippi River, backing up the valley. Gradually street and building grades in the city of Galena were raised to a level that protected them from this danger. Since 1870 came a group of floods that resulted from unusually heavy rains over the watershed of the Galena River. Fifty years ago the largest Mississippi boats came up the Galena River to Galena. Many times there were as many as 10 of the largest Mississippi boats docked at Galena. At the present time the river is not navigable for even canoes or rowboats. The water under ordinary conditions is from 12 to 24 inches deep. It is generally agreed that the cutting of timber on the hills above Galena has permitted the filling of the Galena River by soil washed from the hills. This soil has washed down below the city, filling up more and more, until now when a heavy rain comes to the valley the small channel of the river, plus the piled-up soil below the city, does not permit the water to flow freely to the Mississippi.

There have been 18 recorded floods in the Galena River Valley, which have resulted in the loss of several lives, as well as the destruction of millions of dollars' worth of property. The worst flood occurred on February 21, 1937, which resulted in the loss of three lives and an estimated loss of over a million and a half dollars in property. Hundreds suffered from severe colds and influenza. To you Members who are free from flood areas I would have you visualize a city of 5,000 people in northern Illinois, in the cold month of February, under approximately 7 feet of water. It means that in February, with all the furnaces and other modes of heat under water, the people were without heat for several days. After many hours the water receded and the people went back to their homes, and their business in ruin, without heat.

Sufficient plumbers could not be obtained. People were without heat in zero weather for days. They went back to work, though, cheerfully. Painters, plumbers, paperhangers were engaged, and within a week Galena was back to normal, with the exception of the three lives that were lost, with the exception of several businessmen who were forced out of business by their losses, and with the exception of the loss of over a million dollars' worth of property. They were back to normal for only a few days, because, on March 4, 1937, only 10 days afterward, there came a second flow, nearly as severe. Again merchants and businessmen were compelled to remove their stock and vacate their business. Again many people were forced to leave their homes. Again there was damage and a destruction of property.

This account of increasingly disastrous floods at Galena shows that this historic town, nationally famous because it contains so many exceptionally well preserved examples of early architecture, is in peril of being completely destroyed by floods.

The record indicates that much of the damage at Galena can be prevented because it appears that the original valley was adequate to care for the seasonal precipitation over its watershed, and that extensive damage has only occurred since the stream bed has become narrowed and filled by silting. Probably the damming of floodwaters above the town and the widening of the stream bed below Galena to the mouth of the river but a short distance would reduce flood damage to a negligible quantity.

There is a district engineer's office of the War Department but a few miles south of Galena, at Rock Island, Ill. The cost of a preliminary examination and survey would be very small. I feel certain that this House will pass this bill overwhelmingly. By so doing, you will be doing something worth while; you will be doing something that has the unanimous backing of the public; you will be doing something comforting to the millions of people located in the disastrous flood areas, not of one locality but in every State of the Union. [Applause.]

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentlewoman from Indiana [Mrs. JENCKES] so much time as she may desire.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, as a Member of Congress representing a congressional district which has, through a lack of Federal flood control, suffered a loss of $2,000,000 annually for the past 10 years, I rise to support House Resolution 7646 and to thank the chairman and his committee for their splendid work in preparation of this bill. For 10 years prior to becoming a Member of the Seventy-third Congress, I have been appealing to the Federal Government to provide flood-control protection to the citizens in the Wabash and White River drainage area.

The Wabash-White River drainage area covers 22,000 square miles of the richest and most productive country in America. The center of population of the United States is in this area. A great volume of the Federal taxes which are paid to the Federal Treasury comes from the Wabash-White River drainage area.

I appeal to my colleagues from congressional districts not affected by flood waters to support this measure. I hope this measure passes, and when it does pass, I hope that the United States Army engineers will proceed immediately to correct certain dangerous areas along the Wabash and White Rivers which deflect the flood waters into our cities and over our rich and fertile farms. This will be an investment which will return to the Federal Government, in the shape of income taxes, a sum of money many times the original investment on the part of the Federal Government.

I thank you. [Applause.]

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRAY] so much time as he may desire.

Mr. GRAY of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, little did the pioneers realize when they were clearing the land and preparing the ground for cultivation that they were undermining the soil fertility, that they were breaking up the fountains of water, and because of this great loss and waste their children and grandchildren would desert their inheritance.

Little did the pioneers comprehend that in cutting down and removing the forests and leaving the land barren of vegetable growth they were lifting the floodgates holding back the water in the reservoir of the earth, to gather in mad rushing torrents carrying away soil fertility and deluging the valleys and the lands below.

Little did the pioneers apprehend that the soil only a few inches deep was held and maintained in moisture and fertility under Nature's blanket of vegetation and when left barren and exposed the underground water level would fall or recede and the flowing springs would give way to drought and floods.

And from this careless indifference or oversight and their criminal disregard for nature's way of conserving the soil fertility and the water supply, we are reaping the reward of our folly in the blight of withering droughts, and the ravages of devastating floods, attended with appalling loss of property and life.

TOOK 10,000 YEARS TO CREATE 7 INCHES OF SOIL

Natural scientists tell us that by the slow processes of Nature 10,000 long, tedious years were required to create or accumulate the shallow 7 inches, the average depth of the soil fertility of the land, and without which America would have been a barren, lifeless desert of clay and sand.

LOSING 100,000,000 ACRES OF SOIL FERTILITY A YEAR

And conservation experts tell us now that by clearing the land for cultivation and leaving it barren of vegetation and exposed to the action of water we have already lost 50,000,000 acres of soil fertility, and we are losing 100,000,000 acres a year, and this is in progress even more rapid than before.

MORE THAN $200,000,000 LOST TO FARMERS A YEAR

It is estimated that soil waste from action from the waters running from the land removes from the cultivated and pasture fields not less than 126,000,000,000 pounds of plant food material every year, or more than 21 times the amount required and taken from the land by growing crops.

The estimated financial loss annually to the farmers is more than $200,000,000, and the annual ultimate damage to the land is many times the immediate loss, as the fertility of the land is gone beyond the hope of a recovery, or even a part, in a lifetime or one generation.

Land left bare of all vegetation has been losing from 50 to 100 tons an acre of soil fertility per year. Land planted continually in corn has been losing 59 tons an acre per year, and from such land left barren of all vegetation the loss has been as high as 112 tons an acre per year.

ALL LAND LOSING SOIL FERTILITY

While the steeper the land slopes the greater will be the loss of topsoil, yet all fields are suffering a loss according to the slope of the ground, and the fertility of the soil is passing from all cleared or cultivated fields wherever colored or muddy water is running from the land.

At this rate of soil loss and waste this average 7 inches of soil, if left wholly barren, may be taken from land in less than 10 years' time, from continuous corn land in 16 years, while from properly rotated crop fields 99 years would be required to take away all the soil fertility.

HOW WATER IS HELD IN THE EARTH

In nature the ground is kept open and porous by roots and the action of insects and worms. Into these pores and soil openings the rain held by vegetation passes into the earth until the ground is made a greater water reservoir, excepting only the oceans and the seas.

From this great underground storage the water slowly filters out through the constant running of springs and seepage from the porous, spongy earth in gradual release to maintain the streams, and in an even stage throughout the year, with clear, filtered running water.

ONCE STREAMS RAN WITH CLEAR WATER

In the early days of America the rivulets, creeks, and streams ran with clear and transparent water, even in time of rainfall and floods. The vegetation and the porous earth filtered the water as it came in rains without sediment to fill the streams' channels.

And the waste from excess rainfall thus absorbed and held back by infiltration was released from springs and the porous ground gradually throughout long seasons, not only safeguarding against floodwaters but maintaining the streams at even water stages for more reliable and dependent uses.

CUTTING OFF THE TIMBER AND VEGETATION

Cutting off the timber and removing the vegetation and plowing and cultivating the top soil breaks and closes these pores and earth openings against the infiltration of water into the earth and leaves the ground surface upon which the raindrops fall like a glazed watertight roof.

As a result, with no vegetation to hold the water and no pores or openings to take in the water, the water rushes off the glazed ground and down into the stream channels like the rain water from the roofs flushing down the downspouts to carry away the soil and make the floods.

After water has left the roof slopes of the earth, commonly called the watersheds, and is gathered in torrents in the river channels, it is beyond the control of man. And all they can do in the emergency is to warn the people of the valleys to flee their property and homes until the crest of the mad waters has passed.

THE UNDERGROUND WATER RESERVOIRS

The water level and the underground reservoir is falling lower and lower from year to year. The once constant-flowing streams are dried up. The one time never-failing wells are going dry. The myriad little rivulets, brooklets, and streams are empty again as soon as the rain is over, and their beds are left to dry and crack in the sun.

MANY PROBLEMS IN ONE

The problem of flood control, the problem of irrigated lands, the problem of inland water navigation, the problem of water pollution, the problem of soil conservation and the underground water level, and the problem of hydroelectric power are all one problem—the problem of the raindrops.

And the problem of the raindrops is first back on the farms, in the fields, pastures, and woodlands. The problem is here to receive and hold the rain for infiltration into the ground reservoir for gradual release through the pores of the earth and the even flow of the springs and seepage.

MUST GO BACK TO THE SOURCE

Men cannot safeguard against floodwaters, nor control the even stage of the water level for dependable, reliable, and even water flow, for irrigation and inland water navigation; nor safeguard against the polluted waters, nor for an even flow of water power, nor for any control of river channels' currents until they have gone back to the source, to the slopes of the fields and pasture land, gone back to where the raindrops fall and there restore vegetation to hold the waters, and there reopen the pores of the ground to drink in the waters falling from the clouds to be held back in Nature's great reservoir, the earth.

THE LOWER ENGINEERS MUST WAIT

The lower river channel engineers, planning the levees and the dikes, the dams, and artificial reservoirs, must wait on the upstream engineer, working with his force of men back upon the fields and sloping pastures to hold or delay the raindrops falling.

The lower river channel engineers must wait until the ground pores are open, and to fill the lower and great, capacious reservoir, the reservoir of the ground or earth, before he can plant the heights of levees, banks, and dikes, or the capacity of artificial reservoirs for storage to hold the river within its banks.

After spending billions to control floodwaters; after building hundreds of miles of dikes and levees; after playing with the continent for over 50 years, using the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps, and finally the C. C. C., Red Cross, and relief service, the floods are coming greater and more destructive than before.

MUST GO BACK TO FIRST PRINCIPLES

We find that we must go back to first principles and nature to conserve both the fertility of the soil and control destructive floodwaters to save the soil of America from being carried to fill up the river channels and sifted over the bottom of the seas.

We find that we must go back where the raindrops fall on the hills and slopes and upper valleys and there prepare them a resting place in the sod and soil of the earth to hold and detain the waters there for gradual release from the streams and rivulets.

WATER MUST BE HELD IN THE GROUND

Conservation of the soil and water supply and the control and direction of floodwaters must begin back upon the fields and farms, back with the streams and rivulets. The water must be held in the ground and controlled before leaving where it falls.

The gentle raindrops falling must be received and made welcome to the friendly bosom of mother earth before, for want of a resting place, they join in mad onrushing currents, tearing away the soil and fertility of the land, and wreaking destruction and havoc in the valley below.

Not only the control of water for soil conservation and reclamation, but the control of the flow of waters for irrigation and inland water navigation, for water purification in towns and cities, for the conversion of falling waters into power, and the control of destructive floodwaters must begin back at the source.

THE FIRST STEPS MUST BE TAKEN IN THE FIELDS

For all these purposes and uses the first step taken for their accomplishment must be taken back in the fields, back in the forests and pasture lands, there to hold the water for gradual release, from springs and pores of the soil and from a stored underground water level.

We must go back where the raindrops fall to hold the fertile soil of the land from leaving the fields and sloping pastures and from being carried in the currents of waters to fill and clog the channels of the streams, causing them to overflow their banks and to seek other channels for their current.

We must go back to the source where the gentle raindrops fall to gather and hold the waters in the soil and underground reservoirs for gradual release and flow to maintain an even water stage for all the many uses of the streams of the land.

And this is equally true for the control of floodwaters by extending the time for their passage to accommodate the natural river channels and to provide for the use of falling waters for water power in the generation of electricity, gradually over the year for their regular, continued, and prolonged use.

CESSPOOLS OF FILTH SWEPT INTO THE STREAMS

It is the mad surface water in their immediate precipitous run-off after rains and melting snows which scour the recesses of filth and without infiltration through the earth's soil throw their contents into the streams to pollute and poison the water supply.

Without beginning back at the source to hold the waters in the soil and replenish the underground water level for gradual release and flow, the banks of the river streams cannot be raised high enough nor made strong enough to carry the water leaving the land as it falls.

And the river channels will be overflown, inundating low-level and farm lands beyond the banks of the streams, wreaking havoc and destruction, and then will be followed by the falling of the water stage below the level and the volume required for regular and dependable water uses.

LARGE DAMS AND RESERVOIRS WILL NOT HOLD THE WATER

Large down-river reservoirs have their proper use at the proper time in the economy of flood control and the many uses served by water. But all of the dams which can be built and all the reservoirs which can be provided will not hold the water falling if allowed to run off immediately from in the rains.

To preserve and reclaim the fertility of the soil, we must go back to first principles. We must begin at the source to remedy the cause. We must begin back where the raindrops fall. We must begin before the water currents form. We must begin, not to hold the water on the ground, but to receive and hold the water in the ground.

The devastating, destructive floodwaters, starting on their mad and angered course of inundation, death, and destruction, down the valleys and over the lowlands, first from the barren fields and slopes, frowning upon and resisting the raindrops and control, must be held back from where the water first comes.

THE RIVER CHANNELS FILLING UP

The sediment filling up the river channels, reducing the current capacity of the streams, and causing their banks to overflow and sweeping the fertile land and populous valleys, comes first from the surface soil, from the denuded fields and pastured slopes, and the water must be held before it starts.

The mad, onrushing, wasting waters; the sudden fall of the water stage; the exhausting ebb and diminished flow for reliable, dependable, and useful services; the poisons of a contaminated, polluted water supply, all have their origin and source back in the land repelling the raindrops.

FROM WHERE THE WATER CAN BE CONTROLLED

And back in the fields and denuded pastures is from where all river waters can be held, is from where all floods can be controlled, is from where all water pollution can be safeguarded, is from where all precautions can be taken to maintain the even flow and stage of water for constant, dependable water uses.

THE GREAT RESERVOIR OF THE EARTH

But before we build the reservoirs below we must go back to the source and water storage, the far greater reservoir of the earth, by opening the intake of the pores in the ground and holding the water to replenish the million springs for the gradual release of treasures of water.

WE MUST FIRST BUILD THE LITTLE DAMS AND RESERVOIRS

Before we can build the big dams below to hold the waters to lessen the volume in the streams, we must go back to the farms and the fields and build the little dams and the ponds to hold the water for gradual seepage and release throughout the whole season of the year.

We must go back to the source and welcome the raindrops as they come to the great bosom of Mother Earth and there to repose in leisure and contentment before they reach the swollen streams in mad, turbulent, seething currents.

In other words, we must do first the many little, myriad things. We must take care of the fundamentals. We must go back to first principles. We must begin at the foundation to build for soil and water conservation and to lay the basis for flood control.

Before we can build the big dams below we must hold the water in the lesser streams above, we must go back to the fields and farms to build the little dams and ponds and hold the water there for gradual seepage throughout the whole season of the year.

THE WASTE OF EROSION

Erosion is the washes making gullies from which the ground held in solution and the top fertile soil is carried away by the water run-off and is filling up the river beds and is silting or filling to the top level the dams and reservoirs constructed to hold back the water.

The damage and destruction to dams and reservoirs can only be estimated when it is known that the cost of cleaning out this mud and silt to restore the capacity of the dams and reservoirs is found to be an impractical undertaking or more than equal to building new dams and reservoirs of the same or equal capacity to hold water.

THE 1937 FLOOD

The last great 1937 flood carried over 300,000,000 tons of soil from the farms, fields, and pasture lands and deposited this with sediment in the channels of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, reducing still further the capacities of these river channels to carry the waters.

The small dams and reservoirs back at the source of the springs and rivulets are not only the key to soil conservation, but they are the only remedy and relief for the protection of the larger dams and reservoirs from filling with silt and soil wastage and the control of the floodwaters below.

WHAT THE FARMERS CAN DO

The farmers themselves can do very little. The force of an army of laborers, working under a comprehensive construction program, must be put in operation on the land, back upon the fields and pasture slopes to conserve the water in the reservoir of the ground before beginning construction of artificial reservoirs to hold and release the waters gradually to reach the river channels.

The payments to farmers now being made should be made under a program of soil conservation carefully planned, and the farmers should be given full information and instructions to be observed in their farm operations to carry out most effectively soil conservation.

The farmers should be paid for their work and expenses, except that part bringing in immediate profit, and made to conserve both immediate farm fertility and general watershed improvements, looking to solve the immediate farm problem both to serve the individual farmer and to carry out a national conservation program.

A STATE, NATIONAL, AND COOPERATIVE PROBLEM

Conserving the fertility of the soil and its counterpart, the water supply, is more than an individual farm problem. It is a State and national problem. It is a problem calling for the cooperation of the State and Federal Governments with the farmers to save the disappearing soil and the water level.

Soil conservation and flood control is first an individual and local problem, then a State and national problem. And it is both an individual and cooperative problem in which all must do their part, individuals, the State, and the Nation.

At one time, in the early stages of soil erosion and wasting soil fertility, the progress of land disintegration could have been arrested and controlled by the individual farmer and landowner alone taking precaution in the cultivation of the soil and the proper use and management of the land.

But this opportune time has passed and gone for the individual to cope with conditions. Much of the fertile soil is in the stream beds. The erosion has already eaten its ugly way far into the fertile fields and to deface with frowns and scars a once smiling and radiant nature.

The avalanche of crumbling, wasting earth, and the moving wall of mad floodwaters resenting the violation of Nature's plan calls for the cooperation of State and Nation to stay the tide of rising destruction, stop the rolling, crumbling masses of earth, and calm the seething, troubled waters.

FARMERS ARE ABANDONING THE LAND

As many farmers, growing poorer with their soil-impoverished farms, have been compelled to abandon their farms, so it will be with the Nation, with the American continent. It will be at least in part abandoned unless the Nation acts to stop the waste and reclaim the loss.

It is evident the farmers and landowners cannot meet or pay this tremendous cost of soil reclamation and water conservation at this advanced progress or stage of the loss and waste of these two vital resources. The problem is more than stopping or arresting the further progress of the damage. It is a problem of reclaiming and recovering back.

The farmers, carrying the burden of crop production and taxes, interest, and repair obligations, cannot contribute to this work in money but they can make their contribution of the work with teams in part hauling and in constructing the small upstream dams and reservoirs.

The farmers and landowners of the country cannot and should not bear the cost of the work more than other people of the country. It involves a National and State problem of flood control, irrigation, and navigation, safeguarding against polluted water supplies, and is for the benefit of all the people.

Improvements for soil and water conservation must be assumed by the joint operations of State and Nation as a public obligation and responsibility, and should be carried on and directed under a well-planned waterway system and a survey of the land and watersheds looking to serving all these uses and purposes.

THE STAGGERING COST

And then again the staggering costs of such a mammoth interstate program cannot be entered upon or paid and taxes assessed from the people; and yet we are brought face to face with a problem that must be solved promptly to save the country from the shadow of the desert.

Fortunately there is a way open, not only to pay the costs without burden by with profit and advantage to the people. The water forces with which we are to deal and which have brought this great economic disaster upon us may be harnessed as hydroelectric power to produce a revenue equal to the cost of the works.

While this great loss and waste has been in progress carrying away the soil, new inventions, discoveries, and developments have been made to enable man to harness the forces of water and made to do his will and bidding to lift and carry his burdens and to bring him profit and income.

WATER POWER CONVERTIBLE INTO CASH

Today, under these new inventions and discoveries, every pound of falling, wasting water flowing in all the streams and watercourses can be converted into electricity so as to bring in cash returns, and this conversion into electric power can be reproduced over and over again from the source to the mouth of every river.

And what is even more fortunate and a most remarkable coincidence is that the same works and improvements which are required for flood control, irrigation, navigation, and safeguarding against water pollution will develop and harness the power of water to generate electricity and bring the revenue to pay the costs.

The falling waters of all the streams and watercourses of America, if harnessed for power and generation of electricity, electric current could be developed sufficient to light every highway and streets intersection, light and furnish power to every home and fireside, and turn the wheels and pulleys of every mill, factory, and workshop.

Such volume of electric current sold at a low and reasonable charge would construct all these works and improvements, conserving soil and underground water supply, safeguarding against floodwaters, conserving their future use and service for irrigation, navigation, and a pure water supply.

This program will recover and reclaim the wasting fertile soil and the underground water levels, bring the inland watercourses to serve these many useful purposes, and at the same time will electrify America from coast to coast and from the Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico.

THE ONE OBSTACLE TO OVERCOME

There is only one obstacle standing in the way from the completion of such a conservation program without cost and taxes levied from the people, and that is the obstruction and opposition of the private electric holding companies, who are conspiring to take possession and tie up the waters of the streams and water courses and monopolize their power for private profits and gain.

THERE WILL NOT BE AN OVERSUPPLY OF LABOR

As we approach this great problem and realize the magnitude of the undertaking and the labor required for its completion, we see the folly of the theoretical claim that there is not enough work for all and that active and competent men must be retired to afford all an opportunity for others to labor to live.

The work of man on earth has not been performed, completed, or contemplated. The ground has scarcely been scratched. There is more work waiting to be done than all the men and automatic machines working full time and overtime can do in a lifetime or generation.

When the Nation calls for recruits for the labor to meet the emergency immediately pressing, the employment lists will disappear and the large relief rolls will fade away, and the exhausting drain of wasting taxes will be relaxed from the earnings of the people, and America will become a veritable beehive with the works restoring the living currents of water.

MANY MILLIONS HAVE BEEN SPENT IN VAIN

Many millions of dollars have been expended in raising the banks of the rivers and streams to hold the increasing floodwaters. But all this has been futile and in vain. The earth washed from the eroding soil has raised the river beds higher and higher, leaving the channels shallower and with less capacity to carry the ever-increasing currents.

Millions have been expended yearly to build great dikes along the Mississippi to hold the ever-encroaching waters from inundating the fertile bottom lands, but as the dikes are built still higher the river bed has been raised and lifted, leaving the channel to carry still less water.

FLOODING THE LAND TO SAVE THE CITIES

With the return of ever-increasing floods the watergates are thrown open wider to relieve the strain upon the channel banks, flooding thousands of acres of land, compelling the lowland population to flee their property, farms, and homes at a loss of millions annually.

And now still opening the floodgates to relieve the ever-filling river channels and the floodwaters rising still higher, almost another million acres are to be flooded in Louisiana at a cost of $103,000,000, forcing thousands of farmers to move and find their homes elsewhere.

DAMS AND RESERVOIRS FILLING UP

Millions have been expended by the Nation in building dams and flood reservoirs to hold a portion of the floodwaters back from gradual release as the floods recede, but the millions of tons of fertile soil from far-distant fields and farm lands have been carried into these dams and reservoirs and then to fall from the resting waters until the dams and reservoirs are filled to a level with silt and sediment, leaving no water capacity.

Many millions of dollars have been spent to maintain an even river-channel stage of water for irrigation and inland navigation and to safeguard against water pollution. But, with the flood tides too high and the subsiding waters too low, the expenditure has been worthless and lost.

Millions have been expended in river and stream improvements to safeguard city water supplies, but the waters from the fields and lands have swept the cesspools of corruption into the rivers sought to be safeguarded, and in the end the same water pollution continues on.

All these gigantic expenditures of money, all these great herculean works and improvements, all these ingenious plans and systems to make the river carry the floodwaters, have been fruitless and in vain, all because we have failed to begin at the source from where the evils of floodwaters come.

MUST GO BACK TO WHERE THE RAINDROPS FALL

We must go back to where the rains fall, back to the fields and pasture lands, and there prepare a resting place for the gentle raindrops to pause and linger in the holds of vegetation and the pores of the soil, and then, after infiltration in the earth, to be released through gradual flowing springs.

The restoration and reclamation of the soil and the underground water level must begin or be entered upon not only to prevent further loss from the soil but to save the towns and cities along the streams from the floods which are rising higher and higher as the land pores are closed more against the rains.

The gullies, giving up the earth in solution to be carried away in the rising waters, must first be planted in trees which are of quick growth in clay soil, and then the slopes in grass and vegetation, and the smaller dams and reservoirs must be built wherever water can be collected and held back.

MUST BEGIN ON A LONG-TIME WORK

It would be a failure of comprehension to say all this loss and waste can be restored back to the land or even all the damage in progress stopped in a few short years of time, or even all this work could be done in one generation or in the time the soil has been leaving the land and wasting.

THE FIRST PROGRAM MUST BE FOR INFORMATION

There should be some regular program outlined to give proper information to the farmers and the landowners of the country and a uniform plan formulated for farmers to cooperate and act with the Government in making soil-conservation improvements, and the amount of contribution the farmers can make must be fixed well within their ability to pay or perform.

First. An economic and social survey should be made of the area to be reclaimed and the population to be affected.

Second. A temporary program should be entered upon until a permanent one can be planned and put into operation.

Third. A program of education to give the inhabitants of the territory information of the character of the improvements to be made.

Fourth. A plan formulated for the readjustment of land conservation to meet the needs and requirements of the owners and their operations to make a living on their farms.

Fifth. The land to be removed from cultivation and from use even as pasture land should be definitely ascertained and set aside.

Sixth. The character of the forest trees and vegetation required to arrest erosion and wasting soil and best suitable and adapted to the climate and soil condition should be decided upon.

Seventh. The operations and practical cultivation of the land to be kept and continued in use should be determined.

Eighth. All this should be under a system to coordinate the improvements made in a uniform manner to embrace the area included, with the operations extending continuously beyond property lines.

ALL RIVER CHANNEL IMPROVEMENTS MUST BE UNDER ONE SYSTEM OF WORKS AND OPERATIONS

In my remarks in presenting H. R. 3872, a bill introduced by me to create an executive department, in the House of Representatives, January 29, 1937, to coordinate all the inland waterworks and improvements under one plan of system or operation, I have already shown the great savings and economy to be effected under a comprehensive program of improvements to accomplish all these uses and purposes under one coordinated system.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HARRINGTON] so much time as he may desire.

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to say a few words in support of the flood-control bill, not only because I am a member of the committee which drafted the bill but also for the reason that three of the streams recommended for survey originate in my district. And so as not to seem to be speaking selfishly, I hasten to add that even if my district were as barren of rivers and flood danger as the great American desert, I would still be for this bill, because I am a firm believer in flood control, water conservation, and the prevention of soil erosion.

The provisions of the bill having to do with the survey of these three streams and scores of others throughout the country contemplate safeguarding of our natural resources on a broader front than heretofore attempted in such legislation. In previous surveys the primary objective has been flood prevention. Now, we approach the problem with a view to not only averting the floods but conserving the water for use in season of need, and lastly to prevent damage and erosion to our most priceless heritage of all, the farm soil which is the source of our sustenance.

There is nothing intricate or complicated about this program. On the contrary, it is a most simple and fundamental thing. Those of us who as small boys lived anywhere near a creek or swimming hole are familiar with the simple engineering possibilities of a small stream of running water. Most of us have built dams and run-off ditches and canals, and even miniature bridges, and as we gave play to our boyish engineering imagination have pretended that we were harnessing the Mississippi or the Amazon or the Nile. We have watched the creek in springtime run suddenly full and yellow and furious with the melting of the snow and ice, and then slink back in summer to a tiny trickle and oftentimes run altogether dry. Perhaps some of us have had the experience of conquering the problem in a small, local way by removing obstructions in the creek, straightening the channel, digging a diversion ditch here and a dam there until in that small, local way we had the problem licked as far as our farm was concerned. And that is fundamentally the procedure proposed in this bill for approaching our flood, famine, and erosion problem on a Nation-wide scale.

I believe that it is the consensus of engineering experts that in the correction of floods and their attendant evils we must start with the sources and headwaters rather than proceed by patchwork where the greatest damage is felt. That is why in this bill you will find so many small and little-known streams included for survey. Stop, divert, and control the water up yonder by the old swimming hole, and the folks down at Cincinnati, Louisville, Portsmouth, and Cairo will not have to worry about floods.

In my district in northwestern Iowa, three streams have been recommended for inclusion in the Nation-wide program, the Floyd, Little Sioux, and the Boyer, all of which flow into the Missouri River and later help to swell the volume of the mighty Mississippi.

The Floyd and Little Sioux Rivers drain an area of 5,285 square miles, 925 square miles being included in the Floyd area and 4,360 square miles in the Little Sioux area. The upland soil involved here is the Marshall silt loam. The counties of Sioux, O'Brien, Clay, Dickinson, Plymouth, Cherokee, Buena Vista, Woodbury, Ida, Monona, and Harrison are included in these watersheds. There is a very serious flood problem in the case of both streams, much valuable farm land being injured by erosion and flooding and the flood problem at Sioux City is extremely important. The erosion in this area ranges from moderate with occasional gullies to severe with frequent gullies.

Probably the most serious erosion occurring anywhere in the State is found along the Boyer River which rises in Sac County in my district and flows through Sac, Crawford, and Harrison Counties down to the Missouri. The area of the watershed is 1,136 square miles. The area is characterized by severe sheet erosion and frequent gullies, and there is a real flood problem, especially noted at Council Bluffs.

In conclusion, may I say that although interested chiefly from the standpoint of a proper and scientific program of water and soil conservation, I feel further that the measure we are discussing contains much that is vital and essential to the people of the great Ohio and Mississippi Valleys. The flood of last January indicated that only through efficient coordinated and well-planned programs can hundreds of thousands of inhabitants of these valleys be made reasonably safe from the devastation of floods. This is by no means a sectional problem, it strikes into the very geographical and population centers of the United States and this bill provides some of the steps so necessary to accomplish the results which we are so anxious to obtain, namely, a sound, workable, and safe flood-control policy. [Applause.]

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEMUTH], so much time as he may desire.

Mr. DEMUTH. Mr. Speaker, there are three methods of flood control—namely, reservoirs, local protective works such as flood walls and levees, and watershed retardation as practiced by the Department of Agriculture by such methods as reforestation, strip cropping, and similar practices.

On the lower Mississippi dikes or levees and diversion channels are principally used, and have been most successfully utilized by the United States Army engineers in meeting the particular problem encountered there.

In the Ohio River Basin the two principal methods recommended by the Army engineers is the use of reservoirs on the tributaries and headwaters of the Ohio River. Local protective works such as flood walls to protect such cities and towns as Pittsburgh, Louisville, Wheeling, Cincinnati, and other cities and towns in the Ohio River Basin, where such expenditures are economically justifiable are recommended to supplement the reservoirs.

H. R. 7646 is a bill to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes", approved June 22, 1936. This amendment authorizes the appropriation of $24,877,000 for construction of flood walls as recommended by the Chief of Engineers with the approval of the Secretary of War.

The passage of this act is most necessary to the peace of mind, safety, and preservation of the homes and property of the citizens of those cities and towns of the Ohio River and the metropolitan district of Pittsburgh, that suffer such heavy losses, and which recur at such rapid frequencies. For example, the town of Sharpsburg, with a population of 8,500 people, was under 18 feet of water in the year 1936, and was under an average of 4 to 6 feet of water three times already in the year of 1937. The patience, the resources, and the sturdiness of these people have been taxed most severely and their future welfare is most precarious.

Under my amendment, which reads as follows:

Provided, That the protection for Pittsburgh, Pa., is to be interpreted as applying to the metropolitan district of Pittsburgh—

the citizens of the towns contiguous to, but outside the corporate limits of the city of Pittsburgh will receive the same treatment as their neighbors, the citizens of the city of Pittsburgh. It should be remembered that Sharpsburg is the lowest lying town in the Pittsburgh metropolitan area, and that 90 percent of the town was inundated by the 1936 flood. It suffered more heavily in proportion to its size than any other town or city in this district.

I want to thank Chairman WHITTINGTON for his sense of fairness, and each and every member of the Flood Control Committee, both Democratic and Republican, for their unanimous approval of this clause which means so much for the metropolitan district of Pittsburgh. I also extend the thanks of the citizens of these towns to my fellow committeemen and Chairman WHITTINGTON for the insertion of this clause.

In our district they have talked flood control for more than 50 years but only due to the tireless work of Chairman WHITTINGTON and his committee, under the direction of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, was a comprehensive program of flood control for the entire Nation adopted. Under the direction of President Roosevelt and this committee, so ably led by Chairman WHITTINGTON, the first appropriation in the history of the country was made this year.

You gentlemen by your vote in favor of the passage of this act will be making the second major step in flood control, and I feel sure your action will meet with the approval of every American citizen.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a telegram from the president and council of the town of Sharpsburg, also from the flood control committee of the town of Sharpsburg.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The telegram referred to is as follows:

PITTSBURGH, PA., July 18, 1937.

Congressman PETER J. DEMUTH,
Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: We understand that the flood-control bill is being debated. Please do something for Sharpsburg—a major flood last year, three floods this year, many before, since 1810; immense losses. The future of the town is at stake. A letter explaining in detail follows.

Gratefully,

THE CITIZENS OF SHARPSBURG,
Per J. F. ZEHLER,
M. MICHAELOWSKI,
Chairmen.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MITCHELL] so much time as he may desire.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to give my whole-hearted support to this bill, known as H. R. 7646, introduced by my colleague [Mr. WHITTINGTON] from Mississippi. The bill is known as a bill to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes, approved June 22, 1936." The measure provides that the projects are to be selected by the Chief of Engineers, with the approval of the Secretary of War, in accordance with the report of the Chief of Engineers in House Committee on Flood Control, Document No. 1, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, at a cost not to exceed $24,877,000 for construction, and which is authorized to be appropriated for the purpose of flood control, and so forth.

I am glad to say that the report of the Chief of Engineers includes a recommendation for six reservoirs on the Cumberland River in my State, five of which will be located in Tennessee, and three of these five reservoirs will be within my congressional district. These three are the Dale Hollow Reservoir, formed by a dam on the Obey River 7.3 miles above its mouth; the Center Hill Reservoir, to be formed by a dam on the Caney Fork River 26.6 miles above its mouth; and the Stewart's Ferry Reservoir, to be formed by a dam located on Stones River 6.8 miles above its mouth. The estimated cost, as submitted to me by the Acting Chief of Engineers of the War Department, for construction of these dams is $4,100,000 for the Dale Hollow Reservoir, $14,800,000 for the Center Hill Reservoir, and $4,500,000 for the Stewart's Ferry Reservoir.

I appreciate the work being done by the Flood Control Committee of the House, of which Mr. WHITTINGTON is chairman, and am likewise most grateful for the fine cooperation given by Brig. Gen. G. B. Pillsbury, Acting Chief of Engineers, in connection with the pending bill. I am familiar, in a general way, with the location of the proposed dams, and especially those in my district, and am glad to know that relief is in sight for our people from the destruction and waste which has existed in the past because of high waters and floods in the Cumberland River Valley in middle Tennessee as well as that in west Tennessee. Perhaps the western area, along the Mississippi, has suffered more because of floods than has the middle section of our State, but it has been bad enough in middle Tennessee and along the Cumberland River and its tributaries for years. The bill is a step in the right direction. I am pleased to note that there is no serious opposition to the proposed measure and that it has practically united support of the Members of the House.

The people of Tennessee and of my congressional district will feel relieved to know that this progressive legislation is meeting with such favor in the Congress. It has long been needed. It will eliminate and do away with the disasters incident to the floods and to soil erosion that has obtained for years along the rivers of my State. Many millions of dollars in property values have been washed away and a great loss of life has occurred from time to time, as well as untold hardships visited upon my people because of floods and high waters in the rainy seasons. This is now, and soon will be, largely behind us because of this and kindred legislation. Much good has been accomplished by the building of dams from relief moneys in some sections, but the proposed bill is on a Nation-wide scale and means real relief from further flood disasters in many sections of our common country, and especially in my congressional district.

I am happy in the realization that the bill is to pass and that the long-felt need of my people will be realized. I am grateful to each and every member of the committee who have helped to write the present bill and am grateful to the Army engineers and all those who have contributed so much in time and effort to make this legislation possible. Money expended in flood-control work as provided in this measure will result in savings throughout the years and a great protection to all of our people. I do not know of a bill that has been proposed to the Congress that is entitled to more wholehearted support or is receiving more wholehearted support than has this measure. It should have had the attention of Congress long before this.

The land along the Cumberland and Caney Fork Rivers in my district, and especially the bottom land, is the most fertile soil we have. It is vitally important to those living in the area affected, as well as elsewhere, that future floods be avoided so as to conserve the property of the people living along these rivers and streams which have been so seriously affected in the past.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] so much time as he may desire.

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman. This bill should be passed by the House without dissent. It represents a minimum priority project program for the immediate protection of the cities along the Ohio River. It certainly is the very least we should do to meet this pressing need.

Many of us are beginning to realize that flood control can never be effected merely by constructing levees or building dams. We are realizing that the destruction of soil fertility has caused the decay and death of more than one great civilization. We are beginning, I hope and believe, to see our national problem as a whole instead of attempting to continue forever to look at it as a piecemeal task.

Sections 3 and 4 of this bill, indeed, are recognition of the necessary function of the Department of Agriculture in connection with flood control. These sections give the Secretary necessary duties and powers to provide for proper land use in future on lands whose drainage affects our flooded areas. This is as it should be. It is well for us to remember that too close and long-lasting an adherence to the principles of extreme individualism led to the destruction of China's forests, the wasting away of her topsoil, her present-day terrible floods, and the decline of her agriculture.

America, let us hope, has awakened soon enough. Flood control is the most dramatic phase of a great single challenge to us to preserve and properly develop all the natural gifts of God in America for the sake of future generations.

Reforestation, soil conservation, flood control, drought prevention, and public power development at low cost—all these are necessary part and parcel of one another. The forces of nature in their impact on human life in America are no respecters of the lines that separate the jurisdiction of committees of the Congress.

It is my earnest hope that the time will speedily come when all these matters can be dealt with in a coordinated manner. I believe this requires that these be central planning authorities for the various sections of the Nation. I do not believe such authorities should be turned loose to do as they please. I think Congress should require, receive, and study their reports and appropriate their funds from year to year. But I believe every dollar that is appropriated should be made to serve as many useful purposes as possible and without coordinated consideration of the whole natural resource problem I do not believe this is possible.

What I am really saying, of course, is that I hope we may speedily pass the legislation already introduced in this as well as the other body which will provide natural-resource planning and conservation authorities for the entire Nation. Future generations will thank us if we do.

In the meantime the least we can do is to provide necessary protection for the areas most threatened with flood. I agree with the chairman. I wish this bill were more extensive than it is. But I believe we are going about the thing in the right way—doing what is most essential now, and preparing for a truly sound attack on the entire problem as soon as full consideration can be given to appropriate legislation to accomplish this.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK] so much time as he may desire.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, this bill, H. R. 7646, impresses me favorably in at least two respects. First, although it is aimed principally to take care of the flood condition in the great central valleys of the country, such as the Ohio, the upper Mississippi, and the Missouri Valley, where the recent floods have been most disastrous, yet it contemplates some provision for the distant fringes of the country, as in the far West, as well. Again, I am favorably impressed with the nature of this bill in this respect, that while it is curative or remedial in its intention, it is also designed to be preventative. The old saying "that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure" certainly applies to the management of our rivers. If America had begun two or three generations ago to practice a little prevention in this respect, we would have less of remedial work to do now.

A remark made by our late colleague from Texas, Congressman Buchanan, impressed me as a sage observation. He thought that in the management of our lawless rivers we would not only need to practice one plan but a varied program involving several different kinds of tactics, perhaps the building of levees or retaining walls, perhaps the dredging of river beds, and perhaps the erection of storage dams. However, even these, in his judgment, would not be enough, for something must be done to retard the flow on the upper reaches of the watershed. Therefore, combined with great engineering works must be a treatment of the "little waters", the twig-end rivulets, and the watershed itself. The far-seeing statesman no doubt felt that soil conservation through reforestation and revegetation would be as much a part of total river-control and flood-prevention program as would dams, basins, dikes, levees, and the like. I agree with that view and am pleased with this measure, for I see exactly this sort of treatment contemplated in section 3 of the bill.

The gentleman from Ohio calls our attention to one feature that is not so good—the aspect of local contribution on cost. I take it that that refers to all engineering treatments involving expenditures for materials and labor. If it is extremely doubtful whether many small towns along the banks of a river, like the Ohio, cannot afford to pay their share of the total expense, then this program will break down. But it is even more to the point that relatively expensive engineering works on a stream through a mountain country, or a sparsely settled community, cannot be treated at all under this legislation calling for local contribution. Obviously, in such a case, there would be little or no contribution that could be made. Of course, I understand that the surveys authorized in the last section of the bill are to be paid for out of moneys appropriated, and in such cases no local contribution will be called for.

In my far western State of Arizona there are several streams that need to be surveyed and carefully investigated with a view of flood-control treatment. I might mention the San Pedro, in the southern part of the State; the Little Colorado, in the northern part; the Bill Williams, in the western portion; and the Big Sandy, a tributary of the Bill Williams. The last two named are included on page 7 of the bill in the list of rivers to be surveyed. Of course, I might have mentioned the Gila River in general, but, according to my understanding, a great deal of study has already been given to the scientific treatment of the Gila watershed. Much work has already been done on it. In my judgment, the greatest possibilities of combined scientific erosion control, flood prevention, and silt disposal that could be found in this country is in the vast project of that nature on the Gila watershed in two Southwestern States.

Some weeks ago the Governor of Arizona acquainted me with the fact that the Big Sandy in Mohave County, Ariz., was seriously in need of scientific treatment or several hundred farming families would be unable to subsist longer in its narrow valley. I believe the inclusion of the Big Sandy in this list of rivers for investigation will be the first step toward furnishing them relief. I am happy to say that the Bill Williams River also is included here and would like to point out, especially to my California colleagues, that the Bill Williams flows into the Colorado River just above the Parker Dam. It is frequently a wild and turbulent river and now capable of doing southern California much harm.

Twenty miles or so up the Bill Williams from its junction with the Colorado is an ideal dam site in a box canyon. When I say it is an ideal site, I imply that there is a splendid reservoir site upstream from the canyon. This Bill Williams River has an enormous watershed with an area about equal to that of Mohave County itself. Let me remind you that the counties in Arizona are larger than certain New England States. I have a feeling that an investigation of the Bill Williams River will reveal the need of a dam at this site, both for flood control and for irrigation. But such a dam would also protect the Parker Reservoir from being continually filled with muddy water and eventually filled with silt. It should be remembered that the Parker Reservoir is the one from which the city of Los Angeles and the metropolitan area around and about will obtain a water supply from the Colorado River. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, with these local interests in view, as well as the larger need of flood control in the Middle West, I hope for favorable action on this bill and fruitful future efforts later under its provisions.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] so much time as he may desire.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, there is no subject that should be and is of greater interest to the people of the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys than flood prevention.

The Committee on Flood Control by its intensive study of this problem and by its comprehensive hearings has rendered a great service, and I commend the chairman and the committee for the fine work they have done. I am heartily in favor of this bill because its object is meritorious and because it is the best bill that could be passed at this time.

No one who has not seen the devastation wrought by the flood in the Ohio Valley can have any idea of the awful destruction it wrought and the resultant suffering of the people. The actual damage will never be known. It was a major national disaster. We have had floods before that have wrought damage, and the loss sustained by reason of the highest previous flood was looked upon by the people as the extent of damage that could be inflicted by the waters of the Ohio River, but the last flood in the Ohio Valley was entirely unanticipated and unprecedented.

It has caused the Army engineers to revise their plans for flood prevention. They have come to the conclusion that impounding reservoirs must be supplemented by flood walls and levees, and it seems obvious that no adequate protection could otherwise be furnished to the cities. It has been the opinion of the President, which he has publicly expressed, and others connected with the administration that States and local subdivisions should furnish the lands, easements, and rights-of-way for the impounding reservoirs and for the flood walls and levees.

I am not disposed to argue that it would not be just for the States to make some contribution for the protection that flood-prevention measures would afford. It might be possible through comprehensive compacts of all the States benefited that contributions could be made by the States, not in regard to the number of works and prevention measures that will be constructed in each of the States but based upon the benefits that would accrue to each of them. If such compacts could be made and promptly carried out I would not be opposed to them.

But there is a condition demanding immediate action and not a theory that confronts us. I doubt seriously that some of the States would be able to comply with the conditions that would necessarily have to be made in these compacts. However, the requirement in the Flood Control Act of 1936 that the States and local subdivisions shall furnish the lands, easements, and rights-of-way is impossible of compliance, and as long as it is in the law there can be no substantial progress made in the construction of flood-prevention works.

The local subdivisions are not benefited by the proposed impounding reservoirs, but the benefits accrue to great valleys and to many States and far-distant territories.

I represent a district that has suffered greatly from the floods in the Ohio Valley. Eight of the nine counties in the Fifth District of Kentucky are bounded by the Ohio River. Each one of the eight has been a victim of these recurring disasters which were climaxed by the terrible flood of this year.

I speak of conditions in my district and in the State of Kentucky because I am familiar with them, but I have no doubt that the same conditions exist in all the other States and cities similarly situated.

Of the 45 impounding reservoirs which have been planned for the Ohio Valley by the Army engineers, 18 are in the State of Kentucky. The area submerged as computed by the Army engineers for the 18 reservoirs is 137,700 acres. Much of this land includes settlements, roads, bridges, and so forth, and a great part of it has considerable value. When the land is acquired for flood-prevention works it will be taken from the tax lists of the State to its constant annual loss. The cost of the land to be used in Kentucky in construction of these impounding reservoirs is computed by the Army engineers at $30,949,000, and I have no doubt it will actually go very much higher than that. There is a proposed reservoir authorized by the Flood Control Act of June 22, 1936, at Falmouth, Ky., in the district I represent, which, I am informed, the Army engineers would like to commence the construction of, but the area to be submerged for that reservoir is computed at 9,250 acres, much of which is good farming land and well settled, and the estimated cost of same is $1,822,000.

The mere statement of the facts, it seems to me, demonstrates this proposed impounding reservoir can never be constructed under the present law.

It is also evident that the other reservoirs proposed cannot be constructed under existing law. The reservoirs are planned at headwaters of the Big Sandy, the Licking, the Kentucky, the Salt, the Green, and the Cumberland Rivers and afford no protection to their immediate vicinities, for these localities have never been subject to floods.

The reservoirs will have no recreational value and will be of absolutely no benefit to the localities where constructed. The difficulties that obtain with reference to the States and local subdivisions acquiring the lands, easements, and rights-of-way for reservoirs also obtain in having the municipalities acquire the lands and easements for the levees and flood walls for their protection. Estimates, by the Army engineers, of the cost of lands and consequent damages for flood walls and levees for three cities in my district, where I am familiar with conditions, have been made. The cost of lands and damages which will have to be borne by Dayton, Ky., will be $412,000; Newport, $545,000; and Covington, $568,000.

Under the constitution of Kentucky there is a limitation on the tax rate of municipalities and also a constitutional limitation on municipal indebtedness, and all of these cities have practically reached that limit. It will be impossible for any of them to comply with the existing law.

These remarks have not been made in the spirit of criticism but to call attention to the obstacles placed in the law which will make the carrying out of the comprehensive flood-control plan impossible. They are made with the devout hope that some amendments may soon be passed to the present law that will obviate its present requirements and that the people of the Ohio Valley as they see these great works progress may be justified in the renewed assurance that there may be no recurring disaster such as has recently visited them.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FRED M. VINSON] so much time as he may desire.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to express my attitude toward the bill under discussion, H. R. 7646. I favor it as the initial start toward a program of flood control in the Ohio River Valley. However, I would not be frank with the House or myself if I did not say that this initial amount of approximately $25,000,000 is a very limited sum with which to start such a vast program; but, as I say, it is a start in the right direction, and I favor it as such.

Further, it is with regret that we find that the bill is presented under a suspension of the rules, which does not permit an amendment to it. So far as the Kentucky side of the Ohio River is concerned, we are and will be quite hampered in the flood-control program unless the present law is amended that will permit Federal contributions for the purchase of lands, rights-of-way, and the payment of damages due to the flood-control work, as in Kentucky we are limited by constitutional prohibition against the creation of debts which evidence money to provide these projects.

We know of no governmental unit in Kentucky, whether it is State, county, or city, that can, under our constitution, sell bonds which will take care of the expense of flood-control projects. The State of Kentucky has a constitutional provision limiting the indebtedness which it can incur to $500,000. There are similar constitutional provisions limiting the obligations which a county may incur. As I recall it, this limitation is 2 percent of the assessed value of the property in the county. There is a further constitutional provision that prohibits a city from incurring indebtedness in excess of 10 percent of the assessed values of the properties within the corporate limits if it is a city of the first, second, or third class, population over 15,000; if it is a city of the third class, with a population less than 15,000, or a city of the fourth class, 5 percent; if it is a city of the fifth or sixth class, 3 percent. With the present indebtedness of those governmental units, the State, the counties, and the cities, it is folly to consider that expenditures to construct flood walls can be made at local expense. I do not know a single city or county in my district that borders on the Ohio River that can make any contributions, as a matter of law, toward doing this job. It is not because they do not want to, but it is because of a constitutional provision that bars the way. I feel certain that this is typical of the other counties in Kentucky. The theory of local contributions may be argued, but how can this constitutional barrier in Kentucky be overcome?

Of course, it will be my purpose and the purpose of those of us who are interested in this flood-control work to do our dead level best to bring about an amendment to the law which will permit Federal contributions for the purchase of lands, rights-of-way, and payment of damages following the flood-control work.

Further, Mr. Speaker, the relation of the initial authorization, $25,000,000 to the sum total necessary to do this job is not commensurate with the needs of the situation, but, under the suspension of rules, there will be no chance to amend the bill to increase this sum on the floor of the House and we will have to continue the fight to secure further moneys so that this great valley will be protected from the huge flood losses it has suffered in the years gone by.

To me this job is truly a national problem. Frankly, it appears to me that it is high time for action rather than a continuation of theorizing about how this job will be or ought to be done. All of the finespun theories of the past in regard to the local communities doing this job has resulted, insofar as the Ohio River Valley is concerned, in the sum total of nothing in the way of flood prevention or flood control. It is a pretty thought to divide up costs among the various localities, but, in my opinion, the practical situation is such that unless it is considered to be a national problem very little or nothing is going to come out of such course.

I realize that such a tremendous undertaking is a long-haul proposition and that the whole job cannot be done overnight. It is a most difficult matter for Congress to determine the points at which local flood-prevention projects will be built. Starting at the point where the Ohio River touches my district, we have the cities of Catlettsburg, Ashland, Russell, Worthington, Wurtland, Raceland, Greenup, Fullerton, South Portsmouth, Vanceburg, Maysville, Dover, and Augusta, being the larger cities, which were covered up in this recent flood. There are many smaller communities where the damage was likewise great. This same situation is typical in the other districts. I do not see how Congress or the War Department is going to fairly choose the places where flood walls will be constructed. It, of course, will be argued that in the more thickly populated centers, greater damage in dollars was suffered, but it is a rather difficult problem to overlook the damage in dollars per capita. When a "feller" with small means has lost all he has or suffered material property damage, it means the same to him and his family whether he lives in a small community or in a metropolitan center. My thought is that this problem must be visualized as a unit of work with a comprehensive plan to do this job over a period of years that would see the whole job done as best it can be done.

Every Representative in Congress wants his district protected first. I know I feel that way about mine and rightfully so—every other Member in the flood area feels the same way about his district—and rightfully so, but I am inclined to think that if the job is viewed as a whole, with the shortest number of years that can be taken in which the money can be obtained to do this job that these splendid people in the Ohio Valley will appreciate that the job cannot be done in a day. I feel that the Federal Government should obligate itself to do this job and if such is the result of this intial movement I feel that it will be a job well done.

I want to express my appreciation and the appreciation of my people for the initiation of this work. I know that no Congress has ever listened with a more sympathetic ear or a more sincere feeling to the needs of the people. Throughout my experience in Congress I have never seen a more determined exhibition of the desires of Members of Congress to serve their constituency than was demonstrated during the flood of 1937. As you know, I was honored with the chairmanship of the group of Congressmen representing the flood areas in the Ohio Valley during this flood. The serious and effective work done by them is a monument to their work here as the representatives of a great people.

Again I want to express my appreciation for the manner in which Congress has responded to this bill. I believe that this is the best that can be done under the circumstances. It is a real start toward doing a real job. It is only natural for those of us representing districts which suffered during the recent flood to feel that the amount that is authorized under this bill is inadequate with the needs as reported to us by the Chief of Army Engineers as necessary to meet the problem; but, as I say, it is a start toward doing the job, and I feel that we must favor it and continue to fight with all our efforts in succeeding Congresses to have the job continue until it is fully and well done.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERGUSON] so much time as he may desire.

Mr. FERGUSON. I want to contrast for a minute the response the House is giving this bill (H. R. 7646) providing for flood-control works in the Ohio Valley, with the response given H. R. 8455, passed in the Seventy-fourth Congress. The Flood Control Act of 1936 passed the House by a bare majority amid cries of "pork."

If I may mention to the House, the Flood Control Act of 1936 was the first step toward the great national problem of flood control. It set out, in short, the policy that the Federal Government should improve, or participate in the improvement, of navigable waters including watersheds, for flood-control purposes if the benefits to whomsoever they may accrue are in excess of the estimated costs and if the lives and social security of people are otherwise adversely affected.

In addition to this it called upon the Secretary of Agriculture for further investigation of watershed and measures for run-off and water-flow retardation and soil-erosion prevention. This great national policy is the basis of the act of 1936.

In addition, this act authorized the construction of $300,000,000 of projects with localities paying a portion of the cost. This bill insures the desirability of the projects because local interests must contribute and in contributing thus guarantee the desirability of the projects' construction.

In the hearings on the Ohio Valley bill we are considering today, which I recommend for the consideration of every Member, it was developed by the Department of Agriculture, Soil Conservation Service, the Weather Bureau, and the Game Commission that every effort is being made to conserve natural resources and to investigate every possibility for the betterment and conservation of natural resources in the construction of flood-control works.

I take a great deal of pleasure in being a member of the committee which drafted the original flood-control bill that started the Nation on a great program of flood control.

Looking into the possibility of flood control from every angle, even including power, the act of 1936 provided for the installation of penstocks in all projects, where there seems to be a possibility of the development of power. So I may say to the Congress today that in passing this bill extending the flood-control measures to the recent damaged Ohio Valley this is one more step in an all-embracing national flood-control program started in the Seventy-fourth Congress by the Flood Control Committee.

I sincerely urge the Members of the House to investigate and study this program, because next year the Flood Control Committee plans to bring before the Congress a comprehensive national flood-control bill based on surveys already in the hands of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of Agriculture. These surveys shall include the construction of levees, spillways, diversion channels, channel rectification, reservoirs, and utilization of water resources through the building of power dams or a combination of power, reclamation, conservation, and flood-control dams, and all works necessary for an effective soil and water conservation for all such rivers and their watersheds.

And so the Committee on Flood Control, having pioneered the start of this work, may be looked to, under the able leadership of its chairman, Mr. WHITTINGTON, to bring before the next session of this Congress a utilized plan that will insure greater returns on the expenditure of public money for the ever-present problem of work relief than under any other form for which money can be expended.

Now, to come to one technical provision of the bill, I want to point out to the Members of this House that the War Department appropriation bill, now in the hands of the President, makes available $30,000,000 of regular funds for carrying out provisions of the Flood Control Act of 1936, and this is also the bill that will make necessary funds available for carrying out the provisions of this act we are passing on today. So we may say that the start of the flood-control work in the Ohio Valley hangs entirely upon the President signing the War Department appropriation bill now on his desk.

In addition, I want to point out that since this bill may use funds from the $30,000,000 regularly appropriated, the Flood Control Committee, represented by Chairman WHITTINGTON, Mr. SECREST, and myself, were assured by the Director of the Budget, Mr. Bell, that any funds taken out of the regular $30,000,000—which was appropriated to carry out projects previously authorized in the 1936 act—will be replaced by request of the Budget for deficiency appropriations to be asked for at the beginning of the second session of the Seventy-fifth Congress next January. It is understood that relief funds will be used to carry out flood-control projects exceeding $30,000,000 earmarked by the Senate. So we may say that this administration and this body has started a great national system of flood control by enacting the authorization act of 1936 and now amending it by including the Ohio Valley today, and providing funds for execution of these authorizations in the appropriation bill now before the President.

We have started a great work. I say again, I am proud to be a member of the committee that instituted this program, and I sincerely hope that the Congress will read and study the hearings developed under this bill and will not retard this great program so well started by adopting other legislation which would require that the whole subject of flood-control legislation, and appropriation carrying out the legislation be started all over.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. KEE] so much time as he may desire.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Speaker, that the construction of an adequate flood-control system for the rivers of the United States constitutes one of our gravest national problems has been a recognized fact from an early date in our history. Floods in our great river valleys have been practically of annual occurrence for many years, with the resultant loss of millions of dollars in property damage and the frequent loss of lives. It is estimated that, in less than 50 years, the loss by floods in property damage has reached an excess of $1,000,000,000, and that the loss in lives has been from 1,000 to 1,500. Annually thousands of people have been driven from their homes in these river valleys, and literally thousands of homes have been swept away—a total loss to the home owners and a loss to the local and National Governments in taxable values.

These disastrous and terrifying floods, coming with increasing frequency to cause havoc and despair to the peaceful and happy people dwelling in the river valleys, originate from causes beyond the control of those living in the pathway of danger and beyond the help of local communities. It has long been recognized that, if there is any remedy for this condition, that remedy must be found in effective efforts by the National Government. It is well known by those acquainted with the facts that the engineers of our War Department have for many years had this problem before them for study. Tirelessly, these engineers, splendidly equipped by training and experience, have been engaged in the formulation of comprehensive plans for effective flood control. While it seems that the rest of the world has only progressed to the point of engaging in long discussions as to what steps might be taken to control this deadly menace to the residents of our river valleys, the Army engineers have steadily gone forward, not only in an exhaustive study of this situation, but also in the formation of plans for real and effective protection. These engineers have been ready for years and are ready today to go forward in the construction of a comprehensive and adequate flood-control program. Their efforts, however, along these lines have either been slowed up, handicapped, or even entirely prevented by lack of authorization or by failure in the appropriation upon the part of the Federal Government of sufficient funds to commence, continue, and complete the necessary constructive work.

It is a well-known fact that we have had frequent authorizations of this work passed by the Congress of the United States with great enthusiasm. In these cases the effort has usually ended with authorization only and with no provision whatever for appropriations to carry the work to completion. In these cases all that could be done was for the engineers to pigeonhole their carefully prepared plans and await possible future action on the part of the Congress. In the meanwhile the disastrous floods continue to occur annually, causing in every case a greater yearly loss than would have been necessary to have been appropriated for the purpose of preventing them.

It would require too much time and space for a full discussion of the flood situation within our entire national domain. For my present purpose I wish to discuss the flood situation in a part of the Ohio River Basin, including the Great Kanawha River and that section situate between the mouth of the Great Kanawha and the city of Cincinnati. I wish also to dwell particularly upon one project, to wit, what is known as the Bluestone Dam and Reservoir, the construction of which was authorized by the Flood Control Act known as Public, No. 738, of the Seventy-fourth Congress.

It is an admitted fact that flood control of the larger rivers can only be effected by the control of the flow of their tributaries. It is this fact, no doubt, which controlled the Army engineers in their preparation of the plans for the control of the floods in the Ohio River Basin. As is well known, the Ohio River is formed by a junction, at Pittsburgh, Pa., of the Allegheny River flowing from the north and the Monongahela flowing from the south. Therefore, and naturally, the first problem was to control the floods in these two rivers and thus protect the city of Pittsburgh and contiguous territory from the annual recurring inundations to which this section is subjected. This protection would extend also to points on the Ohio River far below Pittsburgh. With this end in view plans have long since been formulated by the War Department for the control of the two streams which, flowing together, form the Ohio. Therefore we find in the general plan for control of the Ohio River Basin proposals for the construction of flood-control reservoirs in both streams. As a matter of fact, the great Tygart River Dam across a tributary of the Monongahela and located near Grafton, W. Va., is now practically completed at a cost of something in excess of $16,000,000. This dam will naturally be supplemented by other reservoirs across the Allegheny and Monongahela Rivers or their tributaries, both in Pennsylvania and West Virginia. The plans of the War Department engineers also provide for many other reservoirs of like character across other tributaries of the Ohio between Pittsburgh and Cairo. These plans have been approved but no money has yet been provided for the construction of the works.

The chief tributary of the Ohio River between the two points last named is the Great Kanawha River, which meets the Ohio at the town of Point Pleasant in West Virginia. The Great Kanawha is formed at Gauley Bridge, Kanawha County, W. Va., by a junction of the Gauley River with the New River. The Gauley River, flowing from the north, is a stream of considerably less importance than the New River. The New River has its source in the mountains of North Carolina and flows practically in every direction of the compass until it meets with the Gauley to form the Great Kanawha. In North Carolina, the New River flows for a considerable distance southward; it then turns to the east and seems to wander around along the foothills of the Blue Ridge and Allegheny Mountains, finally turning northward to flow through a considerable section of Virginia. Turning to the east at, or near, Radford, Va., it flows into West Virginia at a point located in the extreme southeastern portion of the State, and then cutting its way through the hills, it meets the Gauley at a point about 32 miles from where it crosses the Virginia-West Virginia line. The Great Kanawha River is, because of the large drainage area taken care of by the New River, a full-grown river at its source. It has been, since the early history of the country, one of the navigable tributaries of the Ohio. Many years ago it was improved for navigation by the United States Government and is much used today by river steamers. Within the past 2 years, the Government has undertaken further to improve this river for navigation, and in doing so there has been eliminated 12 of the old locks and dams, and these have been taken care of by the construction of three superdams, built solely for the purpose of improving the navigability of the stream. It is my understanding that at the present time the Government has leased the use of these three superdams to a power company for the generation of hydroelectric power. My further understanding is that the Government is paid for the production of the power at the dams and the distribution of this power is made by the power company through its own facilities. Therefore, the present dams are intended solely for the purposes of navigation and power and not for flood control.

That the Great Kanawha River is subjected to severe and disastrous floods goes without saying. Its main tributary, the New River, is uncertain in its conduct. The territory drained by this last named stream is frequently subjected to extremely heavy rainfalls. Piercing as it does the higher mountain regions of three States wherein the forests have, to a considerable extent, been cut away and where many of the mountain chains are practically barren, the rainfalls increase in quantity from year to year and the flow-off is increasing, also, in rapidity as the years go by. As a matter of fact, there is not a year that passes wherein the residents of the Great Kanawha Valley, from Gauley Bridge to Point Pleasant, have not good reason to expect either one or more heavy floods. As this is one of the richest valleys in the State of West Virginia, not alone in agriculture, but in manufacturing interests, these floods grow more costly each year. The capital of the State, to wit: Charleston, W. Va., is located in this valley on the banks of the Great Kanawha. Around Charleston, and from that city up the river to Gauley Bridge, we find located the greatest chemical producing plants in the United States. The hills upon both sides of the valley carry large seams of workable bituminous coal. By drilling a short distance down into the earth, there may be found streams of salt water which have been utilized since pioneer days in the manufacture of pure salt and all its byproduct chemicals. Oil wells are also drilled in this valley as well as natural gas wells, the products from which are used either for fuel or for local consumption, or piped to other markets. In other words, this valley is a rich, thriving, enterprising, and up-to-date section of the Nation. Yet it is constantly subjected to the dangers and the excessive costs of devastating floods. In addition to this, the results of these floods are more far reaching than merely the Kanawha Valley, for the vast flood waters that are turned into the Ohio by the Great Kanawha at Point Pleasant add to the burdens carried by the Ohio and increase the damage of Ohio floods in every Ohio River city from Point Pleasant to Cincinnati and beyond.

As has been stated, for over 10 years the engineers of the War Department have had ready a comprehensive plan for the effective control of the floodwaters of the Ohio River Basin, including the floods of the Great Kanawha, and yet nothing has been done about it. With reference to the plans for the Kanawha Valley, to which I am particularly addressing myself at present, it need only be said that these plans comprehend the construction of four reservoirs, to wit: One on the Elk River above the city of Charleston and at or near the town of Gassaway, one on the Gauley River just above the point where this river enters the Great Kanawha, one at what is known as Big Bend on the Greenbrier River, and one across the New River just below the point where this river is joined by the Bluestone River and just above the town of Hinton, W. Va. These four proposed dams are contemplated, in the first instance, for flood control only, and together they will completely take care of the flood situation in the Kanawha Valley. Among these proposed dams and reservoirs the chief one is the one across New River, which is known as the Bluestone Reservoir, near Hinton. The construction of this dam was authorized by the Seventy-fourth Congress in Public, No. 728, at a cost of approximately $13,000,000. However, it must be remembered that this authorization was not the first movement to be put on foot for the construction of this Bluestone project. The construction of this dam and reservoir had long been recognized by the engineers of the War Department as a very important project in their general plans for flood control of the Ohio Valley Basin. I have, in fact, been advised that the plans for this dam were among the first to be completed by these engineers.

For a number of years, I have been personally interested in the need for flood control. I have had a special interest in efforts made in this direction for the benefit of the Great Kanawha and the Ohio Valley Basin. Since becoming a Member of Congress from the most southern district of West Virginia, this interest has materially increased and I have exercised every effort consistent with my ability to secure not only the authorization for the construction of all of the dams included in the plan of the War Department engineers, but particularly of those affecting my immediate constituents whose interest I am representing. It has been my idea that, purely as a flood-control proposition, the plans of the War Department engineers should be carried out and that if we could secure the construction of the Bluestone Dam, we would have but little trouble in securing a sufficient appropriation to complete the plans for the other dams proposed for the protection of the Great Kanawha, and which may be constructed at considerably less cost than the Bluestone.

After the passage of the Federal Emergency Relief Act, I made every effort to secure from the proper authority an authorization and an appropriation from this fund to inaugurate the work of construction of the Bluestone Dam. With this idea in view, I had interviews with many agencies in reference to the matter. Practically all of these agencies refused to recommend the allocation of funds for the construction of this project out of the emergency-relief funds, basing their refusal upon the statement that the labor required for this work was disproportionate to the cost of materials and all other necessary expenditures in connection therewith. I had an interview with General Markham, Chief of Engineers of the War Department, and, while he placed his stamp of approval upon the project, he refused to recommend its construction out of relief funds for the same reason as that assigned by the other agencies.

However, on September 12, 1935, President Roosevelt, recognizing the importance of this Bluestone Dam as a flood-control project, issued an Executive order in which he stated that this project had been recommended by the United States Army engineers, was approved by the Mississippi River Commission and by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors and by the Secretary of War. He stated, also, that upon investigation he had found that the construction of the Bluestone Dam and Reservoir project would "aid in flood control and in the prevention of soil erosion and stream pollution, and will promote navigation, agriculture, sanitation, and power production." Whereupon the President ordered and directed the Secretary of War, through the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, to proceed with the construction of said Bluestone Dam and Reservoir in accordance with the report to the Chief of Engineers and the plans and specifications submitted therewith. And the President, in this order, allocated the sum of $1,000,000 for beginning the construction of this project, which amount was to be made available out of the moneys appropriated by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935. This Executive order stated, also, that, out of this sum of money, so allocated, the sum of $800,000 should be made available "for the acquisition by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise of lands necessary for the said project, and the Secretary of War is hereby directed to acquire and clear, or cause to be acquired, or cleared, such lands in anticipation of their use for such project."

Immediately after the President had issued this Executive order, the Army engineers established headquarters at Hinton, W. Va., and commenced the preliminary work leading to the construction of the dam and reservoir. The final plans and specifications were checked and completed; the actual location of the dam was determined; the necessary soundings and borings were done to the end that the dam be located upon a proper foundation. In addition to this, two or more Civilian Conservation Corps camps were located in the valley above the site of the proposed dam and, with the consent of the landowners, the area to be covered by the impounded waters was partially cleared away. In other words, all the preliminary steps were taken up to the actual acquisition of a large portion of the right-of-way which was owned by the West Virginia Power Co. and which had been acquired by this company for the purpose of building a power dam under private ownership. This company would not agree upon a price for their holdings, and thereupon proceedings were brought against the power company on behalf of the Federal Government to condemn the holdings of the power company, which were necessary for proceeding with the work of construction. These proceedings were instituted in the United States District Court for the Southern District of West Virginia, of which the Honorable George W. McClintic, of Charleston, W. Va., is judge. After the filing of the petition of the Government praying for the condemnation of the property of the power company and the appointment of commissioners to assess the value thereof, the power company, through its attorneys, appeared before the court and filed its demurrer to the Government's petition. I have not had an opportunity to examine the papers in this case, but it is my understanding that this demurrer was based upon the point that there is no specific act of Congress authorizing either the purchase or condemnation of the land and that Congress could not delegate to the President the authority upon which the President relied for his Executive order under which the construction of the dam and reservoir was directed.

I do not know just when this demurrer was filed, but I do know that on July 2, 1936, Judge McClintic heard argument on the demurrer, and on November 2 of the same year advised counsel that the demurrer had been sustained by him, and that he would enter an order dismissing the Government's petition, which I presume was done. I am advised that no oral or written opinion was delivered by the judge in the matter. Therefore, I am, unfortunately, unable to state the exact grounds upon which the judge based his order sustaining the demurrer and dismissing the petition of the Government. I do know this, however, and this fact should not be lost in the consideration of this matter, the demurrer of the power company to the Government's petition was not argued until July 2, 1936, and the order sustaining the demurrer was not entered until November 2, 1936. And this is a recorded fact, before this argument was made and before this order was entered, the Congress of the United States passed an act authorizing the construction of public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes, being Public, No. 738, of the Seventy-fourth Congress, and which act was approved by the President of the United States on June 22, 1936. This act, duly passed by the Congress and signed and approved by the President, fully authorized and approved the building and completion of the Bluestone Reservoir, using the following language: "Construction of reservoirs including the completion of the Bluestone Reservoir now under way." This approval by Congress of the construction of this project certainly ratifies the act of the President in directing such construction by his Executive order issued September 12, 1935.

If it does not ratify the President's Executive order, then it certainly must be considered as an independent authorization to the War Department to construct this dam and reservoir and clothes the War Department with the power to do all things necessary for this construction, including the right of condemnation or necessary rights-of-way. And it authorized an appropriation to meet the cost. If it requires no specific act of either a legislature or of Congress in any particular case to vest a railway company or power company or any other public-service corporation with the right of eminent domain, then why can it be held that in each instance where this right is necessary to the welfare of the United States Government and to its public works, a special act of authorization must be passed by Congress to enable the United States Government to condemn land upon which to build an authorized public service project for the welfare of the people of the country? The construction of the Bluestone Dam and Reservoir was fully authorized by an act of Congress signed by the President on the 22d day of June 1936, and yet, on the 2d day of November 1936, a Federal judge refuses the right of condemnation to an authorized agency of the Government on the claim that at some time in the past the President had ordered this same work to be done without having authority to make such order.

In discussing the matter of the Bluestone Dam project with our Flood Control Committee, and as well with the subcommittee on nonmilitary activities of the War Department, I have found it difficult to get it understood that further work upon this project has not been stopped by an "injunction." As I understand it, there has never been an injunction issued by any court restraining or inhibiting the Government, or any agency thereof, from proceeding with this construction. Further work on the dam was stopped merely because of the order heretofore mentioned denying to the Government the right of eminent domain in the matter of acquiring the rights-of-way owned by the West Virginia Power Co. And, as stated above, this order, according to my understanding, was purportedly based upon the determination that the President of the United States exceeded his authority in the issuance of his Executive order. In my opinion, it would serve no good purpose now to argue whether the President exceeded his authority in issuing this order or whether he did not. Congress has, since the issuance of the order, approved the work, authorized its continued construction, and, to all intents and purposes, legally and otherwise, has ratified the acts of the President. Therefore, upon what grounds doth this court order stand?

Not only the people of West Virginia who reside in the great Kanawha Valley, in the capital, Charleston, in the historical city of Point Pleasant, in the large and growing city of Huntington and in the border town of Kenova, but all of the residents of the Ohio Valley, including those who live in Gallipolis, Ironton, Portsmouth, and Cincinnati, Ohio, and those who dwell on the Kentucky shores and in the cities of Catlettsburg, Ashland, Maysville, Newport, and Covington, Ky., are deeply interested in the construction of the Bluestone Dam and Reservoir. It is claimed upon good authority that the control of the floodwaters in the great Kanawha River will lower the floodwaters at Cincinnati in the Ohio to the extent of approximately 7 feet. The Bluestone Dam will impound practically 918,000 acre-feet of floodwater and will take care of the waters from a drainage area of 4,860 square miles. It is estimated that this dam and reservoir can now be completed with an expenditure of approximately $13,000,000. After the allocation by the President of $1,000,000 toward this construction, the War Department expended in engineering, labor, and final plans, approximately $300,000.

Some days ago, I asked from the Department information with reference to the distribution of the $700,000 which remained after the expenditure of the $300,000 mentioned. I was advised that the $700,000 remaining after the War Department expenditure of $300,000 had been turned back into the Federal emergency-relief fund. In other words, I take it that this means that this amount has been recovered back into the Treasury of the United States. I am not advised as to what or whose orders the War Department acted under in returning this money back into the Treasury. When Judge McClintic dismissed the Government's petition in its condemnation proceedings, this order of the judge was certainly subject to an appeal to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fourth Judicial Circuit and, in my opinion, such an appeal should have been taken at once.

An adverse decision in the United States circuit court of appeals would certainly be subject to review by the United States Supreme Court, and, in my opinion, an order of the court based upon as grave a matter as an alleged action of the President which exceeded his authority should be a matter demanding review. However, I have not been advised of any further steps in the proceedings. In the meanwhile nothing further is being done toward the construction of the Bluestone Dam.

I am honestly of the opinion that the determination of the United States district court was erroneous, but that is merely an opinion entitled, perhaps, to no greater weight than the opinion of any other individual. What we need now is action which will lead to the final construction of this important link in the chain of projects necessary for the control of floods in the Ohio River Basin.

I view with favor the bill brought before the House by the very competent chairman of the Committee on Flood Control [Mr. WHITTINGTON], and I wish to pledge to him my future cooperation in his worthy efforts. The only objection that I have to the bill known as H. R. 7646 is that it does not carry with it sufficient authorization to meet the present emergency. It should also have carried authority for the appropriation of at least $2,000,000 for continuance of the work upon the Bluestone project, provided the authorization already made is not deemed sufficient. It may be true that we have a wave of economy sweeping over us at the present time which drowns out our efforts in behalf of controlling what is perhaps the most deadly menace with which we are yearly confronted. I do not believe in this kind of economy. It seems to me that there is no economy in withholding flood-control appropriations which will correct for a comparatively small amount a situation under which our people annually lose anywhere from twice to four times the amount of the required appropriation. Would it not be the better judgment for us to appropriate today, or as soon as we can possibly do it, a sufficient amount of money to enable our Army engineers to correct and control the threatening flood conditions in our river valleys than for us to plead economy and thus permit the people of this country to be subject to losses which every year amount to many times the sum of money it would require for us to entirely correct the situation? The matter of flood control must of necessity be met by us at some time, and therefore why not meet it promptly and finally and thus insure our people from this deadly menace?

Another question which has erroneously been raised for the purpose of hindering and delaying the construction of the Bluestone Reservoir is based upon the requirement contained in the Flood Control Act of 1936, that the various States, political subdivisions thereof, or other responsible local agencies, shall give assurances that the lands, easements, and rights-of-way necessary for the construction of the various flood-control projects will be provided without cost to the United States. It is frequently, and with a complete disregard of the facts, stated that this requirement applies to the Bluestone Reservoir project and that, therefore, the work thereon cannot be continued by the Government until the State of West Virginia, or local agencies therein, provide these rights-of-way. This statement is entirely without foundation.

As heretofore fully set out, the construction of the Bluestone Reservoir was started by an Executive order issued by the President on the 12th day of September 1935. Immediately after the issuance of this order, work was commenced upon the construction of the project. This work was continuously prosecuted, under the direction of the War Department and with the aid of the Civilian Conservation Corps until further work was stopped because of the order entered by Federal Judge McClintic on November 2, 1936. Therefore, the work of construction of the Bluestone Reservoir was "under way" at the time of the passage of the Flood Control Act of 1936, in which it was provided that States or local agencies furnish free rights-of-way to the Government.

The Flood Control Act of 1936 recognized this fact, and, including in its act an authorization for the completion of the Bluestone Reservoir, specifically describes this project as being "now under way", and by the terms of that act exempts all such projects from the provision in reference to the contribution of rights-of-way by States or local agencies. At the time of the passage of this Flood Control Act there were other flood-control projects which were under way, notably the Tygart River Dam, near Grafton, W. Va., work upon which is still being prosecuted, and where no requirement was enforced as to contribution of rights-of-way either by the State or other local agency. I distinctly recall that at the time of the passage of the Flood Control Act in 1936 the situation with reference to the effect of the act upon the further construction of the Bluestone Reservoir was discussed upon the floor of the House, and the act was passed with the understanding that the Bluestone Reservoir would be exempt from the right-of-way provision of the bill.

After taking everything into consideration, we are now confronted with this proposition, to wit: A flood-control project of the very gravest importance and which has the approval of practically every agency of the Government, which was placed under construction by order of the President, which was authorized and approved by the Congress of the United States, which was partially completed in that all of the preliminary work has been finished, is now lying idle, useless, and neglected simply because of an order of a district court which no interested agency of the Government has seemed to either have the wish or will or nerve to even question. How long are we going to permit this condition to remain? Thousands of our people dwelling in the Great Kanawha Valley and in the basin of the Ohio River are vitally interested in the matter. While we delay action, the elements are not stayed. Floods will continue their ravages in these valleys. Homes will continue to be swept away. Vast damages will continue to accrue. Is the declaration of policy as set out by Congress in its Flood Control Act of 1936 a true expression of the sense of the legislative branch of our Government, or is it merely an assemblage of meaningless words?

In closing, I wish to make it clear that my deep interest in this matter is from a flood-control standpoint only. To my mind, the effect of the project herein described upon navigation is a secondary consideration, as is also all other schemes or plans which are frequently sought to be tied in with this project and made the basis for objections thereto.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of the time allotted to me to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SECREST].

Mr. SECREST. Mr. Speaker, in 1936 we passed a comprehensive flood-control bill for the entire United States. The Ohio flood of 1937 was so great the plans we had made in the 1936 bill were deemed to be insufficient for our protection. Consequently we asked the Chief of Engineers of the Army for a further report. He reported an enlarged plan for the Ohio River, contemplating approximately 70 great reservoirs, including some already constructed, and the building of levees for the protection of 155 towns along the Ohio River on both sides, some in Kentucky, some in West Virginia, some in Ohio, and some in Pennsylvania.

This bill provides for carrying out the recommendation for the building of levees. Any town which can furnish the money for rights-of-way and the necessary pumps to carry the water back over the levees after it has seeped through can take advantage of the provisions of this bill.

This measure goes a step further and provides that any river in the United States upon which the Chief of Engineers has completed a survey shall be given a survey by the Department of Agriculture. This means the Miami, Little Miami, Muskingum, Scioto, and Sandusky Rivers in Ohio, in fact all the rivers where the Army engineers have made surveys, in every State in the Union, can now be given a survey by the Department of Agriculture to determine water retardation, water run-off, and soil conservation. This bill should pass. [Applause.]

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein from page 27 of the hearings a statement furnished the committee by the Chief of Engineers, giving the amount of the flood damages for each of the communities in the Ohio River Basin in 1936 and in 1937, aggregating for the 2 years some $600,000,000.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do not think I shall object, I wonder if the chairman could tell us with respect to the estimates for the regular permanent bill for next year whether they have gone far enough into their plans to give us some idea of the probable cost.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The probable cost of what?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. The cost under the bill for next year.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The bill for next year has not been passed on by the Congress and has not been reported.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. But the gentleman has been working on that and I would like to have his estimate.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I may say for the benefit of the gentleman from Kansas and for the other Members of the House that the Chief of Army Engineers has recommended certain works, including reservoirs, along the tributaries of the Ohio, tributaries of the Missouri, and the tributaries of the Mississippi, the aggregate cost of which will be around $600,000,000, such works to cover a period of from 10 to 20 years.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. That is about what I had in mind and I will ask the gentleman the further question, if that were all accomplished, would there be any assurance that you have got the floods controlled, and is there not a real question as to whether it is worth the money, since we have too much land anyway, and should we not let these rivers kind of take their course?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I would say that this is not a question of reclamation, but of protecting the best valleys we have, as well as important cities, and important industrial areas.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, of course, but I should like to ask the gentleman a question which I did not have time to ask him before. The $300,000 in section 2 does not come out of the $24,000,000?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. And the same thing is true with respect to the surveys, in that they are not to come out of that amount?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. LANHAM]. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent in the extension of my remarks to include a statement with respect to the protective works along the Ohio River, the character of the work reported on and recommended by the Chief of Engineers, the cost of construction, the total cost of all works, and the cost of the rights-of-way.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do this because of the question asked by the gentleman from Kansas as to a comprehensive flood-control program which the Chief of Army Engineers has recommended. It is a fact, is it not, that despite this recommendation of the Chief of Army Engineers, it is the desire of the President that you not go into that next year and additional funds will not be appropriated next year?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I stated in my opening comprehensive remarks that the President had requested that the comprehensive plan be continued until the next session of the Congress.

Mr. GRISWOLD. And all that is to be expended next year is the money you are now authorizing to be appropriated?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. And the moneys heretofore appropriated by the Congress.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I cannot imagine anyone from Ohio, where we have had disastrous flood conditions in recent months, doing anything but giving his enthusiastic support to this bill. Up in the northern part of the State we now have the Sandusky-Scioto Conservancy District and in recent weeks, and as a matter of fact, right at the present moment, flood conditions exist in that area. On top of that we have had a flood for 3 weeks in the town of Bellevue, Ohio, with water reaching as high as half way up the telephone poles, not derived from any river, but due to the fact that the community is built upon subterranean passageways.

The cities in the Sandusky River district are Fremont and Tiffin. There has been high water in and around these points, with great destruction to crops in the surrounding countryside. However, there is no river at Bellevue. Yet the flood has been worse there.

In order to meet the flood ravages we have sought to enlist the assistance of every governmental agency that is available under these conditions. First of all, the Army engineers, the best flood experts in the world, sent one of their representatives to give guidance in getting rid of the water at Bellevue. Constantly recurring downpours have greatly complicated this problem. The water, blanketing several parts of the community so long, has created a serious health menace.

The presence of the Army engineer has been extremely helpful. In addition to dealing with the immediate problem, his report will undoubtedly provide a formula for dealing with this problem in the future. He has also checked up on the conditions in the Tiffin-Fremont area so that this newest flood data can be included in the program of activity for the Sandusky-Scioto Conservancy District.

A flood without a river is more rare than the proverbial case of a "man bites dog"; maybe this is the first case of the kind in this country; at least, it is extremely unusual. The Army engineer who went to Bellevue remarked that ordinarily, in dealing with a flooded community, they go to the nearby river and there it is; but in Bellevue it is a case of "Where is it?"

Underneath this town is a series of passageways, of underground streams, and in some places, elaborate caves. Think of a flood arising from this condition. An Ohio expert who is familiar with the territory contends that sinkholes which mark the area around Bellevue lead to underground channels which carry off water from the lowlands of the vicinity. When rainfall becomes excessive, he says, the water which has entered the rock crevices at a higher level to the south, creates such a pressure at the openings in Bellevue and farther north, that it gushes up and floods the lands there. He believes Bellevue is on a direct line of the underground drainage which begins many miles south of Bellevue and ends at Castalia, where the world-famous Blue Hole is located, near the Sandusky Bay. The subterranean water, according to this man, has been at work for thousands of years, dissolving the limestone and carrying the dissolved material to lower levels. There are fields where the rock over many acres has subsided several feet, presumably brought about by the washing away of the rock layers underneath.

These peculiar conditions have brought about a flood of unbelievable proportions. As previously mentioned, the water has been more than halfway up telephone poles, both in and out of town. It is still a very serious problem to get rid of the water, get it out of the homes, off ruined streets and fields where crops have been ruined. The water moved with such force that it swept away railroad embankments and tracks; it piled dirt around garages in one area within a couple of feet of the roofs. While not so extensive, the rehabilitation problem is the same here as in the Ohio River region around Cincinnati.

My colleague from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] has been an outstanding leader in flood-control work here in Congress. We all know that is true, and we appreciate that he knows this sort of problem from A to Z. I doubly appreciate the cooperation of the Army engineers, because he tells me that this is the first time to his knowledge that they have ever dispatched a representative to a flood scene under circumstances like these. In this case the request was made one day and the engineer was there the next day.

In similar manner the assistance of the Federal Housing Administration has been enlisted for restoration, rebuilding, and replacement of improvements on real property in line with their policy in guaranteeing flood-relief loans in this classification.

The Disaster Loan Corporation has authorized its agents at Detroit and Cleveland to make a survey of the need for their services in the Fremont, Tiffin, Bellevue region. If they find the survey indicates the need of assistance on the basis of character loans, including farming areas, on first and second mortgages and to fixed property losses like barns or fences that have been destroyed, they have agreed to send their representatives to the local field to give help to the R. F. C. set-up. Similar cooperation has been sought from the Resettlement Administration in relation to stock losses, the production-credit banks, the Farm Credit Administration, and Resettlement Administration dealing with crop losses, seed advances, and activities in this category.

Only today the Army engineers also expressed the belief that they may be able to provide a badly needed home rehabilitation survey, which under their expert methods has been extremely valuable to other communities stricken by flood.

Now, then, all of these things give the picture of the conditions and outline the action taken to meet the situation. But an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, and the bill before us now deals with flood control or flood prevention. I am heartily in favor of the bill. However, I regret that today's bill deals only with levees and flood walls in the areas announced. I wish it included the area and type of work indicated by the situation I have tried to describe, and the work for additional upstream communities. Do I understand, Mr. Chairman, that it does make provision to carry out some limited activities in other regions, like the Sandusky River area, where a survey has already been made?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Oh, no; not where a survey has been made, but only where the projects have been approved by the Congress of the United States, and it is necessary before any relief funds can be expended that such projects be approved by the Congress of the United States. However, the doors of the Committee on Flood Control will be open to the gentleman at all times, and we will give him a sympathetic hearing on any such proposition.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. But with respect to other conservancy districts, this bill does put them in a position to deal better with these problems?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Like the gentleman, I have a great many more matters that I would like to have included, but this measure deals primarily with the Ohio River Basin.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I withdraw my reservation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, at the risk of a moment's delay, I submit a further unanimous-consent request.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in the revision of my remarks I may include therein the names of the reservoirs included in the Chief of Engineer's comprehensive report, to which we have referred, the estimated cost of construction, the estimated cost of highways, of railroads, and of other items that the local interests are expected to pay, together with the total costs as they appear in the report of the Chief of Engineers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House may have 5 legislative days within which to extend their remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I was interested in what the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON] said regarding the expenditure of these large amounts of money on flood control. There is this to be said about flood control. It is a rational undertaking to accomplish some good for the community and for the country. There is one way in which we expend money on our rivers that is not modern or rational. I refer to the lavish expenditure of money to restore the river transportation of 75 years ago. We have an example of it for about 100 miles along my district in the upper Mississippi River, where the War Department is expending a trainload of money, not on something modern but in a futile effort to restore obsolete river transportation. I refer to the 9-foot channel in the upper Mississippi River, which will cost the Treasury something like $170,000,000 before it is completed, and which the Army engineers estimate will cost one million and three-quarter dollars each year for upkeep after its completion, and which, as can be demonstrated mathematically, cannot possibly be justified in an economic way. On top of that, in this 9-foot channel that is costing this large sum of money, something like 25 or 26 dams are to be put in, which will be an aggravation of floods. After the dams have been built all of the natural reservoirs for flood waters that go down the Mississippi will be occupied when the floods start. I suggest to the gentleman that he is exactly correct in again and again advocating the conservation of public moneys. We can afford to expend the money necessary to do every necessary good thing that we ought to do in this country, but we unbalance the Budget and waste the taxpayers' money when we expend money on things absolutely worthless. I here and now prophesy that the upper Mississippi 9-foot channel not only will prove to be economically unjustifiable but that it will be a positive damage to the people along that river, and that it will be an aggravation of their floods.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Every dollar that we have spent and will spend on flood control for 10 years to come will not be nearly as much as we suffered in loss last year and in the 1937 flood in Ohio.

Mr. BIERMANN. I am in favor of rational flood control.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed, and a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the bill (H. R. 7618) relating to the revested Oregon & California Railroad and reconveyed Coos Bay Wagon Road grant lands situated in the State of Oregon, at a point in the RECORD immediately following the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER resumed the chair.

Mr. HAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the disposition of the special orders today I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech of the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, Hon. Harry Brown, delivered in the Fourth Congressional District of Louisiana recently, on soil conservation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADVANCEMENT OF FUNDS FOR DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7835) to provide authorization for the advancement of funds for the District of Columbia, which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BIGELOW. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object in order to propound a parliamentary inquiry. If this consent is granted, will there be an opportunity under the 5-minute rule for discussion of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The bill will be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. The bill will be under the 5-minute rule and all germane amendments would be permissible.

Is there objection?

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, as I understand, this bill was covered by one title in H. R. 7142?

Mr. PALMISANO. That is true.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. I think the objections that ran against the title at that time still prevail. I think we at least ought to have ample time to discuss it.

Mr. PALMISANO. Will the gentleman reserve his objection and let me make a statement?

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of calling this resolution up under unanimous consent is because of the fact that unless the District government is able to borrow some money from the Treasury, and, of course, under the resolution they will have to pay interest to the Treasury, within the next few days it will be unable to pay the employees, such as police officers, members of the fire department, and everyone working for the District government. As I understand, the tax bill, which is on the other side of this Capitol, may not come back here until some time in August. The Senate has rewritten the entire bill, and it will require a great deal of time in conference. So I am asking this privilege at this time, in order to permit the employees of the District government to be paid.

In the last Congress we permitted the District government to borrow money to erect some municipal buildings that the Federal Government wanted. It seems to me that at this time we should not permit the employees of the District to go without being paid. Of course, it is not our fault, it is true.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMISANO. They will not be able to obtain any revenue for a month or two, even after the tax bill is passed.

I now yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. Why can we not pass the tax bill that has been pending before the Senate for some time, instead of passing some kind of an alibi which will perhaps put us in a defensive position?

Mr. PALMISANO. Unfortunately, due to the Court bill being considered in the Senate, I understand the Senate will not consider any debatable bill. As I understand, under the rules of the Senate, if this bill is passed by unanimous consent, they may be able to pass it before they go back on the Court bill.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. PALMISANO. Yes; I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. If they can pass this resolution that will permit the borrowing of money, why can they not take a little time and pass the tax bill and get the job done?

Mr. PALMISANO. Because the tax bill in itself is more questionable and more debatable than this resolution.

Mr. McFARLANE. If they do not try, how de we know that?

Mr. PALMISANO. I am sorry, but I cannot tell the gentleman the procedure, and I cannot tell the Senate what to do. I wish they would pass it.

Mr. McFARLANE. They are trying to tell us what to do. What is the difference?

Mr. PALMISANO. I am willing to stay here until 12 o'clock at night any night in order to thrash out in conference the disagreements between the House and the Senate. I have spoken to the minority leader, and he knows the condition, and he said he thought by all means we should not stop payment to the employees.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. PALMISANO. I yield.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. The House has considered this matter. I do not want to be placed entirely in the light of cutting the employees of the District of Columbia out of receiving their pay, but it seems to me that as the District has its regular day a week from today, because of the importance of this matter, I think it should go over until that time.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand it, it is not a question of the employees of the District of Columbia getting their pay. It is a question of whether the District shall raise the money necessary to meet the District's end of the District appropriation under the existing tax law, or whether it shall do so in accordance with new laws, such as have been proposed in the bill now pending in the Senate. My understanding is that the District Commissioners have a right to fix a tax rate, under existing law, on real estate and personal property, sufficient to raise the amount necessary to meet the expenses of the District government. The trouble is, as I understand it, that the District Commissioners do not want to exercise the authority with which they are now clothed to raise the necessary funds under existing law. Am I not right?

Mr. PALMISANO. That is true.

Mr. MAPES. So that it is sort of a camouflage to say that the District employees are not going to get their pay under the existing set-up.

Mr. PALMISANO. At the present time, due to the fact that there is pending a bill to raise sufficient money, seven or eight million dollars, which is a deficit, the Commissioners are inclined to wait to see what the Congress will do.

Mr. MAPES. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the objection I see to the gentleman's resolution is that the Federal Government will lend this money to the District, this tax legislation may not be passed and then the Federal Government, sooner or later, will have to cancel the loan.

Mr. PALMISANO. Oh, no, no; I would not agree to that. The gentleman will recall that sometime ago the District Government borrowed some $20,000,000.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMISANO. I yield.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. May I ask the gentleman from Maryland whether there are any limitations that forbid the Treasury from advancing the Federal contribution to the District Commissioners in a lump sum at the beginning of the fiscal year or at any one time?

Mr. PALMISANO. I understand that the Federal contribution will be depleted in the first week or so of August.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. I may say to the gentleman that the whole cost of operating the District of Columbia is only $46,000,000 or $47,000,000 per annum. If they spend money at that rate, they will be entirely out of funds long before the year expires.

Mr. PALMISANO. I may say to the gentleman from Illinois, speaking of the matter coming up in the regular course, that the reason for passing this legislation is that they may possibly be able to bring it up in the Senate tomorrow morning before they enter into a further discussion of the Court bill. I understand that once they resume consideration of the Court bill they will not let anything interrupt it.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. I would remind the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia that the House has passed upon this issue.

Mr. PALMISANO. I realize that it has.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. The House struck out title I of the bill H. R. 7422, that would have permitted the Treasury to advance funds to the Government of the District of Columbia to allow the District to anticipate funds out of the Federal Treasury. The only difference between that and the pending bill is that the pending bill carries a provision that if they borrow from the Federal Government they shall not pay more than 3-percent interest. Mr. Speaker, I feel that we should have some time in which to discuss this important question, and therefore I am compelled to object.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, in order to comply with the demand of the gentleman from Illinois for time in which to discuss the matter, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 7835) to provide authorization for the advancement of funds for the District of Columbia, as amended.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 7835) to provide authorization for the advancement of funds for the District of Columbia, as amended. The Clerk will report the bill as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That until and including June 30, 1938, the Secretary of the Treasury, notwithstanding the provisions of the District of Columbia Appropriation Act, approved June 29, 1922, is authorized and directed to advance, on the requisition of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, made in the manner now prescribed by law, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary, from time to time, during said fiscal year to meet the general expenses of said District, as authorized by Congress, and such amounts so advanced shall be reimbursed by the said Commissioners to the Treasury out of the taxes and revenue collected for the support of the government of the said District of Columbia, with interest at a rate to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but not to exceed 3 percent per annum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it proper to make a statement, although the Chair does not think it necessary for the Chair ever to have to explain what the Chair decides to do.

It was represented to the Chair that this was a matter of some emergency with reference to the fiscal affairs of the District of Columbia. For that reason the Chair agreed to recognize the gentleman from Maryland to suspend the rules. In the last analysis, of course, it is a matter for the determination of the House.

Is a second demanded?

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland is recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMPSON] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, as I stated before, the purpose of bringing this bill up at this time is because the tax bill has been tied up in the Senate. It is absolutely necessary that something be done to provide the District government with revenue to pay its employees. It is my understanding that if consideration of the Court bill is continued in the Senate we shall not be able to take up the tax bill for 2 or 3 weeks, or perhaps longer. It is my further understanding from my colleague who spoke to Senator KING that Senator KING is under the impression that he may be able to have this resolution passed on Tuesday, tomorrow, before the Senate resumes consideration of the Court bill. Once the Court bill is brought up on the floor no interruption of any kind will be permitted.

The District government cannot, as can the governments of other municipalities of the States, borrow money from the banks or in the open market. Unless this resolution is passed the District will have no funds whatever to pay its employees.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMISANO. I yield.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Do I understand the gentleman to say that if this tax bill that is pending in the Senate committe passes the Senate that the pending bill would be unnecessary?

Mr. PALMISANO. If the tax bill should pass in time, but I understand that they will not be able to bring up the tax bill in the Senate because of the controversial items in the bill, and they will not permit any interruption of any kind in the consideration of the Court bill except perhaps for a noncontroversial resolution of this kind which might be passed by unanimous consent.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. PALMISANO. I yield.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Do I understand that the tax bill now pending in the Senate will provide sufficient funds, if passed, to take care of the expenses of operating the District government, or will they have to borrow operating funds?

Mr. PALMISANO. No. The pending bill is for the sole purpose of lending money to the District government, to be repaid as the revenue comes in. As I understand, several new methods of taxation are being considered by the Senate committee; for instance, they are considering the single-tax idea. Should such a provision be included in the bill the whole tax system of the District government would have to be revised, and it would take some time before they could get it into operation.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Did I understand the gentleman to say if the bill the House passed should pass the Senate there would be sufficient funds?

Mr. PALMISANO. I understand so.

Mr. REES of Kansas. But there is some controversy about it in the Senate?

Mr. PALMISANO. The bill that was passed by the House carried sufficient funds to pay the 1937 expenses of the District government. The members of the Senate committee have stricken out a considerable number of items that were passed by the House, and I feel that we will have to have a lengthy conference in order to get the bill straightened out. I hope we will receive enough revenue to pay the expenses of the District government for the current year.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMISANO. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. Has the gentleman suggested to the President that he withdraw his court-packing bill long enough to permit the Senate to act on this tax bill?

Mr. PALMISANO. I may say to the gentleman I have not the right to ask the President or anyone else to withdraw a bill that is pending in the Senate.

Mr. BATES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMISANO. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BATES. Is there any provision of law whereby the District may borrow money in anticipation of taxes?

Mr. PALMISANO. No. I understand they have no authority whatever to borrow money.

Mr. BATES. In anticipation of taxes?

Mr. PALMISANO. No.

Mr. BATES. The gentleman realizes that practically every city in the United States has that authority?

Mr. PALMISANO. I stated before that every municipality in the country was able to borrow money, except the District government.

Mr. BATES. What harm is there in permitting the District to borrow money in anticipation of taxes until this bill is passed?

Mr. PALMISANO. That would suit me. Whether they borrow it from the Federal Government or the banks would make no difference to me.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMISANO. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MAPES. As I understand the gentleman, if the Senate should pass the tax bill which the House passed, this resolution would not be necessary?

Mr. PALMISANO. I understand they would not be able to collect enough taxes to meet the current expenses even if this resolution passed today. The revenue would not come in fast enough to meet the running expenses of the District government.

Mr. MAPES. Has the gentleman submitted this proposition to the Committee on Appropriations which handles the District appropriation bill?

Mr. PALMISANO. No; I have not.

Mr. MAPES. This in effect overrides and supersedes the provision in the appropriation law which states that the Federal Government shall contribute $5,000,000 to the expenses of the District government?

Mr. PALMISANO. Yes; but I would not say this overrides the Appropriations Committee. This does not ask the Federal Government to appropriate anything. It simply permits the District Commissioners to borrow money from the Federal Government. May I say to the Members of the House if they want to authorize the District government to borrow from the banks in anticipation of tax receipts, I would be satisfied. I do not want any contribution to be made by the Federal Government. The only thing I am trying to do is to permit the District government to borrow sufficient money to continue its functions.

Mr. MAPES. If the tax bill now pending in the Senate does not pass, how is the District going to raise revenue to repay the loan which the Federal Government advances?

Mr. PALMISANO. I hope the Senate will never tie up the tax bill in that way. If an occasion of that kind should arise, then I say the Congress should pass some law giving to the District government the absolute control of its affairs so that they will never be tied up in that way again.

Mr. MAPES. I know the gentleman hopes that condition will not be brought about, but suppose it is brought about?

Mr. PALMISANO. I cannot say, of course. I do not feel that the Senate or the Congress will permit a condition of that kind to exist.

Mr. MAPES. Does it not mean that the Federal Government must then contribute more than $5,000,000?

Mr. PALMISANO. No. If the gentleman feels that way, he may offer an amendment to this resolution permitting the District government to borrow from banks.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMISANO. I yield to the gentlewoman from Indiana.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Should the Congress fail to pass the present tax bill and we do not pass this resolution in time to give the District government the right to borrow from the Federal Government, how are the firemen and policemen going to be paid during the fiscal year 1937?

Mr. PALMISANO. I may say if the tax bill had been passed in the usual course, the District government would have been collecting taxes beginning with the 1st of July. They would have received some money through the payment of taxes, but up to date they have received nothing and will receive nothing until the tax bill is passed. It is for this reason that the necessity arises for the passage of this resolution.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMISANO. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. In other years we have not had similar legislation. The District has not found it necessary to borrow from the Federal Government?

Mr. PALMISANO. That is right.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman state briefly how the situation has changed so that it now becomes necessary to do that this year? That is a very important matter, in my opinion.

Mr. PALMISANO. Due to the fact there was a deficit in the District government to the extent of some seven or eight million dollars, in order to meet that deficit the Congress considered certain taxes, which has tied up the tax system of the District. This being so, it also tied the hands of the District Commissioners, who were unable to proceed with the collection of taxes. That is the only reason.

Mr. BOILEAU. Was there a deficit last year, or did that deficit of seven or eight million dollars occur only in the present fiscal year?

Mr. PALMISANO. Last year.

Mr. BOILEAU. If there was a deficit last year, it became the duty of the Commissioners to increase the real-estate tax rate, did it not?

Mr. PALMISANO. Well, that was an item considered by the District Appropriation Committee, and nothing was done.

Mr. BOILEAU. Is not the gentleman going to explain the situation further?

Mr. PALMISANO. I really do not know anything further about it.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the provisions of this bill were included as title I in the bill (H. R. 7422) to raise additional revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which was considered in the House several weeks ago. The House in Committee of the Whole House, by a vote, struck out title I of that measure and it went over to the other body without that title included.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the reasons which impelled the House at that time to strike out the provisions authorizing the Federal Treasury to advance money to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia prevail at this time just as forcibly as ever. For myself, I fail to see why the Federal Treasury should be a clearing house for the District of Columbia. I do not know why the Federal Treasury should advance money to operate the government of the District of Columbia any more than it should advance money to operate the city of Chicago, the city of Pittsburgh, or any other city in the United States. It seems to me the District of Columbia should stand on its own feet.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BATES. Is it not true that many cities throughout the country have special authority under the law to borrow money in anticipation of taxes? This privilege is given by the legislatures of the various States. The reason the District Commissioners do not borrow is that the Congress ties their hands. Is not that the truth of the matter?

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Probably; but let me point out to the gentleman that there is not a city in the United States which is in financial difficulties where such difficulties cannot be traced back to the fact that some time in the years gone by it was permitted to anticipate its taxes and get away from a cash or a pay-as-you-go basis. If the legislatures of the gentleman's State and my State and every other State in the Union had denied municipalities the right to anticipate taxes, these cities would not have had the financial trouble they have had during the last 5 or 6 years. I believe it is a bad policy to start here in the Federal city.

Mr. BATES. As the gentleman knows, I am a member of the committee, and I believe I know something about this problem. The gentleman knows and I know that these revenue notes are the first notes paid off when the receipts come in. Therefore there is no obligation on the part of the Government, for the first receipts are taken to pay off these revenue notes.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. I do not subscribe to that.

Mr. BATES. Well, I subscribe to it, because it is the truth.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Because this bill is about as broad as anything that has ever been considered by the House. Just let me read to the House that portion following the enacting clause:

> That until and including June 30, 1938, the Secretary of the Treasury, notwithstanding the provisions of the District of Columbia Appropriation Act, approved June 29, 1922, is authorized and directed to advance—

And so forth. This has absolutely no limitations.

Mr. BATES. It also says, does it not, that such amounts shall be reimbursed by the Commissioners to the Treasury out of the taxes and revenue collected by the District as soon as such taxes and revenues come in?

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. The Commissioners can embark upon and continue to grow in a policy of borrowing and tax anticipation, which, in my opinion, is fundamentally wrong and should not be permitted to prevail in connection with the government of the city under the control of the Congress.

Mr. BATES. Every city in the entire United States has this power today.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. This city is entirely different. This is a Federal city, operated fundamentally for the United States Government.

Mr. BATES. You are tying the hands of the District so it cannot operate.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. I read the local newspapers here, and I have as much consideration and sympathy for the people in the District of Columbia as anybody, but it does seem to me they do not do everything they can to help themselves. In the 5 years I have been in Washington I have noticed that the Congress of the United States is blamed for almost everything that happens to local business downtown here. I have read stories in the local papers to the effect that the Commissioners and other officials of the District of Columbia are either condemning or worrying about what Congress will do. I think this is highly improper. I do not deny, Mr. Speaker, the right of citizens, groups of citizens, and organizations in the District of Columbia to condemn Congress for anything it does. I do not believe we should be "thin-skinned." We should be able to "take it." However, I do say it is entirely wrong, and I think it borders on insubordination, when the Commissioners of the District—and there is nothing personal in this as far as I am concerned, for I have not had the pleasure of meeting any of these gentlemen—continuously condemn or criticize and worry about what Congress is going to do about matters affecting the District of Columbia.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. Does not the gentleman believe the District Commissioners ought to put in a little more time and show a little spine in administering the laws down there and in raising the tax rates, rather than ache and come back to Congress, wanting Congress to do these things, when they already have all the authority they need to raise ample funds to take care of the District government?

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. I regret I cannot answer the question of the gentleman with reference to how much time the District Commissioners put in. I do not know whether they put in any time, but assume they make an effort to do their duty.

Mr. BATES. If the gentleman will permit, do the District Commissioners at this time have authority to borrow money to pay the bills, the wages, and the salaries they must pay?

Mr. McFARLANE. The District Commissioners have ample authority to raise the tax rate, in order to raise all the money necessary to take care of all the expenses for running the District government.

Mr. BATES. At this moment?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes; they have that authority at this moment.

Mr. BATES. The chairman of the Commission says not.

Mr. McFARLANE. They do not need authority to borrow money. What they need is spine enough to raise the tax rates in order to raise the money necessary.

Mr. BATES. But they cannot raise the money unless they have authority, and they cannot pay bills unless they can borrow in anticipation of taxes.

Mr. McFARLANE. They have authority under the law now to raise taxes on both real and personal property, and they have not had the spine to do it.

Mr. BATES. But until those taxes come in, they must pay the bills.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I must decline to yield any further for the moment.

I would like to call the attention of the House to the looseness or lack of limitations in the measure we now have under consideration. It was only a week or so ago that this body was compelled to pass over the veto of the Executive, a measure which would permit the farmers of the United States to borrow money at 3½ percent per annum. This bill, with the committee amendment written into it, provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall fix the interest rate on the funds advanced to the District of Columbia at not to exceed 3 percent per annum.

Mr. Speaker, I hold that if anybody is going to fix the rate or if we are going to embark upon the policy of lending Federal funds out of the Federal Treasury for the operation of the District of Columbia, the Congress itself should fix the rate and not turn that authority over to the Secretary of the Treasury. Of course, under the parliamentary procedure by which we are considering this bill it is impossible to offer an amendment, so the only thing that those of us who are opposed to this proposed policy of the Capital City of the greatest Nation in the world becoming involved in the old system of tax anticipation can do is to vote down the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time and yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BIGELOW.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I think in considering a matter of this kind we should have the benefit of the advice of the District Appropriations Committee, and I therefore make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WOODRUM). Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three hundred and twelve Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

On motion of Mr. PALMISANO, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BIGELOW].

Mr. BIGELOW. Mr. Speaker, we are now about to vote on the question of whether we shall consent to allow the District Commissioners to borrow from the Federal Treasury. This is a proposal that we voted out of the District tax bill when it passed the House.

It has been represented here as though if we do not pass this resolution, firemen and policemen and other employees of the District will be without their salaries. This is a mistake. If the present pending District tax bill were now passed, there is no contention that there would not be money to pay these bills.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make this point. The power now exists, without one line of law, to provide a tax measure that will pay all of these bills. Under a law that was passed in 1922, and which is still in force, the District Commissioners have the power to fix any tax rate upon real estate necessary to meet the bills that are authorized. The tax rate in the District is 15 mills. The deficit is $8,000,000, or probably $7,000,000, but we will call it $8,000,000, and they can meet this deficit by raising the tax rate on real estate in the District 7 mills, making the total tax rate 22 mills. If the District Commissioners would exercise the power they have under the law to fix the tax rate on real estate at 22 mills, all the money could be raised and there would be no need of bothering with any tax law in this Congress.

Mr. Speaker, if the District Commissioners exercised the power they now have under the law, instead of coming in here and asking for a new law, they would fix a rate at 22 mills, and that rate on real estate in the District would be lower than the rate paid by any large city in the United States today.

I have here the Jacobs report for which this Government paid $50,000. This report sets forth that there are 35 larger cities of the United States, comparable in size with the District, all of which are paying a higher tax rate than would be paid by real estate in the District if the District Commissioners exercised the power they have under the law, and which they should exercise, to raise these rates.

The Congress is being whipsawed by the real-estate interests of this District. This is a paradise of landlords, and I beg of the House not to give this power today, but to make the District Commissioners exercise the power they have of raising the rate, and even so the rate will not be as high as my city pays. Why is it that with a reasonably low rate on real estate all the revenue needed can be met in the District? The reason is that my city and your city and all the other cities are paying nearly one-half of their tax levies for debt charges, while this community has no debt charge. Therefore the 22-mills rate on real estate in this District will raise all the revenue the District needs.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIGELOW. Yes.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Will the gentleman tell me what the District is going to do for money in the meantime? If the gentleman's argument holds in this case, how are we going to pay the 10,000 employees of the District between now and next October, which is the length of time that will be required to raise the real-estate tax?

Mr. BIGELOW. The gentleman evidently missed my point in the beginning. We have a tax bill now pending in the Senate.

If this tax bill were passed within the next few days, the tax issue would be fully met. There would then be no pretense that it was necessary to borrow money for the District to carry on. Now my contention is that while, if the tax bill pending in the Senate is not passed within the next few days, the tax issue cannot be settled in that way, it nevertheless can be settled just as speedily by the action of the Commissioners in raising the tax rate on real estate.

The reason for my action in opposing this resolution is that I want to see the District Commissioners forced to exercise the power which the law gives them to raise taxes on real estate. This is not because I think it is desirable to raise the tax rate on the houses in which people live or upon other improvements on land. But it is desirable to raise the taxes upon the land values. As long as buildings and land values are lumped together, we cannot raise taxes on land values without raising taxes on buildings. A distinction should be made between these two subjects of taxation. A committee of the Senate has made this distinction. The District tax bill, as awaiting action in the Senate, proposes a tax of 1½ percent on buildings and a tax of 2½ percent on land values. That is sound economics. It is the first light that has dawned on this dark subject of taxation since many years ago the Pennsylvania Legislature permitted the two cities of Pennsylvania, Pittsburgh and Scranton, to levy a higher rate of taxation upon land values than upon buildings. I am grateful for this evidence of progress in the philosophy of taxation that now, for the first time in the history of the Nation, it should be proposed by a committee of at least one body of this Congress to shift at least some of the burden of taxation from improvements on land to land values in the Capital City. This beginning of tax intelligence, if retained, should be a wholesome object lesson to the Nation.

There is, of course, no opportunity under the restricted rules by which this unanimous-consent resolution is being considered to really get into the essence of this discussion. The 1-percent tax rate which the Senate committee is proposing to place upon land values, in addition to the 1½ percent on both land and buildings, does raise a question of fundamental and very great importance, which has been almost universally ignored in tax theory and practice in the United States. I am hoping that if the extra tax levy on land values which the Senate committee proposes is retained in the Senate bill and the bill is returned to the House with this amendment included, there will be a better opportunity than is now presented for a further discussion of this proposal for which I contend, that when the city taxes land values it is merely living on its own earned income, but when the city taxes buildings or any other form of wealth it is making a tax raid upon private property. I contend that it is not sound economics and it is not sound public morals for a community to deprive individuals of private property that they have earned in order to allow the land values produced by the community to go into the pockets of individuals who have not earned them.

In this city of Washington there is one half billion dollars of pure land values. Not $1 of this was ever the individual creation of a single soul living or dead. These values have come in response to an economic law of gravitation, just as cream comes to the top of a pan of milk. Not one penny of tax should be put on any building that men build, until this value that individuals do not make but that the community makes, is adequately taxed. There is where the weight of taxation should go, on community values, on the advantages of location, on monopoly privileges, and not on individual labor values.

As the years pass these rising land values of the Capital City are pouring little streams of gold into the laps of the old families and the rich estates who here, as everywhere, own the most of such holdings.

These ground rents are the pension rolls of the rich. The Bourbon or Stuart kings never granted to court favorites any more unadulterated privileges than our cities bestow on those who are lucky enough to own the sites on which these cities grow.

Here in Washington we let the holders of these privileges off with a tax of 1½ percent and we soak the builders and the workers for the rest.

In my city of Cincinnati if you wanted to clear slums for rehousing, down in the most blighted section of the city, where the shacks are literally rotting and festering with disease and crime, you would have to pay $50,000 an acre for the ground. Why do we put tax penalties on building when we should know that these building taxes, shifted to those land values, would both cheapen the land and encourage building? It is because we have not appreciated the essential difference between land values and house values which are earned.

For the land for one of the Federal housing projects in New York City the New Deal paid Mr. Vincent Astor $189,281.31 worth of 65-year 3½-percent bonds in addition to amortization in equal annual installments over the period. The New Deal also gave Mr. Baruch $36,000 for a little strip of his ground. Yes, this is brilliant economics. We drive people out of slums into worse rat holes, to build houses that these poor can never live in, because they cannot afford to pay this ground rent along with the taxes that are added to the houses. People for whom they were not intended will be the ones to live in these houses and their wages will go down because, with subsidized rents they can afford to underbid their brothers. But these two things will happen. A few millionaires will unload some land on the Government, as in the case of Messrs. Astor and Baruch, and the buildings will increase the land values in the surrounding neighborhood. You cannot beat these economic laws, not if you have ostrich economics and stick your head in the sands and refuse to see.

Land values are social values. The lighter the tax upon these values the greater the unearned wealth that goes to owners. House values are labor values. The higher the tax on houses the more they have to cost. The higher the tax on land values the less the land costs. Until we learn this much economics, rehousing projects will do nothing but benefit landlords and burden taxpayers.

There is, of course, no opportunity under the restricted rules by which this unanimous-consent resolution is being considered, to really get into the essence of this discussion. The 1-percent tax rate which the Senate committee is proposing to place upon land values, in addition to the 1½ percent on both land and buildings, does raise a question of fundamental and very great importance, which has been almost universally ignored in tax theory and practice in the United States. I am hoping that, if the extra tax levy on land values which the Senate committee proposes is retained in the Senate bill and the bill is returned to the House with this amendment included, there will be a better opportunity than is now presented for a further discussion of this proposal for which I contend—that, when the city taxes land values, it is merely living on its own earned income, but, when the city taxes buildings or any other form of wealth, it is making a tax raid upon private property. I contend that it is not sound economics and it is not sound public morals for a community to deprive individuals of private property that they have earned, in order to allow the land values produced by the community to go into the pockets of individuals who have not earned them.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Indiana [Mrs. JENCKES].

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I have been a member of the District Committee ever since I came to Washington. We have had many arguments on the floor at different times, and I have heard the District people themselves arguing the question of their part in self-government. Today, to my mind, is conclusive argument that the people of the District should have the right to run their own affairs and not have all of these small questions brought to Congress. I know that my home community has the right to go to the bank and borrow money. I know that the District should have the right to anticipate its collections. The bill which is now pending in the Senate, which we sent over there, even if it had been enacted into law, would not take care of the present situation, and if we do not now give the authority to the District Commissioners to provide themselves with a running capital, it will not be the Commissioners, it will not be you and I who will suffer, nor will it be the Treasury of the United States, but it will be those people who are giving their lives and service to the District, and also to you and me, because when we live in the District we are protected by the policemen and the firemen and by those citizens who are serving the District. So I appeal to you, my colleagues, to think of that, and to think of this as if it were your home community, and what an embarrassment it would be to have it sent out over the Nation that you had failed to meet your pay roll, and I ask you to give to the Commissioners the right to get this money from the Nation's Treasury in anticipation of their collecting it from the people of the District. [Applause.]

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. THURSTON].

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that it was exceedingly unfortunate that a composite tax bill was brought in here that touched so many different avenues of revenue that obviously there was a considerable amount of opposition to it. It seems to me that inasmuch as we have inheritance taxes and income taxes in various States, likewise a higher gasoline or automobile tax, it would be exceedingly easy for the Committee on the District of Columbia to bring in a series of bills and have these taxes fixed on about an average gasoline tax within the States, or an inheritance tax or an income tax on the same basis. I venture to suggest that such bills would pass this House by unanimous consent, but if they continue to bring in these omnibus bills and touch so many controversial phases, it is doubtful if we will have any legislation on this subject during this session. If the committee would bring in these separate bills as they do in the general assemblies of the respective States, fixing their taxes bill by bill, there will be no doubt of their passage, and then the District would have ample tax legislation.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that there is absolutely no limit to the repayment of this money, or out of the receipts of what year it is to be paid. It could run on until Gabriel blows his horn so far as limitations in this bill are concerned.

Mr. THURSTON. The gentleman's suggestion is sound and gives an additional reason why the bill should not be passed.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that the Members of this House have paid very much attention to the measure pending before us. In the first place I think you will agree with me that you are writing a blank check. There is no limit to the amount that you are going to loan to the District of Columbia under this bill. We are told that you will loan this money at a rate of not more than 3 percent, and yet we quarreled the other day because we are loaning money to the farmer at 3½ percent.

I appreciate what the gentlewoman from Indiana [Mrs. JENCKES] said a moment ago about these folks who will not get their money. Everybody wants these employees to get their money. They are entitled to be paid now. Something has been said about representation, and not having the right to levy their own taxes. I do not blame anyone for wanting to be represented. I do not believe that the people who live in the District would expect to have such low taxes if they were represented on the floor themselves, and if they ran their own government. They would not expect to have an automobile license tax of $1, the lowest rate in the United States, when as a matter of fact the average rate is six or seven dollars in the States. They would not expect to go without inheritance taxes or estate taxes as they do here. We have no income tax here; no inheritance tax, no sales tax. So I say, if they could levy their own taxes they certainly would not expect the low taxes they are getting. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BIGELOW] has told us that if you raise this real-estate tax to half the rate in other cities of comparable size, even then they could raise enough money. We are writing a blank check except that it says in this bill the money is to be repaid in 1 year. It seems to me that there should be a limit of the amount to be borrowed and some provision for its definite repayment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SHAFER].

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I have requested this time to answer a question asked several times during the debate. The question is, When will this money be paid back to the Treasury?

The organic law of the District of Columbia compels the Commissioners to pay back every cent obtained under this loan by the 30th of June next year. The law forbids the Commissioners to remain in debt and they must discharge this obligation by June 30, 1938. And this law has teeth. It provides that the Commissioners may be sentenced to terms in jail if they fail to raise the money to discharge the obligation. That is how strong it is. The Federal Treasury cannot possibly lose if this bill is passed today. The District Commissioners must raise the money by some means so that obligation will be dicharged next June. That is the law.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. How much money will be involved in the passage of this bill?

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. It costs $4,000,000 a month to run the District of Columbia.

Mr. DONDERO. The bill says "such sums as may be necessary." There is no limitation.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. That makes no difference. The District of Columbia must have money on which to operate, and the District must pay back to the Treasury of the United States every cent that it borrows under this bill. What will the 10,000 employees of the District do if Congress fails to authorize this loan? It will be impossible to raise money through an advance in real estate taxes, as has been suggested, before October. What are the employees of the District going to do in the meantime? How will they live? Issuance of scrip will be the only solution, and I am sure no Member of this Congress would have that on his conscience. If this bill fails to pass that is just what will happen. The District will be forced to issue scrip. Many Members have talked about this bill here this afternoon who ordinarily pay no attention whatever to District affairs. Many of them do not know what they are talking about. Time and again they have been unable to answer vital questions concerning the bill under debate. It seems that every bill brought into this Chamber by the District of Columbia Committee has two strikes on it before the debate gets under way. They talk about increasing the District's real-estate tax. Pass this bill and Congress will take a sure step toward creating higher real-estate taxes, and I believe these taxes should be increased. The fact that the organic law of the District makes it mandatory that the Commissioners pay back this loan next year will cause the Commissioners to find ways and means of raising the money. They are empowered by law to raise the real-estate tax rate if necessary, and they have no other way of raising the money that will be required.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio talked about increasing the tax rate on real estate. Of course, I appreciate his views. He believes that real estate should pay all of the expenses.

In the tax bill that is over on the other side we have tried to put the District government on a par with other municipalities of the country. They have had no inheritance tax. We created an inheritance tax. They had no estate tax. We put on an estate tax. They had an automobile tax of $1, regardless of the size of the machine, whether it was a 10-ton truck or whether it was a little Ford. We placed a weight tax on, in order to put the District on a sound financial basis. We increased the real-estate tax. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] said they cut out the so-called chain-store tax and they inserted a sales tax. I want to say to the gentleman from Texas and the Members of this House that I, for one, as a member of the conference committee, will never agree to a sales tax on that bill.

Now, we are endeavoring to do something to put the District on a comparative basis with other city governments. Let us say we will increase the tax and put it all on real estate, or whatever you will, they will not be able to collect it until after a lapse of 2 or 3 months. What is the District government going to do during that period? Where is it going to obtain the money in order to pay employees?

Mr. BATES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. PALMISANO. I yield.

Mr. BATES. I just discussed this with the Auditor of the District, and he told me that unless this bill passes within the next few days the employees of this District will be unpaid and the police of the District will be unpaid. They have no authority, under present law, to borrow money in anticipation of those taxes.

So, Mr. Speaker, it becomes imperative, if we are interested in keeping this community going, to pass this authorization this afternoon.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the Members of the House that I talked with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], of the Appropriations Subcommittee, in the absence of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS], chairman of the subcommittee, and he told me that there would be no objection so far as the Appropriations Committee was concerned, that they should hold down the District government. If there is any fear that the District government will not repay whatever it borrows in this emergency, I, for one, will go before the Appropriations Committee next year and take from the District government so much of the Federal contribution as may be necessary to repay what the District government receives on account of this resolution.

This is an emergency, Mr. Speaker, and I appeal to the Members to give to the District this power to borrow money during this limited time, a power enjoyed by every other municipality in the country. Every legislature in every State permits the municipalities to borrow money for operating expenses. I appeal to the Members to give the District the right to borrow during this emergency.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMISANO. I yield.

Mr. LEAVY. It has been the experience of many municipalities in the borrowing of money that they frequently incurred a greater indebtedness than they should have; that they spent more money than they should have. If this resolution passes, will the authorities here in Washington spend more money than they should if they were not permitted to borrow?

Mr. PALMISANO. The Treasury will take care of that; the District has certain appropriations they may not exceed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WOODRUM). The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired; all time has expired.

The question is, Shall the rules be suspended and the bill pass?

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PALMISANO)—there were—ayes 65, noes 90.

So (two-thirds not having voted in the affirmative) the rules were not suspended, and the bill was not passed.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a copy of a speech delivered by Mr. Ray Murphy, past commander of the American Legion, at the banquet of insurance commissioners in convention at Philadelphia on June 23, 1937.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

(Mr. FORD of California and Mr. IMHOFF asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a memorial tribute to our late lamented colleague from California, Hon. Henry E. Stubbs, by the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. KRAMER].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including an address delivered by the Honorable Karl A. Crowley, Solicitor of the Post Office Department, at Brady, Tex., on July 6.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, following the speech of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE], I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, Tuesday, following the special orders already entered, that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCLEAN], may address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next after the reading of the Journal, the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table, of the legislative program for the day and special orders heretofore agreed to, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday next after other business has been disposed of I may be permitted to address the House for 25 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House heretofore made the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON], is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, a few short weeks ago our colleague from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] told you how 7,000 railroad cars of free mail had cost the taxpayers of the Nation in excess of $217,000,000 in 4 years. Today it will be my endeavor to tell the Members of the Congress and expose to the people of America how and where more than $206,000,000 more of the taxpayers' money has been or will be spent in travel expense alone for the fiscal years of 1936, 1937, and 1938.

Two hundred and six million dollars is a tremendous sum of money and will buy a whole lot of traveling. In fact, this sum exceeds by far the cost of sending the American Expeditionary Forces to France during the World War.

It exceeds by $89,000,000 the travel expense for the fiscal years of 1931, 1932, and 1933 combined. And when we get through paying the probable deficiencies for travel expense next year, the amount spent will undoubtedly be more than twice the sum spent for travel in any comparable 3-year period in the Nation's history.

TRAVEL IN THE ANCIENT DAYS

With the advancement of early civilization the necessity for travel increased. The crude trails through the forests and over the mountains eventually became well-defined roads. Along these ancient highways, thieves and robbers plied their trade. But from the necessity of things, travel constantly increased and in the course of time crude signs came to be erected along the principal highways to direct the traveler in safety from place to place and to keep the stranger from wandering from the beaten path. Mr. Speaker, as in the ancient days, common sense and social usage have erected guide posts to chart the course of both business and government. These are the very foundations of governments themselves.

Mr. Speaker, the only necessity which today calls for these extravagant expenditures for travel is political necessity. In the mad scramble to extend the frontiers of social justice the New Dealers have chosen to ignore all reasonable direction and have sought out new and undiscovered pathways to travel. They now find themselves and the Nation in the dismal swamp of debt, surrounded on all sides by signs which point to danger. They have traveled and traveled and will keep on traveling. They know not which way to turn, but must wallow in the mire of their misery until rescue or relief comes. The galloping hounds of waste, who led the mad chase to overtake prosperity for the forgotten man, now hear the baying of the Communist wolf pack closing in as they scent their prey. Mr. Speaker, the thieves and robbers of old no longer ply their arts along the ancient highways, but an examination of the expenditures which have been made in the first 3 years under the guise of travel expense leads me to believe that a new order has developed which is more artful and more efficient in wringing money from the people for travel purposes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Has the gentleman forgotten that the W. P. A. spent $500,000,000 constructing swimming pools along those highways?

Mr. KNUTSON. If they did, they did not use the swimming pools for themselves.

Mr. Speaker, as we inspect the handiwork of the intellectual giants who conceived all these bureaus and agencies of waste, I wonder if there is a single Member of this House who would be so naive as to inquire why we should longer continue this travel waste? Think of it—$206,000,000 for travel expense alone, not counting the untold millions spent for the purchase and the upkeep of thousands of automobiles, not counting the additional millions spent for the transportation of things. No wonder the railroad companies and the steamship lines are enjoying a period of prosperity. It is quite understandable now.

WHO SPENT THE MONEY?

Who spent all this money, you ask? Was it spent by clerks and stenographers? Was it spent by charwomen and janitors? Was it spent by watchmen and laborers? Was it spent for useful purposes in governmental service or was a large part of the money wasted? The possibilities in these questions are intriguing. At this time, Mr. Speaker, I insert in the RECORD a consolidated table which has been prepared for me showing the total expenditures of all departments and agencies of the Government for travel alone for the fiscal year 1936 was $76,669,506. For 1937 they were $77,101,006, and the Budget estimates for this fiscal year, 1938, are $52,445,003, making a total of $206,215,515.

TABLE 1.—Condensed statement yearly traveling expenses for 1936, 1937, and 1938, compiled from the Budget for 1938, and listed by departments

	Estimated, 1938	Estimated, 1937	Actual, 1936
Legislative establishment, Members of Congress, etc	$225,750	$226,150	$224,983
Executive Office and independent establishments	4,249,980	24,391,496	28,158,332
Independent offices	3,831,305	4,914,404	5,418,766
Veterans' Administration	1,582,500	1,535,431	1,540,067
General public-works program	1,329,571	860,856	507,775
Department of Agriculture	6,767,934	7,701,702	7,702,141
Farm Credit Administration	1,532,921	2,070,841	1,653,619
Department of Commerce	808,900	824,960	1,142,148
Department of the Interior	1,711,308	2,021,270	1,714,011
Department of Justice	4,646,632	4,396,070	4,100,122
Department of Labor	1,279,130	2,186,223	1,718,414
Navy Department	6,606,800	5,639,033	4,821,408
Department of State	623,112	618,663	399,803
Treasury Department	5,217,642	7,053,869	5,751,178
War Department	6,546,909	7,264,109	6,742,768
Post Office Department	5,514,600	5,385,929	4,983,661
Totals, all departments	52,445,003	77,101,006	76,669,506
Grand total, 3 years, spent and to be spent, $206,215,515.

This amount, Mr. Speaker, will not cover the total expenditures for travel, because many departments have not segregated their travel estimates for the 1938 Budget, and they will in all probability have to be taken care of in the deficiency appropriations in the next session of this Congress.

The table which I have just introduced for the record, shows the travel expense of the legislative establishment and all the Members of the Congress amounts to $224,983 for 1936, $226,150 for 1937, and for the current fiscal year the Budget estimate is for $225,750. Less than three-quarters of a million dollars in all for 3 years.

CONTRASTS

By contrast the travel expense of the executive offices and the independent agencies and establishments was $28,158,332 in 1936, $24,391,496 in 1937, and the request for 1938 is $4,249,980. Here alone is a total of more than $56,000,000, and rest assured there will be deficiency requests for at least $20,000,000 more before we get through paying these travel expenses next year.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. THURSTON. The gentleman's picturesque language referring to the galloping hounds of waste is interesting. Did these persons confine their expeditions and explorations to the continent upon which we reside or did they travel all over the world?

Mr. KNUTSON. Oh, they have been all over the world. I have a book here called "Soil Conservation" which is really a very interesting document. It is a sort of a travelogue. We sent a man named Laudermilk over to China to study the sand rivers of China. I do not know how many he took with him. Then there is a subject called "Maintaining English Soils in Good Heart." I do not know what relation good heart has to soil fertility. There is another chapter, "Fifty Years' Experience With Soil Conservation in Japan."

Mr. THURSTON. Did they measure the waterfall of the Indo regions?

Mr. KNUTSON. There is an article here on the Punjab Plains. There is also an article showing the rainfall in Java and Sumatra. Over there they have a rainfall of some 270 inches a year.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to my friend from Minnesota.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Can the gentleman give us any reason why they should measure the rainfall in the countries to which he has referred, and how that relates to the United States?

Mr. KNUTSON. I do not know. You know, once upon a time the earth slipped a cog or two on its axis. Alaska used to be tropical. If prehistoric man had made a survey of the Polar region at the time Alaska was a tropical country, he might have issued bulletins on how to put up and preserve ice. How beneficial that would have been to those who came after the glacial period, I cannot say. It may be they can look into the future and that they know that the dust bowl will some day become a dense jungle. They will want to know at that time how to handle the enormous rainfall that they now believe will be drifting over the Dust Bowl.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman is rendering a service to the country by putting in these expenditures for travel. Could the gentleman likewise put in the RECORD the expenditures covered in the propaganda that has been disseminated for New Deal measures by the present administration?

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] did that. He showed that 7,000 carloads of franked mail have been sent out by the New Dealers since they inflicted themselves upon the American people.

Mr. FISH. The other day I asked the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] if any of the money appropriated for the dedication of the cemeteries abroad during the coming August would be used for broadcasting in this country. The gentleman replied there would not be any money used for that purpose, but I see by the papers that the President will speak on an international hook-up. Does the gentleman know whether that will be paid for by the Government?

Mr. KNUTSON. They have a way of jimmying free talks out of the broadcasting companies. I do not think we will pay for it.

STARTLING EXPENDITURES

Among the most startling expenditures of these independent agencies, offices, and establishments, I refer briefly to two items of travel expense in connection with Emergency Conservation Work. These items are expenditures for travel expense of $14,557,911 in 1936 and $13,958,000 in 1937. This is a large sum to spend traveling around in search of emergency conservation work. Since there are no Budget estimates in this bracket for 1938, we are, I presume, to suppose that there is no longer this emergency which calls for travel, that everyone has found work after spending more than twenty-eight millions in travel expense. So, my friends, if any of you have constituents who are out of work, you might suggest that they travel for relief.

RESETTLEMENT BY TRAVEL

As a close runner-up in the spending of money for travel expense, the Resettlement Administration is next in line for mention. In the fiscal year 1936 the Resettlement Administration spent $6,241,868, and in 1937 they spent $4,407,219 more of the taxpayers' money for travel expenses. This money, like most of the other expenditures of the more than 200 experiments being conducted by the Resettlement Administration, is gone with the wind and can only be repaid in part by the taxes of the unwary individuals who will vote to continue this waste in the future.

OTHER HEAVY SPENDERS FOR TRAVEL

Among the other heavy spenders for travel expense, the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works used up $1,908,747 for this purpose in 1936, $1,505,729 in 1937, and are asking for an additional $600,000 of the taxpayers' money in 1938 for more travel expense.

The Home Owners' Loan Corporation spent for travel expense in 1936 $1,762,358, in 1937 $1,750,000 even, and in 1938 they are asking the Congress to appropriate as much as $1,900,000. Where will they stop?

STRANGE FACTS BOB UP

Mr. Speaker as we delve into these travel expenses, many strange facts bob up. For example the Farm Credit Administration has spent so much in travel that it ought to be called a travel bureau. In 1936 their travel expense was $1,653,619. In 1937 they spent $2,070,841 in travel expense. Consider these facts well. Although their new mortgage loans in 1936 were 58.1 percent lower than in 1935 and 85.5 percent lower than in 1934 their travel expense is getting larger each year. More than one-half their total congressional appropriation was spent last year for travel expense. The $2,070,841 is quite a large sum when one considers that last year they made only 65,281 mortgage loans to 44,942 individuals. This represents an expenditure for travel of more than $46 for each loan made to an individual. When we consider this huge expenditure on the part of the Farm Credit Administration, and think of the many offices they have in various parts of the country, no Member of this House need look further to justify his vote in overriding the Presidential veto last Tuesday. If we are making a present to the farmers of America, by making low-interest rates available to them, we have been making a hundred times greater present to these travelers of the Farm Credit Administration. If they would cut down this travel expense, here would be an excellent place to commence the economies the President has asked for.

FEDERAL SURPLUS COMMODITIES CORPORATION

Next among the agencies I wish to mention as voracious travelers, is the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation. This is a nonprofit agency set up to buy and distribute surplus commodities to those persons in need of relief. Behind this central objective, there is also the maintenance of prices by the removal of surpluses which possibly might lower the return in the domestic markets. Now, we ought not to be alarmed about our surplus commodities as long as we are importing millions of dollars of foodstuffs from other countries. However, I am somewhat worried and also more than puzzled about some of the strange facts I find by comparing the Budget estimates for 1938 with the balance sheet of the Corporation as published in the annual report for the calendar year of 1936.

Mr. BIERMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BIERMANN. Has the gentleman ever considered that before these loans are made the property has to be appraised and that after the loans have been made and during the entire term of the loan they have to be serviced and that cannot be done except by trained men from these banks?

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman must bear in mind that the figures I gave do not include servicing. That is another item altogether, with which I am not concerned today. I am talking only about traveling expenses.

Mr. BIERMANN. The men that service these loans certainly have some traveling expenses.

Mr. KNUTSON. That goes into another column under another item.

Mr. BIERMANN. I think the gentleman better investigate that.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am merely concerned with what is paid out for railroad transportation.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The gentleman knows, of course, that appraisals of property upon which the home-loan banks propose to extend loans are made largely by local appraisers appointed by that organization?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes. The original appraisal is made by the local association, which is being rapidly wiped out under the New Deal. That is, the local association is being wiped out.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. We are all very much interested in what the gentleman is saying. However, may I call his attention to the fact that the other day we passed a farm tenancy bill which provides for about ten times as much travel. The bill even included the purchase of airplanes so that the agents of this new agency may get about more rapidly.

Mr. KNUTSON. If they are going in for airplanes, I hope they will all embark on a trip around the world at the equator.

According to the Budget, the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation spent $19,853 in travel expense in 1936. They spent $40,305 in 1937, but there are no estimates scheduled for 1938. So, turning to page 6 of the annual report, made to whom I do not know, but signed by Mr. J. W. Tapp, president, we find among the listed liabilities of this Corporation the following:

Current accounts payable: Transportation vouchers	$526,928.67
Accrued liabilities: Transportation charges for which vouchers have not been received	161,653.93

Here we have two items of transportation amounting to $681,581.60.

How much of this unpaid liability is travel expense?

This Corporation is spending nearly half a million dollars a year for personal services, and surely some of their many employees could have itemized these transportation liabilities for the record.

This is but a simple example of how the taxpayers' money is being spent, with no possible means for a check-up by the Members of Congress, who are charged with the responsibility of safeguarding the public purse.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I wish to introduce for the RECORD a table showing the expenditures of the Department of Agriculture, segregated by bureaus and agencies, for travel expense for the 3-year period under consideration.

TABLE 2.—Showing expenditures for travel of the Department of Agriculture distributed by offices and bureaus

Distribution	Estimated, 1938	Estimated, 1937	Actual, 1936

Total by years, Department of Agriculture	6,767,934	7,701,702	7,702,141

As we go over this table we find the expenditures of Mr. Secretary Wallace's department tops the travel expenditures of the War Department, the Navy Department, and the Post Office Department. The travel expense in 1936 was $7,702,141. In 1937 it was $7,701,702.

Probably the President has told them they would have to cut down a little on the Budget request for 1938.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman mentioned the item of travel expense for these fellows. The question now is, do we have to get them back? Is this a return ticket or just one way?

Mr. KNUTSON. I hope they have just a one-way ticket.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman does not think that would be fair, does he?

Mr. KNUTSON. It would be better for the taxpayers.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. I do not think the gentleman means that, or means that those who are doing the traveling for this agency should fly airplanes by the Equator route, because the gentleman knows that most of the employees of this particular agency belong to the gentleman's own party.

Mr. KNUTSON. Oh, I am not approaching this from a political angle, and I hope the gentleman will not try to inject any politics into it.

The Budget request for 1938 is $6,767,934. There must be a lot of traveling going on in the Department of Agriculture, or else some great group is touring the world at the taxpayers' expense. From the contents of the latest gem of literature they have put out on soil conservation, I see they have been scouring the hinterlands of China, the Punjab plains of India, the veldt of South Africa, the islands of Java and Sumatra, and several other remote places to find out how they do things there. They have made studies where the rainfall is as much as 270 inches a year, and undoubtedly they will use these studies to determine just what ought to be done to rectify conditions in the Dust Bowl area of our own Great Plains. While these gems of literature are being prepared, the Soil Conservation Service had run up a travel expense for 1936 of $911,105. By 1937 they were able to increase the travel expense to $1,153,869. For 1938 they ask another $890,934 of the taxpayers' money for more travel expense.

BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY

Another interesting item in this never-ending travel expense in the Department of Agriculture was incurred by the Bureau of Animal Industry, for the purpose of eliminating diseased livestock. In 1936 the travel expense for this particular purpose amounted to $1,894,766. Now, someone must have raised Cain about this waste, for in 1937 we find the same travel expense included in the miscellaneous items of expense and amounting to only $1,380,610. However, along with this expenditure we find a further expenditure for the same purpose made in 1936 amounting to $207,934. So in 1936 the actual travel expense in the elimination of diseased cattle was not $1,894,766 but actually $2,192,700. What the expense will be in 1938 no one can estimate, but it is safe to predict that the $1,565,410 requested will not suffice unless we get wholeheartedly behind the President's suggestion of a week or so ago that there be immediate economies in these travel and printing expenses.

The slogan of the Department of Agriculture must be "See America and See the World."

We ought to serve notice on Mr. Wallace that his traveling crew and their expenses will be subjected to the severest scrutiny the next time he comes before the Appropriations Committee asking for funds. Now is the time to put an end to these world ramblings and vacation journeys. These galloping hounds of spending must be brought to bay or we will be bankrupt.

EXPENSES OF COMMERCE AND STATE DEPARTMENTS MODERATE

Mr. Speaker, when we consider the entire travel expense of the Department of State is far less than some of the New Deal agencies, and when we compare these travel expenses with those of the Department of Commerce, for example, we wonder just how all this money could have been spent, and there would still have been anybody around to do the actual administrative work connected with these agencies.

Personally, I believe the Departments of Commerce and State are to be highly commended for the great restraint and the economies they have practiced in the face of the horrible example which has been set before them.

Now, we are getting down to "Honest Harold's" department, the Department of the Interior. The Department of the Interior has also run up some new travel-expense records in the last 3 years.

TABLE 3.—Showing travel expenses for Department of the Interior distributed by offices, commissions, and bureaus

Freedmens Hospital	50	50	15
Totals by years, Department of the Interior	1,711,308	2,021,270	1,714,011

In 1936 the travel expense was $1,718,414. In 1937 it ran up to $2,186,270. Next year they are asking for $1,711,308. These odd figures must be arrived at in some mystic manner. Perhaps an analysis of the expenditures for travel by the Bureau of Indian Affairs will throw some light on this grave travel matter.

BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS

In 1936 the travel expense of the Bureau of Indian Affairs of the Department of the Interior was $548,257. In 1937 the expense had grown to $624,560. Next year the Budget estimates are for $714,000. Part of this travel expense was incurred in organizing Indian corporations. The theme song of the Interior Department, as well as the rest of the New Deal, is "Organize." Well, they tried to organize the Indians into corporations. So far they have organized the Makah Indian Tribe of the Makah Indian Reservation in the State of Washington, the Apache Tribe of the Mescalero Reservation in New Mexico, the North Cheyenne Tribe of the Tongue River Reservation in Montana, the Manchester Band of Pomo Indians in California, the Pyramid Lake Paiute Tribe of the Pyramid Lake Reservation in Nevada, and the Fort McDermitt Paiute and Shoshone Tribes of the Fort McDermitt Indian Reservation in the same State.

Besides this work they have written constitutions and bylaws for the following tribes:

The Kickapoo Tribe of Kansas.

The Walker River Paiute Tribe of Nevada.

The Yavapai-Apache Indian Community of Arizona.

The Ute Indian Tribe of Utah.

The Quechan Tribe of Fort Yuma Reservation, Calif.

They may have some other organization work under way.

Now, this whole work of organizing and writing constitutions and bylaws for the Indians took a great amount of traveling. In fact, it required $57,465 for travel expense in 1936, $59,420 in 1937, and the Budget estimate for 1938 is $59,520.

Now and then we see a few Indians around Washington, come to see the Great White Father and get the justice which is due them. But this item of travel expense seems absurd when we consider that there are fewer than 350,000 Indians in the United States and Alaska, including the 150,000 members of the Five Civilized Tribes, who no longer need be herded around like sheep. This obvious waste for travel expense may be justified by some of the Members of Congress, but before justification is attempted let me refer the Members to page 394 of the Budget for 1938, and there they will find listed among the items of expense for 1937 the sum of $460,000 for the maintenance of automobiles for the Bureau of Indian Affairs and an additional item of $190,000 for the purchase of new automobiles.

The President wonders where he can turn to cut down some of the expenses of this Government. Why do not some of you folks go down and tell him?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. SNELL. Before the gentleman leaves the subject of the Department of the Interior, can the gentleman tell me whether or not it is a fact that "Honest Harold" has living quarters in the large new Interior Building, with a sumptuous state dining room and everything that goes with it?

Mr. KNUTSON. I understand he has living quarters down there that are so magnificent that photographers are not permitted to come in and take pictures; I presume because it would not have a very good effect on the voters in 1938.

Mr. SNELL. Who has authorized that expenditure?

Mr. KNUTSON. I presume he took it out of P. W. A. I do not recall that in any appropriation bill we authorized the installation of electric stoves, steam kitchens, elaborate chinaware and silverware, linen, and I do not know what all. I understand it is furnished like a Turkish harem.

Mr. SNELL. If that is so, it is certainly more elaborate than anything which has ever been done in any department building in Washington up to this time, and I think the people of this country ought to know it.

Mr. KNUTSON. I think if Members of Congress were not so indifferent to their sworn duties they would look into this; but they have not seen fit to do so. The Committee on Appropriations should look into this.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. I wonder if the gentleman has looked into any of the many loopholes the Committee on Ways and Means has put into our tax laws, through which about as much revenue is escaping as we are collecting through taxation?

Mr. KNUTSON. I may say to the gentleman that the present tax law was passed by the gentleman's own party. He shoud refer his inquiry to the chairman and the Democratic members of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. McFARLANE. I am not referring to the last tax bill in particular, but am referring to the revenue bills since the Wilson administration. Most of the revenue bills that have been passed since the Wilson administration, as the gentleman knows, through the three administrations of Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover——

Mr. KNUTSON. I am not going to permit any politics to come into this discussion.

Mr. McFARLANE. The gentleman is not talking anything but politics.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOODRUFF. May I call the attention of the gentleman from Texas to the fact that the members of the Committee on Ways and Means have no greater facilities for discovering loopholes in tax laws than has the gentleman from Texas. The members of the Committee on Ways and Means do not see the income-tax returns, which are submitted to the Treasury Department. The only people who see these returns are the administrative officials in the Bureau of Internal Revenue. If the members of the Committee on Ways and Means do not have the information for which the gentleman asks, it is because the officials in the Bureau of Internal Revenue, in the gentleman's own party, have failed so to inform the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. McFARLANE. I would be pleased to answer the gentleman if I had the time.

Mr. KNUTSON. In closing, Mr. Speaker, may I add that in going over all the thousands of items of travel expense for the last 3 years I also find that we have been very generous in our travel expense for attendance at fairs and expositions. Almost every department and bureau has sent representatives to the Texas centennial, the Great Lakes celebration, the California Pacific International Exposition, and other places. These are only small junkets, but they act as a stimuli to other and wider travel adventures.

Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of this Congress I now insert in the record a complete detailed list of travel expense of all the agencies and departments of the Federal Government for 1936, 1937, and 1938. I trust they will be preserved and used as a guide to guard against this momentous waste which is going on on every side. I trust that next year we will all get together and cut down the spending, balance the Budget, and dig out as rapidly as we can from beneath the mountain of debt which threatens to overwhelm us.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois and Mr. SHAFER of Michigan asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLANNAGAN] is recognized for 25 minutes.

THE PRESENT AGRICULTURAL SITUATION

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time for the purpose of discussing in a general way the agricultural situation in our country today. I am fearful that very few of us realize the seriousness of the situation.

About the only agricultural program we have today is under what is known as the Soil Conservation Act. I am not opposing the Soil Conservation Act. I think it has accomplished and will accomplish great things for the farmers of America, but I do not believe that the Soil Conservation Act will solve the farm problem in this country. We passed that act, assuming that if we would subsidize the farmers to take out of production soil-depleting crops and plant that acreage to soil-conserving or soil-rebuilding crops, we would, in a measure, be able to regulate production and to keep production and consumption more or less in line. The theory is all right, but how is it working?

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Not right now.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. It is just along the line of what the gentleman is going to explain.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I yield.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Under the Triple A program, 40,000,000 acres of cotton, wheat, and corn lands were taken out of cultivation.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Yes.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. That act was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court and the Soil Conservation Act was passed as a stop gap or to take the place of the former act. Under the Soil Conservation Act, as the gentleman knows, the authority is in the Department and so they took out of production 30,000,000 acres of cotton, wheat, and corn lands. Now, we are going to have an increased crop this year of the various commodities. How did these cotton and tobacco farmers use their land that was taken out of the program or where does the extra crop come from?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I do not know that I can accurately answer that question, but probably I can shed some light upon it. I know what has happened. I know that in spite of the fact we paid the cotton farmers last year, under the Soil Conservation Act, something over $86,000,000 to reduce the cotton acreage and to plant that acreage in soil-conserving and soil-rebuilding crops, today we find that in 1937 we have over 3,000,000 additional acres in cotton and we are going to produce between two and three additional million bales of cotton. In other words, the estimate of the Department is that the cotton crop this year in acreage is some 3,000,000 acres more than 1936, in baleage between two and three million bales more than 1936, and that it will be the largest crop we have produced in America since 1931–32, when the cotton price level was 5.7 cents a pound.

Now, what is going to happen if we remain inactive and fail to enact legislation at this session that will keep production and consumption in line? You know what is going to happen, I know what is going to happen, and the farmers of America are going to be asking us this question, if we go home without passing legislation that will give the Secretary the right to declare quotas and curtail production when necessary—what we have been doing up here for 8 or 9 months knowing that the lightning was going to strike. Why did we not put up a lightning rod?

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Let me finish this statement and then I will be pleased to yield.

Take wheat, and in spite of the fact we paid the wheat farmers $63,000,000 in 1936 to reduce the wheat acreage and to plant that acreage to soil-conserving and soil-rebuilding crops, what are the facts?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman care to yield for a question?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Just for a brief question.

Mr. SNELL. Did I understand the gentleman correctly to say that they were paid about $86,000,000 to take land out of cotton production and notwithstanding that fact there were two or three million more bales of cotton raised this year than heretofore?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Yes; they spent $89,000,000 last year to reduce the cotton acreage.

Mr. SNELL. Is there any way of explaining that?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I will come to that a little later on, if the gentleman will let me continue my statement.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will permit me to correct a statement he has made. I am sure the gentleman does not want to tell the House that acreage has been increased, but that production has been increased.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I mean to say that there has been planted to cotton, according to the report, over 2,000,000 additional acres, and I have had these figures checked by the Department of Agriculture.

Now, with respect to wheat, we paid, as I have said, the wheat farmers $63,000,000 in 1936 under the Soil Conservation Act to reduce the wheat acreage, in order to bring the production in line with consumption plus our exports, and what has happened? The 1937 wheat acreage has gone up over the 1936 acreage, how many acres? It has gone up from 74,000,000 to 80,000,000 acres, or 6,000,000 additional acres in wheat.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Wait until I get through with my statement.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. I just want to correct the gentleman's figures.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. These figures are correct or the Department is wrong, one or the other.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. The actual figures are that last year the acreage was about 46,000,000 and this year 57,000,000.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. No; in 1936 the wheat acreage was 74,000,000 acres. This year the wheat acreage is 80,000,000 acres, an increase of 6,000,000 acres.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Ten million.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Six million is what the Department says, and in bushels there will be an increase this year over the production last year amounting to 256,000,000 bushels of wheat, and we are going to produce, according to the estimates this year, the largest wheat crop we have ever produced in America since 1931–32, when the price level of wheat was 39.1 cents per bushel. What is going to happen to the wheat farmer unless we set up machinery to hold production in line with consumption? That is not all. Take corn. What is happening to the corn growers? In spite of the fact that we paid the corn growers of America under the Soil Conservation Act $77,000,000 last year to reduce their corn acreage and plant that acreage in soil-conserving and soil-rebuilding crops, we find that the acreage of corn has gone up this year around 3,000,000 additional acres, and our corn yield in bushels is going up from about 1,529,000,000 to something over 2,572,000,000 bushels. This is the largest corn crop we have produced since 1932–33, when corn only averaged 31.9 cents per bushel.

Let us take tobacco. What is happening to tobacco? We paid the tobacco growers $15,000,000 last year under the Soil Conservation Act to reduce the tobacco acreage and to plant same to soil-conserving and rebuilding crops, and what has happened? We find that the tobacco acreage has gone up around 250,000 to 300,000 acres, and in poundage the estimate is that we will produce this year some 268,000,000 more pounds of tobacco than we did in 1936. The estimate for the 1937 tobacco crop shows that we will produce the largest crop produced since 1931–32, when the average price per pound was 8.2 cents.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman has compared the 1937 acreage with 1936. Will the gentleman give us the figures comparing 1937 with 1932 before the reduction program was put in effect?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I think I can give the gentleman those figures. As to tobacco, we are now producing the largest crop of tobacco that we have produced in America since 1932–33.

Mr. BOILEAU. In acreage or yield?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. In yield, and in acreage, at which time the level of tobacco went down to 8.2 cents a pound.

Mr. KLEBERG. Will the gentleman state to the House whether he thinks the acreage by his statement today is greater than in 1932 with reference to cotton and wheat, before this program went into effect? Take corn, cotton, tobacco, and wheat. I am talking about the acreage.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. All right. I am talking about acreage. In 1932 the cotton acreage was 36,000,000 and it is around that today, but in 1932 you had 5-cent cotton, and that is just what you are going to have again in 1938 if you do not set up the necessary machinery to hold the production of cotton in line with your domestic consumption plus export. We may as well face the facts.

While I am on the soil-conservation program, let me remind you of the fact that I am in favor of it, but I think some changes should be made in it. I think I represent one of the best agricultural districts in America. I do not believe you will find better land in this country than the bluegrass soil in my district. We have conserved our land down there for years and years, and yet because we have conserved our land and taken care of it under the Soil Conservation Act we are being penalized, and the farmer who has wasted his land year in and year out is being paid an enormous subsidy to do the very thing that we are being penalized for having done over the years. I had the Department take my district, a tobacco district, a grazing district—we raise some corn and wheat and other crops—and with respect to benefits received, compare it with cotton, wheat, and corn districts of similar size and population. What I wanted to find out is how my district fared when compared with other districts. Here is what I found:

My district last year received $313,000 in benefit payments. The farmers in a similar wheat district were paid $1,075,000 in benefit payments, the farmers in a similar corn district $2,900,000 in benefit payments, and the farmers in a similar cotton district $3,159,000 in benefit payments. It is not exactly right to penalize the farmer who has been conserving his soil throughout the years and give the man who has been wearing out his soil an undue advantage.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. What does the gentleman say about the dairy farmer in the northeastern part of the United States, who has not received a single dollar along that line and has to pay an increased amount for the corn that they have bought from the districts that have received the benefit payments?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I think we should work out some way to equalize these payments as near as possible among the different types of farmers.

Mr. SNELL. That is what I think should be done.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Another thing, I think that under the Soil Conservation Act the large landowner is getting the advantage over the small landowner. I believe we should have graduated payments under the Soil Conservation Act. I think that should be written into the law.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. Relative to the statement made by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], I do not know what has been done in his section; but there have been some payments under the Soil Conservation Act to the dairy farmers. As a matter of fact, the Soil Conservation Act is the only one of these various acts that has given any assistance to the dairy farmer.

Mr. SNELL. Oh, there have been a few, but they are so small that you would not even put them down on paper.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. You have been getting some payments on the grassland; probably 25 cents an acre.

Mr. SNELL. Very small.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. And you have been getting perhaps a few other small payments.

Now, another thing, under the Soil Conservation Act, I had the Department take a 500-acre farm in my district, an average farm down there, and figure up how much in benefit payments my farmer would receive; then go down South and take a 500-acre cotton farm. I wanted to know.

Well, I have the answer. If it is wrong, I have been wrongly advised by the Department of Agriculture. My farmer gets $190 and the cotton farmer gets $1,520. But that is not all. My farmer's overhead expenses have not been decreased one penny, but if the cotton farmer cuts his cotton acreage 30 or 35 percent, as the Department has been asking him to do, he reduces his farm expense at least one-quarter, if his cotton crop is cut one-third, which would be two or three hundred dollars, to say the least. As a practical proposition he is getting about $2,000 and my farmer is getting $190.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I yield for just a short question.

Mr. SOUTH. I do not know what part of the South these figures would cover. I come from a cotton State and a cotton district, and I will say to the gentleman that certainly the benefits received by the farmers in my section do not equal $300 for 100 acres, as the figures which the gentleman has given seem to show.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Oh, if you reduce your cotton crop there is no question about what you get. You get $9 an acre. You get 5 cents a pound, based on an average yield of 180 pounds per acre.

Mr. SOUTH. But the gentleman is not assuming that every farmer gets the same?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. That is the general average, 180 pounds per acre, and at 5 cents a pound that gives you an average of $9 per acre. That is the way it figures out. Now, we know these facts. We know what is ahead of us. What are we going to do? What can the Secretary of Agriculture do under the present law to stabilize farm prices and to bring consumption and production into line? Not a thing in the world, because under the Soil Conservation Act, while we presumed that these benefit payments would, in a measure, regulate production we find that they do not do it. In spite of the fact that last year we turned over to the farmers under the Soil Conservation Act $395,000,000, we are going to produce an enormous surplus in all major farm crops—in wheat, in corn, in cotton, in rice, and in tobacco. And what is going to happen when that day comes? How are we going to handle those surpluses that will pile up? You know and I know that the surplus, when thrown upon the market, sets the price that the American farmer will get for his entire crop.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I yield.

Mr. MASSINGALE. The gentleman has been making a most interesting talk, I think, at least from my standpoint, and I think he has hit right at the trouble. Now as a substitute for this program of production control under which we have been operating, just in general, what is the gentleman's idea of the kind of legislation this Congress ought to pass?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I will tell the gentleman. I am not wedded to any particular bill. I introduced a bill (H. R. 7577) which was worked out by the farm group. That bill embodies the essential principles recommended by the committee that worked on it for quite a while, and it is signed by representatives of all the leading farm organizations in America, including the Farmers Union, including the Grange, and including the Farm Bureau Federation, and many of the leading farmers of America. The bill provides for an ever-normal granary in order to provide against the day of scarcity and take care of the consumer, and I think any farm bill should contain an ever-normal-granary provision. It attempts, as far as possible, to give the farmer a parity price. He is entitled to that. It gives the Secretary of Agriculture the right to declare marketing quotas when he finds there is going to be a surplus, over a certain percent, dumped upon the market. I think any farm bill, while I say I am not wedded to any particular bill, should contain those essential things.

I know that production control and marketing control is repulsive to many of us; we hate to think of them; but I want to know how you are going to regulate the farming industry in America without vesting in the Secretary of Agriculture some kind of control that will bring production in line with our domestic consumption plus exports?

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia may proceed for 1 additional minute.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Make it 10 minutes; we want to ask the gentleman some questions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LEWIS of Colorado). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I wanted to ask the gentleman a question. I think he was erroneously informed when he stated that the Farmers' Union was one of the sponsors of this bureau bill. I believe the gentleman is in error in that respect; in fact, I am quite sure of it.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I think I can clear that up. No; I do not have a copy of the report, but I think that the gentleman will find that the original report filed by the committee appointed by the President contains the name of the Farmers' Union representative.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I am quite sure it does not.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended for 10 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. For a short question.

Mr. KLEBERG. I would remind the gentleman that his time was extended to permit some of us to interrogate him. I would like to go a little more deeply into this thing, for I am very much interested in it, as the gentleman knows from our association together on the committee.

Will the gentleman tell the House, with reference to this particular bill, of the bookkeeping functions which the farmers will be called upon to undertake and the penalties they will face for failure to comply with the bookkeeping requirements? Will the gentleman give us some idea with reference to corn, wheat, and other major commodities as to the administrative costs of this bill and, inasmuch as the gentleman has suggested that cotton gets more out of the bill than the district which he represents, in the main, will he not tell us the proportion that corn would get nationally out of this bill by comparison with the other major commodities?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I may say to the gentleman from Texas that I am not wedded to any bill. What I am trying to get over to the House is the thought that we are faced with a real problem and that it is up to this Congress, before it adjourns, to enact a general farm program that will protect the farmers of this country. [Applause.]

Mr. KLEBERG. One more question. The gentleman knows of my interest inasmuch as we have worked together harmoniously on the committee. Does the gentleman feel any alarm based on the actual facts with reference to cotton prices; for instance, does he believe that the figures that he has given the House with reference to increased production, figures of the Department of Agriculture, take into consideration the peculiar things that accompany every one of these crop prognostications, the conditions of the weather, the time incident to the realization of the enormous increase that the gentleman has mentioned? I see no terrible alarm right now.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I may say this to the gentleman with reference to cotton, that the figures I have given are not only the Department's figures but they are the figures of the trade, the trade estimates.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Was the gentleman on the committee when the so-called soil-erosion law was enacted?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I was.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Was not the purpose of that act to restrict production of the crops named?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. We thought that by paying the farmer a subsidy to reduce his acreage of soil-depleting crops, such as corn, cotton, wheat, and tobacco, replacing them with soil-conserving or soil-rebuilding crops, that we would in a measure develop control of production and get it in line with consumption plus exports.

Mr. HOFFMAN. By control the gentleman means reduction.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Reduction; yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Did it work that way or not?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. It does not seem to work that way.

Mr. HOFFMAN. How does it work, the other way?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I have told the committee the facts.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is what I thought, but I wanted to be sure.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. We are going to have surpluses in all the major farm crops, wheat, corn, cotton, tobacco, and rice.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Then, in spite of all the thought we put on it, it just does not work when it comes to trying it out.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I think it has accomplished a great deal of good, and I think that our crops this year would be a great deal larger than they are estimated to be if we had not had the soil-conservation program in force. I think it has held a check line, but it is not a sufficient check to keep production and consumption in line. If we do not get production and consumption in line, the farmer is gone, and the tenant bill that we passed the other day to rehabilitate the so-called tenant farmer is not worth the paper it is written on. What is the use of trying to help the tenant farmer when we permit overproduction to run wild and hammer the price of farm products down below the cost of production? Under such a policy you know he cannot pay his way out. We must enact legislation that will give the farmer something above the cost of production. He is entitled to parity, I think, but if we do not give him something above cost of production we will have more instead of less tenants in America. That is the situation.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. I would like to point out that the gentleman referred to conditions in 1932 for purposes of comparison; but that is not exactly correct, for since 1932 we have had an increase in population to some extent, and this would require larger crops. In addition to that, the purchasing power of the American people is considerably higher today, so that they are able to buy more of a particular commodity. Even though we have the same quantity, it would not necessarily mean we have the same surplus.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. That is true. The gentleman is correct in that statement; but, based upon the Department's estimate of domestic consumption, plus our exports, we are going to have an enormous surplus in all major farm crops.

Mr. BOILEAU. But will the surplus be as large?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. The question is, What will happen to the American farmer? Are we going to stand idly by, knowing this evil day is coming, without taking action at this session of Congress to vest in the Secretary of Agriculture some way of maintaining farm prices? We know what happened under the old Farm Board. We made loans on cotton, wheat, and corn without any control over the production of those products. That was the fallacy of the old Farm Board legislation. We agreed to lend the farmers so much on wheat, corn, and so forth, but we had no control over production.

What happened? When prices, due to overproduction, fell below the loan levels the farmer converted his loan into a sale. The plan failed because there was no control over production.

Mr. Speaker, the Government cannot keep on buying surplus crops and taking them off the market. No government can afford to make loans on farm crops unless machinery is set up to control production and hold it in line with consumption, plus our exports.

Mr. HOFFMAN. What is the remedy?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I think we ought to have some kind of control program. As I said before, as much as some of us hate to think we have to go to that, and as distasteful as it is to many of us, I do not see any hope for agriculture in this country unless there is vested in the Secretary of Agriculture some form of control over production or over marketing in order to keep production and consumption in line. We will have to come to production control sooner or later.

Mr. VOORHIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS. I am in hearty agreement with the gentleman's position that we need some farm legislation and I am glad to hear him say he is not particularly wedded to any one piece of legislation. I would like to know what the gentleman's opinion is as to the importance of the control which the middleman and the speculator exercises over the prices of staple farm commodities and whether the gentleman does not believe that is one of the most serious elements in the situation and one that needs most to be dealt with?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Of course, the speculators have always lived off the farmers. There is no question about that in my mind. In lots of instances where the price of farm products has gone up, the sad part of the story is the farmers did not get the benefit of the increase in price, but, on the contrary, some speculator reaped the reward.

Mr. KELLER. Why do we not stop that?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. In time it will be stopped.

Mr. VOORHIS. The major problem being that farm prices are high when the farmer does not have a crop to sell and they are beaten down when he does have a crop to sell?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. And when the price goes up he has not anything to sell.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. The argument suggested by the gentleman from California, of course, has been here for years and years. It was here when we had the Farm Board question up for consideration. It was here when we had the equalization fee up for consideration and when we had the debenture plan up. Nothing new has been suggested that has not been before the Congress for years and years and yet we have not been able to work anything out. Does not the gentleman believe before we get through we will have to get back somewhere near the principle involved in the old equalization fee matter or the export debenture plan?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. We have to work out something. Now, the gentleman states we have not gotten anywhere.

Mr. MICHENER. We have just been talking.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. All right. I know this, and the gentleman cannot wipe it out, the farmer's income back in 1933 was something over $3,000,000,000. That is all he got for the products of the soil. I know that under the Roosevelt administration they are expecting to get something over $9,000,000,000 this year.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman referred to the Roosevelt administration and the income of the farmers at the present time.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I did that because the gentleman said nothing had been accomplished. In my opinion, the old A. A. A., constitutional or unconstitutional, did more for the American farmers than any piece of legislation ever enacted.

Mr. MICHENER. If we are to continue to pay subsidies, and I am not objecting, yes; but if we take away the subsidies paid by the Government and if we take away the additional purchasing power, the farmer is worse off today than he was in 1933. Every farm organization will tell you that. If it is just a question of paying subsidies, if we are going to take money out of the consumer's pocket and put it in the pocket of the farmer and call that prosperity for the farmer, that is one thing. I am not objecting. I am just saying that by reason of that we do not want to consider the thing as anywhere near solved.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I am willing to vote today to take every subsidy away that we pay the farmer if you will take away the tariff laws that protect industry. I will do that. Put them on the same equality. But as long as you are subsidizing industry in this country you have to subsidize the farmer to put him on an equality with industry.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BIERMANN. The utmost a subsidy can amount to this year is a half billion dollars, and the farmers' income, as the gentleman states, is about $6,000,000,000 more than it was the last year, I hope the final year, of Republican control.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MICHENER. It does not compare with the increase in labor.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia may proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. KERR. In answer to the gentleman from Michigan, does the gentleman know that the only legislation which has ever been passed that was beneficial to the farmer was passed by this administration? The gentleman will further agree with me that such legislation raised the price of tobacco from 9 cents a pound to 27 cents a pound, the price of corn from 26 cents a bushel to $1.15 a bushel, and the price of wheat from 45 cents a bushel to $1.20 a bushel.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. That is all true. And may I say to the gentleman from North Carolina that my farmers are still grateful to him for the Kerr bill, which saved the tobacco growers in my district. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFARLANE] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include various excerpts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

DICTATORSHIP IN AMERICA?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, because of the lateness of the hour I ask the indulgence of the Members in order that I may try to hurry through my remarks. If I may be permitted to proceed without interruption, at the completion of my remarks I shall be pleased to yield for any questions.

Radio news commentators, editorial writers employed on the large metropolitan daily newspapers, and others who control the molding of public opinion in our country have lately been alleging that we have a dictator in control of our Government.

By subtle insinuation they have, I regret to say, tried to turn public opinion against the one President of the United States, Franklin D. Roosevelt, who, since his election in 1932, has consistently and persistently, openly and honestly, sought to better the living conditions of the one-third of our people, the workers and farmers, who, prior to the inauguration of President Roosevelt, did not know what it was to have a friend in the White House.

THE REAL DICTATORSHIP

Speaking of dictators, it is my purpose to demonstrate that today in America it is not the elected President of the United States who can be looked upon as a dictator. We have dictatorships, but the dictators do not reside in the White House, nor were the dictators ever elected to any office by the American people.

We have dictatorships in America, when 300 or less persons have an absolute monopoly in the molding of public opinion through undisputed control of radio stations, newspapers, and motion pictures, as will be shown in these remarks.

DANGERS THROUGH MONOPOLY CONTROL OF PROPAGANDA INSTRUMENTS: RADIO, MOTION PICTURES, TELEVISION, NEWSPAPERS

The power of the radio monopolists is well set forth in the report of the National Resources Committee recently issued by President Roosevelt, from which I quote:

How great is the power in the control of mass communications, especially when helped by modern inventions, has been made clear recently in countries that have had social revolutions and which have promptly, in a very short period, brought extraordinary changes in the expressed beliefs and actions of vast populations. These have been led to accept whole ideologies contrary to their former beliefs, and to accept as the new gospel what many outsiders would think ridiculous.

The three chains comprising the radio monopolies which are dependent for their continued operation on patent licenses which are controlled by the American Telephone & Telegraph monopoly and the Radio Corporation of America, also extend their monopoly in the moulding of public opinion through their connections with motion-picture companies and through their domination of some 200 or more large newspapers in America who own radio broadcasting stations.

Up to June 1, 1937, some 200 of the largest licensed radio broadcasting stations were controlled by newspapers, and, in some 135 cases, the radio station alone controlled, in their respective communities, both the radio stations and the newspapers. Is that monopoly? Is that dictatorship?

With rare exceptions, all of these newspaper-owned radio stations are programmed by one or the other of the three chains comprising the radio monopolies, which, in substance, means that the radio monopolists control what goes in the newspapers and over these newspaper-owned radio stations as well as that which goes over the other radio stations which they themselves own or control.

INGRATITUDE ON PART OF VESTED WEALTH

When President Roosevelt took office, most of the industrialists, most of the banks, the railroads, and the other vested interests were near bankruptcy. They had all admitted their inability to provide employment for the workers, safety for money deposited in their banks, and a decent market for the product of American farms.

President Roosevelt and the Congress went to their aid realizing that saving of the invested wealth was in the public interest and helpful to all of our people. However, instead of receiving any gratitude from those we kept out of the bankruptcy courts, by his rare courage and high statesmanship, as well as the confidence which he inspired from the common people, those we helped now seek to bite the hands that literally fed them.

Having considerable knowledge of the monopoly which exists in radio broadcasting, the looseness, to be charitable, which prevails in the Communications Commission and, having worked with our late lamented colleague, "Billy" Connery, I have waited patiently for the Rules Committee to report out the radio-investigation resolution presented to the House by "Billy" Connery, last January. It now appears that in addition to the control which the radio monopolists have in the molding of public opinion among the American people they seemingly are not without influence right here in the Congress of the United States.

CONSPIRACY TO LOOT THE INVESTING PUBLIC

During the Hoover Administration the Radio Corporation of America stock, which had never paid a dividend, was manipulated from $5 a share to $520 a share resulting in the looting of millions of innocent investors. "Never again" moaned the public and "never again" echoed the Government.

We created the Securities and Exchange Commission to protect the public against stock frauds and rackets.

Lo and behold, a few days ago I came across what has all the appearance of a gigantic conspiracy on the part of officials of the Columbia Broadcasting System and the officials of the New York Stock Exchange, with the apparent acquiescence of the Securities and Exchange Commission, to loot the American investing public to the extent of some fifty or more millions of dollars.

The stockholders of the Columbia Broadcasting System, as near as I can ascertain from the consolidated balance sheets, filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission and the New York Stock Exchange, show an actual cash investment of less than $1,600,000. They further show that Columbia Broadcasting System has total assets of some $12,000,000, which includes a claim of some two and one-quarter millions of dollars for good will, whatever that means, when we must also realize that the licenses on which they are dependent for operation are issued for periods of only 6 months. Against these total assets they have outstanding obligations of almost $5,000,000 which leaves a net value of some five and one-half millions of dollars.

Since December 26, 1931, this company has paid in cash dividends $7,864,998, on this cash investment of less than $1,600,000. Yet this system now seeks from the Securities and Exchange Commission a certificate which will authorize the listing of some 1,192,970 shares of stock on the New York Stock Exchange and the sale to the public of a substantial portion of this stock at prices which are far in excess of their values.

At the present time, according to the daily press, the stock of this radio monopoly is traded in—whether wash sales or not I do not know—on the over-the-counter list at New York on a total valuation of some $58,000,000.

Undoubtedly, the public will be permitted to invest possibly $30,000,000 or more for a minority interest in this enterprise, which has a total cash investment of less than $1,600,000. If this is not stock racketeering, what is it?

All the afternoon papers carry headlines that Governor Lehman is fighting the President's court plan. Lehman Bros. are reputed to be the bankers for the Columbia Broadcasting System, molders of public opinion in this country. Governor Lehman and this set-up are asking Senator WAGNER to change his position and vote against the President's court proposal.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield for a question.

Mr. SOUTH. If the Governor had come out for the plan, does not the gentleman believe the papers would have carried it in the headlines just the same?

Mr. McFARLANE. Probably over in the want-ad section, where they usually carry a thing when it suits their interests better to do so.

Mr. SOUTH. Does the gentleman mean that for a serious answer?

Mr. McFARLANE. I mean that for a serious answer, because I have seen it happen time and again that the special interests usually carry in the want-ad sections the things they do not want generally publicized. The things they are driving to put over they put on the front page in headlines. I have seen it happen for 20 years.

Mr. SOUTH. The gentleman knows the papers have carried both sides of this controversy, and that men who have come out for the plan have been given wide publicity if they were of such public standing as to merit it. The gentleman cannot be sincere when he states that if Governor Lehman had come out for the President's court plan the newspapers would not have headlined it.

Mr. McFARLANE. May I say in answer to the gentleman that I have noticed daily, as I am sure the gentleman has, to show the policy of the press, both here and elsewhere, that today 85 percent of the same plutocratic crowd which fought this administration in the last campaign is fighting them now and trying to sabotage their program. Almost daily they come out editorially bushwhacking the President on his court plan. I know, and the gentleman knows, they hope to run out from under all the rest of the President's legislative program, and are using the court fight as a smoke screen. Frank Gannett, one of the leaders in the court fight, let the cat out of the bag in such a statement recently.

Mr. SOUTH. A lot of other prominent people are doing it, and a lot of people who are against the court plan are not plutocrats.

Mr. McFARLANE. There are lots of good, honest Members of Congress and others who just cannot see the light, I grant that.

Last week I addressed an inquiry to the officials of the Securities and Exchange Commission as to whether or not such apparent fraudulent activities were within the law and up to the present time I have not received any answer. It is possible that through some loophole in the law the American people are not securing that protection from stock racketeering which the Congress intended, and assumed it had provided when the Securities and Exchange Commission was enacted.

TAX EVASION—LOOPHOLES

The Tax Avoidance Committee now looking into loopholes they largely placed in our tax laws have listed the president of Columbia Broadcasting System as one of the tax dodgers. In the light of the financial pyramid just illustrated, I here now request the Tax Avoidance Committee to ascertain from the Treasury Department the taxes paid by the radio monopolists such as Sarnoff, Paley, Crosley, and those associated with them.

RADIO STOCK SELLING RACKET

Is the selling of stock in a radio station, which is dependent for its very life on a 6 months' license from a governmental authority and without which license the station has nothing but junk value a racket?

No less an authority than the Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission has so stated, openly, to the members of the House Appropriations Committee, that stock selling in radio stations was a racket.

Testifying before the House Appropriations Committee, Chairman Prall said:

> Another thing that is quite serious is the possibility of a racket following this thing in the way of stock issues. They are beginning to get wise now to the fact that they might, by a stock issue, still retain control of their stations and sell enough stock to not only pay the cost of the station but some profit in addition to that.
> We are conducting now through the legal department sort of an investigation of that subject because there are some stations that are issuing stock at this time. Now, just how much they can issue before they get into the value of the license given them by the Government, for which they pay nothing, is a question.

INSULT TO BILLY CONNERY

And yet these radio pirates, through one of their paid apologists, in an issue of Broadcasting July 15, have the audacity to impugn the good name of our late colleague, Billy Connery, when they said:

> The Connery resolution, which from the start had all the earmarks of a headline-hunting, sensation-seeking fishing expedition by a select committee.

ARE UNSUSPECTING INVESTORS DEPENDENT UPON THE CONGRESS FOR PROTECTION?

Mr. Speaker, I believe that it is well within the bounds of reason to say that unless this body accepts the unchallenged statements of the Chairman of the Communications Commission and enacts legislation, if such is needed, which will, in reality, protect the American people from stock-selling rackets and the radio monopoly, then every Member of this House, as well as this administration, is equally guilty if we later find that an unsuspecting public has been defrauded and looted by these stock racketeers through our negligence or through the willingness of some to listen to the soft voice of those who represent these monopolists and racketeers.

FRAUDULENT PRACTICES OF F. C. C.

However guilty as we may find ourselves to be, let me direct the attention of the House to the imposition and fraud practiced upon the Congress by the Communications Commission.

In order to promote science and to encourage inventors, we authorized the Federal Communications Commission to issue experimental licenses to radio stations. Several of these licenses have been issued, and I dare say that none of the holders of any of these licenses can show wherein any experiments worthy of the name have been carried on. There are several citations of such frauds which might be called to the attention of the House, but I will be content with directing your attention to what is naturally the most outstanding.

A manufacturer in Cincinnati, Crosley by name, having a better knowledge of how to secure concessions apparently than some of his competitors, or because he was not directly tied to one of the two dominant radio monopolies, was permitted to obtain from the Federal Communications Commission an experimental license to use a total of some 500,000 watts power, the largest station in America. Nine-tenths of this power was experimental, so, therefore, I understand, he immediately raised the price of his radio advertising time some 50 percent and has continued to collect handsome commercial profits on the basis of experimentation for these 39 months.

I wonder sometimes whether men secure such unusual concessions because of their innate ability or because they are good-looking or because they have ways of getting things done. Just why, I think it fair to ask, has this unusual concession been handed out and continued in the hands of one of the some 700 radio licenses?

TRAFFICKING IN RADIO LICENSES

In addition there is another racket now flourishing in the broadcasting field. This concerns itself with the trafficking in radio stations. A license for a radio frequency is just that, and does not signify ownership, but only permission to use such frequency for 6 months. Despite this the trafficking in radio stations whose real value is the frequency for which it has a license, for which they pay the Government nothing and which is subject to renewal every 6 months, has reached what are apparently absurd proportions the import of which it is the duty of Congress to determine. Although the list of cases is legion a few will suffice to bring home the point.

The Western Broadcasting Co., which owned station KNX in Los Angeles, the recipient of a broadcasting license from the F. C. C., sold this frequency to the Columbia Broadcasting System. The facts in this sale are amazing. The station having a claimed value of stock transferred, including physical and intangible values amounting to $236,520, was purchased by Columbia for $1,250,000.

In his testimony before the Appropriations Committee, Commissioner Prall stated:

> I know of a case where within 6 months a corporation able to pay offered $3,000,000 for one station.

Can it be that the broadcasting interests have been assured that the F. C. C. will renew these licenses indefinitely? It is the duty of Congress to determine the facts underlying this brokerage in Government radio licenses for which they pay the Government nothing.

TEAPOT DOME OR RAPING THE NATIONAL DEFENSE

But the buccaneering practice by these monopolists against the public does not stop there. Permit me to read from a recent article published in The Nation, by Paul Ward. I quote the following:

> Only recently certain members of the F. C. C. moved to take away from the Navy two out of five short-wave frequencies allotted this Government by international agreement and turned them over to Columbia for private exploitation, just as the naval oil reserves were turned over to Fall, Doheny, and the rest in the Teapot Dome case, a cry of "Teapot Dome again" within the Commission itself broke up the play for the time being.

MONOPOLY CONDITIONS HANDED DOWN FROM HOOVER REGIME

This monopoly is by no means a reflection upon the present administration. A congressional investigation will in no way cast any reflection upon it. Instead, these monopolies were inherited from the Hoover administration.

WAS FEDERAL COURT DEBAUCHED TO INSURE CONTINUED RADIO MONOPOLY?

A reopening of the Government's case against the radio monopoly, either on the part of the Attorney General's Department or on the part of the Congress, through a proper investigation as well as an inquiry as to how these economic royalists, R. C. A., N. B. C., Columbia, and Mutual secured monopolistic control of radio stations. These monopolies now control all 40 clear channels, all radio stations of over 1,000 watts operating at night, and 93 percent of the power used for the transmission of radio broadcasting and does, from my studies, show a colossal fraud perpetrated upon the American people, and I would be surprised if we did not find that this monopoly was created and still exists through bribery practiced in circles supposedly above reproach.

Why was the brother of the clerk of the United States Federal court at Wilmington retained by the radio monopoly just before the consent decree was agreed to?

Why did the Government counsel in charge of this case and in charge of antitrust prosecutions so suddenly resign after this consent decree was entered into?

While I believe the American people can justly criticize the Congress for allowing the continuation of this radio monopoly which has been severely flayed on the floor of both Houses of the Congress during the present year without any action on the part of Congress, let me direct your attention to the influence of this monopoly while the Hoover administration was in power.

After great hullabaloo and the spending of vast sums of the taxpayers' moneys the Hoover administration brought an action in the Federal Court in Delaware to break up the then apparent radio monopoly.

The Government showed how this monopoly, fostered by General Electric and the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., purchased the American Marconi Co. and how, whenever necessary, they shared their monopoly with others, provided that such others were strong potential competitors. They took in the British, the French, the Germans, and such Americans as were necessary, all of the time securing for the Radio Corporation of America the absolute monopoly in the United States of radio reception from all over the world as well as radio transmission in the United States and from the United States to all other parts of the world. A monopoly, incidentally, which the Federal Communications Commission has perpetuated in a recent decision preventing a competitor of R. C. A. from establishing service to Oslo, Norway.

COMMUNICATIONS MONOPOLY—AL CAPONE AND BIG BUSINESS

This brings us to the supposed dissolution of the Radio Trust as agreed to in the consent decree in 1932. The Government in its antitrust action against R. C. A., General Electric, A. T. & T. Co., Westinghouse, et al., contended that these parties had divided up the electrical industries into exclusive fields and agreed not to compete with each other. The evidence was overwhelming, although it was actually unnecessary to go very much further than the cross-licensing agreement entered into by the defendants. The radio-set manufacture field was reserved to R. C. A., the transoceanic radiotelephone field and the monopoly for their broadcasting was given exclusively to the A. T. & T. This agreement provided that they would not compete with each other, but instead would act in concert to loot the public. One is driven to the odious comparison with Al Capone, who divided up Chicago, and who once remarked that his activities were really "big business without a top hat."

WAS R. C. A. CONSENT DECREE A SELL-OUT?

The Hoover administration, however, sold out the American people when it permitted the guilty parties to enter into a consent decree the mysteriousness of which has never lifted. The only difference, it appears, exists largely in the consent decree, but not in fact. R. C. A. still has a monopoly on the rights to radio set manufacture and A. T. & T. still has a monopoly of the wires for chain broadcasting, R. C. A. still has exclusive agreements with various foreign communication monopolies, and A. T. & T. still has a monopoly of transoceanic radio telephony. The recent F. C. C. special telephone investigation has this to say in substance about the conditions after this consent decree:

F. C. C. DECLARES MONOPOLY STILL IN FORCE BUT TAKES NO ACTION

The chief criticism has been that these agreements have fostered monopolies in a number of fields foreign to the primary field of the telephone company by effectuating a pooling of the thousands of patents owned by the parties by dividing between the parties the many fields in which patents have application and by throwing into the path of others desiring to engage in these fields the obstacles presented by the combined patent and financial resources of the telephone company, the Western Electric Co., the General Electric Co., the Radio Corporation, and the Westinghouse Co.

As counsel to the House special committee investigating the cross-licensing and pooling of patents, I found the violations to be even more flagrant.

The effect of this so-called dissolution consent decree was to insure the continued looting of the American people and the continued monopoly of the molding of public opinion by these monopolists with the sanction of the Hoover administration.

NO HONOR AMONG RADIO PIRATES

However, even among these pirates there is no honor. It appears that subsequent to the consent decree the A. T. & T. monopoly was extending itself to such an extent that it even poached upon the monopolistic position of R. C. A., its erstwhile partner in plunder.

The sound motion-picture industries was a case in point. A. T. & T. negotiated an exclusive license with seven of the eight largest motion-picture producers. R. C. A. was able to negotiate only one.

R. C. A., furious of violation of their agreement to divide up the field, filed a bill of complaint, charging antitrust violation by A. T. & T. The complaint, however, was never filed in any court but was used as a blackjack against the A. T. & T. As a result of this threat by R. C. A. to invoke the law against the telephone company, the latter capitulated to R. C. A. and agreed to give the "swag" more even division among the two monopolies. But the public had an interest in this antitrust violation. Who was to protect their interests? As far as I can ascertain, since the consent decree of November 21, 1932, no action has been taken by the Government against these monopolies, despite the fact that the Government has a direct interest in all antitrust litigation. These facts have been clearly presented by the recent special telephone investigation.

Mr. Speaker, in opening my remarks I emphasized the existence in America of dictatorship, not on the part of elected officials, the President, or the Congress, but on the part of those who control the molding of public opinion and those who control our cross-licensing and patent-pooling agreements, which in substance are controlled by about a dozen people in New York City.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFARLANE. These cross-license and patent-pooling agreements are monopolized by the American Telegraph & Telephone Co. and Radio Corporation of America, which, in turn, control radio broadcasting, motion pictures, and, to a great extent, the public press.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S NATIONAL RESOURCES COMMITTEE FIND MONOPOLY CONTROL OF TELEVISION A NATIONAL MENACE

In the newspapers of July 18 the report of the National Resources Committee was made public by President Roosevelt. I call your attention to page 21 of the New York Times, the headings of which are self-explanatory:

"Calls television propaganda peril", "Report warns of power to widen avenues for spread of insidious ideas"; and on the next column is the heading "Predicts papers printed in homes; Resources Committee says new inventions presage vast communications changes."

With the control of the molding of public opinion amply demonstrated to be in the hands of vested wealth, it is my belief the Congress can well be accused of cowardice, if we do not meet the challenge laid down to us.

WILL CONGRESS ACT?

The Congress has pending before us in the House and the Senate resolutions seeking an investigation of this radio monopoly to indicate how widespread is the demand for this investigation. I quote one of many editorials written insisting that Congress investigate this radio monopoly:

CONGRESSIONAL INVESTIGATIONS HELPFUL—SCRIPPS-HOWARD EDITORIAL

No other money which the Government spends, we believe, yields greater returns, dollar for dollar, than does the money expended for congressional investigations.

True, some of these inquiries are turned into witch hunts to punish political enemies and used unconscionably to invade the privacy of law-abiding individuals. But, on the whole, investigations such as the one which saved the Teapot Dome, the Pecora inquiry that pointed the way to wiser banking and securities laws, and the La Follette hearing which is publicizing and putting a curb on civil liberties violations are definitely worth while.

Charges have been made that the F. C. C. is awarding broadcasting franchises on a political basis; that a broadcasting monopoly is being developed; that a vested right is being created in the frenquencies allotted; that certain parts of the country are being favored over other sections; that censorship has restricted freedom of the air, and that too much time on radio programs is given over to advertising and too little to educational and cultural features. All these charges have been made, and more.

They should be proved or disproved. The policy-making branch of our Government should search out the truth and correct whatever abuses are found.

In closing, let me direct the attention of the House to the insulting attitude of the kept magazine of the radio monopoly toward the House and our late Colleague, Billy Connery. This magazine Broadcasting, in its issue of July 15, page 44, in its editorial entitled "The White Resolution", first insults the honesty and good faith of our late colleague, Billy Connery, when they accuse him of headline hunting, sensation seeking, and a fishing expedition by a select House committee. This odious and insulting, at least to House Members, editorial closes with this advice to the Congress:

SHALL RADIO MONOPOLY PICK ITS INVESTING COMMITTEE?—INSULT TO HOUSE

Let there be an investigation along the lines proposed in the White resolution. We are confident that the result will quiet for another decade the tongue wagging of the radio baiters.

Mr. Speaker, will the Members of this House and will this administration continue to stand idly by while the American people are in danger of being looted of millions of dollars by this radio practice by continued exploitation in the way of exorbitant prices for what should be a necessity of life and continue to permit this small group of exploiters to mold public opinion amongst our people to suit their own selfish interests?

The public is somewhat conversant with the apparent scandalous happenings existing in the radio and communications fields. The Nation, Variety, the Washington News, the syndicated column Washington Merry-Go-Round, Billboard, among other publications, have all somewhat ventilated the smelly conditions existent.

The dictators, which I mentioned earlier in my speech, are now trying to get Congress to adjourn so that legislation on judicial reform, wages and hours, farm aid, and departmental reorganization, which they so violently oppose in their press and radio, may be sidetracked. These men are the unelected, unofficial dictators of America. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question as a matter of information?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I can see the gentleman must have devoted a great deal of time and study to this subject and have performed a great deal of research work. The gentleman mentioned a station at Los Angeles. What was the name of that station?

Mr. McFARLANE. KNX, I believe.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Is the gentleman sure about his statement? I do not recall that the gentleman gave the name of the station.

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes; I gave the name of the station. It is in the RECORD. I took the figures from the records, so I know the figures are accurate, as well as the other statements I have made.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I just want to say this. We have this appalling situation before us: Resolutions to investigate this great communications field have been pending before this House since early in the session, and no action has been taken by the Rules Committee. I can think of nothing that is of more importance pending before the Congress than such an investigation to clear up the entire communications field, to the end that we see what it is that is so all-powerful that it is continuing to control and mold public opinion in this country to suit their own selfish interests, and I hope we will soon have some action by the Rules Committee to give this House an opportunity to vote upon this important question.

Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania. Do I understand from the gentleman's remarks that Congress was advised by the Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission of the situation he is referring to as now existing?

Mr. McFARLANE. I quoted from Chairman Prall's remarks, and I will say to the gentleman, and, perhaps, the gentleman did not exactly hear the quotation, but my statements in that regard were taken from Chairman Prall's own statement to the House Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania. I heard the quotation, and while I may be wrong, I took it that the quotation advised the Congress of the situation that the gentleman is talking about and referring to as a serious one. Am I right in that respect?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes, sir. The situation that Chairman Prall was talking about was a stock-selling racket that is rapidly developing in the radio field, and he feels it is a racket and something that should be stopped. Incidentally other members of the Communications Commission have asked for an investigation by Congress.

Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania. Which is one of the grounds of the gentleman's argument.

Mr. McFARLANE. Correct.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Earlier in the gentleman's well-prepared remarks he told us that public opinion or public sentiment in the country had turned against the President, and the gentleman severely castegated the press and the radio commentators for this change in public sentiment. I was very careful to listen to the words, because they were written and the statement was well worded and could not be misunderstood. In that connection, does the gentleman have in mind that the President of the United States gets a national hook-up without charge on all radios if and when he asks for it, and that he has assumed to accept that proposition and in fireside chats and otherwise has done more to propagandize his theories and his administration policies by this method than was ever attempted by any President or any American citizen in all time?

Mr. McFARLANE. In answer to the gentleman I will say that the President has used the national hook-up in radio far less than the vested interests. The fact he has been more effective is because he has carried home to the great masses of our people fundamental facts and truths that are unanswerable, and, of course, this is a little bit hard on those of the opposition; but it is well known that the opposition has used much more radio time than has the President.

Mr. MICHENER. But right there, if that be true, it is not because of the fact that others have been given time, because they have to pay for it. The President has had such time and does now have such time as he wants without charge and can go to the country at any time.

Mr. McFARLANE. In answer to the gentleman's statement in that regard, I may say I do not know what the facts are, but I do know the number of speeches placed in the RECORD, for instance, on the Court proposition by those in opposition to the Court proposal are far greater and the speeches far more voluminous than those that have been made over the radio in favor of it.

Mr. MICHENER. Why is the gentleman, then, condemning the radio and the press—that is, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. McFARLANE. I am talking about radio speeches placed in the RECORD.

Mr. MICHENER. I think the gentleman should give this matter consideration.

Mr. McFARLANE. I am talking about things being spread by the plutocratic press and radio commentators of the country at this time, and I think that is being turned out by that group. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

SENATE

TUESDAY, JULY 20, 1937

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, being called to order by the Vice President.

Rev. Richard A. Cartmell, assistant rector, Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, the high and mighty Ruler of the universe, who art ever more ready to hear than we to pray: We would seek this day to stand in the light of Thy pure and unsearchable wisdom. Thou hast promised that Thou wilt send Thy Holy Spirit among us to lead us into all truth and that where two or three are gathered together in Thy name Thou wilt grant their request. Mindful of this, Thy gracious promise, O Father, in these times, fraught with such deep perplexity, we beseech Thee for Thy special guidance to save us from all false choices, and that in Thy light we may see light and in Thy straight path we may not stumble. Through Him who lighteth every man that cometh into the world, Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

SERMON BY REV. H. BASCOM WATTS AT THE FUNERAL OF SENATOR ROBINSON

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the very beautiful tribute paid to our late departed colleague and leader, Senator ROBINSON, by the Reverend H. Bascom Watts, delivered at the funeral services at Little Rock, Ark., on last Sunday afternoon.

There being no objection, the sermon was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SENATOR JOSEPH TAYLOR ROBINSON

Here we pay our tribute of respect to a great representative American—JOSEPH TAYLOR ROBINSON. I shall not speak comprehensively of his work as a public official. That has been adequately reviewed in the national press and by his admiring colleagues in official life; and what word of eulogy could I speak that would be sufficient? It is proper only that I should seek to be the medium for expressing the deep affection and high esteem in which he was held by the people of the State of Arkansas.

Half a dozen years short of the threescore and ten of the Psalmist, yet few others in the history of our Nation's life have lived so tremendously and with such a varied career as this eminent statesman. We are a little too close to him now to do justice to him. Some of us admired him so enthusiastically that our praise may sound a bit strident and may thus lose its force. Time will properly adjust his fame. I think that adjustment will assign him a very high place in American history.

In the decades from about 1810 to 1850 there were three dominating personalities in American legislative life—Webster, Clay, and Calhoun. Possibly it may be too early to put Senator ROBINSON in a category with them, and I am sure he would have been the last to have claimed any such distinction. But when a history of the Congress and the crucial issues before it in the last three decades is scientifically presented by careful students of the period, it cannot omit him from rank with the foremost.

However, I am not thinking of him so much as a statesman, or even a great man, but as a personality. When you saw Senator ROBINSON you saw a remarkable personality. The test of personality is the human interest in the daily incidents, reactions, and manners of the man. How did he smile; why did he frown; what were his tricks of gesture and speech; in what spirit did he meet the troubles and trials of everyday life? Some men are aloof and austere—only their doctrines interest us. They are mere doctrinaires. Human contact with them detracts from their influence. No mere "glad-hander" was Senator ROBINSON, but neither was he aloof nor austere. His life, political, domestic, personal, was singularly open and so vitally human that he inspired in men associated with him genuine affection and unfeigned confidence.

Among tall mountains it is hard to measure peaks. There is too much of ROBINSON, too many vividly related phases of his unusual personality, to discuss at length his great career as legislator, advocate, Congressman, Governor, United States Senator, leader of his party, representative of his Government at distinguished international tribunals, citizen, friend, husband. Certain things are outstanding in his life, however, as the memory of it hurries past the rush of our thoughts this afternoon. Let me point them in rapid succession.

Ever lover of his country, through good and evil report; born and reared in the South, he was idolized all over the country, greeted everywhere he went by sympathetic crowds of the plain people who recognized that whatever his errors of judgments, whatever the impetuosity of his speech, here was at heart a man who was a true democrat in a great Republic, his mind open to their aspirations, his hand outstretched to their aid, his voice outspoken for their rights.

He was sometimes a caustic critic of more cautious men and measures. He was a man of great force. And folks like force. He walked with a firm tread. Whatever his faults, the one offense which could never be laid to his charge was the crime of evasion or inactivity, of which Browning said in The Statue and the Bust:

"The sin I impute to each frustrate ghost,
Is—the unlit lamp and the ungirt loin."

His lamp was ever alight with the oil of activity and his loins girt for the battles of justice.

Two things were predominant in JOSEPH T. ROBINSON—militancy and sincerity. He was a fighter, but no one ever denied his courage or questioned the undoubted sincerity of conviction with which he entered the fight. "What is right?" "What ought to be done?" That was enough. Pain or possible defeat did not deter him. He was a politician. Surely. That was his profession. He was a vote getter. True. But I question if he ever compromised a conviction for a vote. He was not a demagogue. He denounced wrong and injustice to its face. He was a man with whom no one could agree in all things. He outstrode ordinary thinking men. Yet perhaps no man in our generation has been more nearly a representative American.

Most prominent of the expressions that his death called forth here in the city where he was so well known was the repeated statement, "He was my friend." In the faces of these hundreds who pay their last tribute of respect and of the thousands who could not get inside these walls, there is written as clearly as my words, "He was my friend." His was a genius for friendship composed of a warm interest in his fellow men. His interest was not assumed but was inherent and genuine.

When a man is in public life the searchlight of publicity shows only his dominant traits; these are often overemphasized and out of proportion to other qualities. It remains for family and neighbors and friends here in Arkansas to give the more intimate knowledge that reveals a well-rounded estimate of his character. All who knew him well recognized Senator ROBINSON'S deep religious faith. Not a faith that he wore on his sleeve, but one that was in touch with hidden sources in his heart. He kept undimmed the simplicity and fervor of his youthful religious convictions. This Sunday-school teacher in his youth, this lay preacher of righteousness in his young manhood, this battler for social justice to the end of the way, who "did justly, loved mercy, and walked humbly with his God", went unafraid to meet the Great Judge of us all. Alone in the darkness of a midnight this "Greatheart" passed on. But a new light was about to shine for him from the throne of God. He had entered on the great adventure.

To paraphrase the words of another, he may not have been the master of his fate—few men are that—but he was at all times and under all circumstances the captain of his soul. Today our State bows its head and half-masts its flags while these simple obsequies are accorded our great departed leader. No eulogy, no flowers can adequately express the devotion we bore him and the admiration in which we held him. Arkansas' most representative American, known in every part of the earth, goes to his grave as a quiet Christian gentleman, greatly beloved by his neighbors. You and I may well remember him today. We shall not soon see his like again. Thank God for the memory and heritage of JOSEPH TAYLOR ROBINSON.

We join with the Nation in laying our wreath of tribute by his last resting place. He will sleep among the trees that he so greatly loved, in the soil of his beloved native State from which he went out to a place of eminence in world affairs. We, his neighbors and friends, tearfully turn from the silence of this scene to the busy marts of men, knowing that Robert Louis Stevenson's requiem would have expressed his wish:

"Under the wide and starry sky
Dig the grave and let me lie,
Glad did I live and gladly die,
And I lay me down with a will.

"This be the verse you grave for me:
'Here he lies where he longed to be;
Home is the sailor, home from the sea,
And the hunter home from the hill.'"

TRIBUTE BY SENATOR LEWIS

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a radio address delivered on the 15th instant by the able Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], being a eulogy to the late Senator ROBINSON, may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EULOGY ON SENATOR JOSEPH TAYLOR ROBINSON, OF ARKANSAS, DELIVERED OVER THE RADIO BY THE SENATE MAJORITY WHIP, JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS, SENATOR FROM ILLINOIS

I speak as one of the voices of the United States Senate—as the parliamentary aide designated as whip of the Senate. The whip is an officer of the organization to whom is committed discretion to direct, request, and sometimes command the Members to their places in the anxiety of holding what we call "quorum"—a certain number necessary to make legislation legal in the number of votes cast.

Oftentimes the question is asked by the newly arrived Member of the whip, "What is our vote?"—and when it is an administration measure they take their direction from the whip, unless the matter is one of personal judgment calling for action of the Senator separate from party or administration organization. It is as such whip I am permitted today to express the testimonial arranged for to be conveyed this hour by radio. I thank those who have committed to me the duty and the honor.

I wish that the public would understand that they have been misled in their judgment as to the Senate. There are many Members who would appear to the spectators as not fitted to the work of the floor, such as debate or oratory. But let it be known that these men have special qualities which fit business and agriculture to such high degree that they are sent here because of their excellence in that specialty.

I beseech you to also contemplate that the position of United States Senator is the highest honor that can be conferred by any State to any man, and oftentimes is an honor which in the hands of capable men becomes greater and more powerful than that of the Presidency of the United States. You will readily see from that that no State would let a useless, worthless, and incompetent man achieve such place. There are too many rivals, too many seeking the honor. This fact is to indicate to you that any man of any politics who is a Member of this body has a special quality of fitness and superiority which you need but investigate to discover—and then to be assured, that he serves the place with compensation to his public and with honor to himself.

Senator JOSEPH TAYLOR ROBINSON was one of these. He came from a State that had since its foundation attached great importance to the manner of man and character that is granted the honor of United States Senator. Apart from that era when—following the Civil War, certain States were unhappily afflicted by situations that produced officials that no body of human beings of noble standards and Christian emotions could justify—there was no exception to the standard adopted by Arkansas in the nature of men she sent to this very high honor.

I first knew Senator ROBINSON when we were Members of the House of Representatives. I then rejoined him in the United States Senate when I came for the first time to the Senate through the national election of 1912 and he came from the Governorship of Arkansas. A personal relation sprung forth and has remained, despite many differences of abstract politics. Let it be remembered that in Congress I represented first the State of Washington in the far Northwest of the Pacific coast as Congressman at Large. In its interests naturally there was often opposition to the interest demanded by the Midwest and Southern States. Later, coming, as I did, as Senator from the State of Illinois, I found myself equally at variance with opinions of my honorable colleague of Arkansas, and the neighboring States. These differences brought us from time to time in contact, but such only revealed the personal character of friendship, tolerance, and patience—then of forgiveness that necessarily attends successful, at least honorable, statesmanship.

In the controversies in the United States Senate there is always necessary an organization that shall settle on two things. First, what shall be the program of procedure under the general parliamentary law of assembly and debate. The second is some representative distinctively speaking for the measures of the administration in power. It is assumed that the President, elected by the votes of the people, has a right to present what he understands are the issues upon which the people chose him. He, for this privilege, has the right to command of his Congress—as they were elected on the same issues and on the same platform principles—that they ally and cooperate with him in carrying out these principles and the measures that execute them. Thus it is we speak of "administration measures."

I pause a second to recall to the countrymen that now and then the whimsical expression of "rubber stamp" of those who be the President's followers is indulged in some spirit of jest or general condemnation, but let it be remembered that the "rubber stamp" is not in compliance with the President, but in compliance with the people who elected the Congressmen, the Senators, and the President. If this were not true, one could see that it would not matter how much an election reverses the policy of a previous administration; it would be of no value to the public if the representative would, as to legislation, continue defeating the President in his legislation. Then soon would follow the revolt, and we would have in our own country the repetition of what brought on the revolution of England between the leadership of Cromwell on behalf of the people and that of the King, Charles I, and his Parliament; and then in the second era, the controversy between Parliament and Cromwell. This could be constantly repeated. Our people saw that it was repeated as against President Wilson, the Democrat, in his second administration, and against Hoover, the Republican, in his administration. Therefore, to guide the measures, someone is chosen who speaks what the committee on management has decided some hours before should be the program. This particular director is called the "leader." As he is supposed to lead the measure to its consideration, aided by those who are his chosen assistants, and who, being chosen by the whole body in caucus, become equally the voice of the administration on the measure as is their leader. "Statesmanship," says Joubert, "is the art of leading the masses, or the majority." "Its glory", says he, "is to lead them, not where they want to go, but where they ought to go."

It was such a leader we have in Senator ROBINSON, of whom we now speak. It is as to him we may say—a great tree has fallen; the forest echoes the wail from its branches.

This United States Senate of the phalanx designated by the term "the democracy" was captained by the command of the American citizen from Arkansas—JOSEPH TAYLOR ROBINSON. His command was inheritance of his character as one approved in honor, and as a citizen established in deeds of service. This manifested to his own beloved at his side and to his national countrymen. As a lawyer, he was learned in the rights of man. As legislator, he was devoted to the prescriptions of the State that ordained equality and righteousness to men.

As Senator, he was the fixed and constant student of the endurances of nature and the experiences of statesmen. From the test of Senator to leadership of parliamentary tactics was the true growth and fruit of his merit. Ever forceful, constantly aggressive, truly devoted, he never compromised the principles to which he directed his efforts. Here let it be remembered that in the opposition, whether it be called Republican, or as now, in some friction or fracture in one's own party, the very best brains expressed in debate the most exalted talents in encounter—the noble intellect that comes from the State, the Senators speaking the best thought of their home people. This is the combination that must be met by the leader and his aides. It was a leader in statesmanship that Mr. ROBINSON was—gentle in friendship, serving in the call of the need, and successful in the combat for achievement of sublime purposes. He was from time to time chosen by Presidents of the United States of each party to attend the uses of parliamentary and economic sittings in the lands of Europe and Asia. In these distinctions he earned for himself the approval of that circle of officials represented in the distant lands. From that city of the assembly he bestowed to his country praise for service and renown for statesmanship. Hospitable in manner, generous in opposition, charitable in judgment, he won the tender sentiment of women and the secure friendship of men.

Chosen term after term by his own people of his historic State as Senator, he became illustrious as first citizen of Arkansas and the pride of southern statesmen. As official he led the Senate to the high purposes of constitutional government, and like Buckingham, of the English regime, "a statesman first to his country" and "a gentleman to his peers." As nominee for Vice President of the United States on the Democratic ticket he gave to the Nation on his speaking tour the signal oratory that labeled him of the old school—of Clay, of Kentucky; the Calhoun, of South Carolina; and the John W. Daniel, of Virginia. As such, orators and statesmen, the West and North received him to their welcome as one who gave generous measure to their rights and reward to their virtues. As such now the worthy leader statesman became the confidant of Presidents, the counselor of the Cabinets, and the guide of the Senate. In all, he preserved the true basis of public honor and private duty. To all he gave the salute of a friend, and to State and Nation ever he presented the symbol of statesmanship in its highest level. He ever kept before him that his guide for performance and standard of life personally and politically was God and country.

To JOSEPH TAYLOR ROBINSON, who today slipped against the obstruction of death and fell into the arms of eternity, we salute in the greeting of Horatio to Hamlet: "Good night, sweet prince, and flights of angels sing thee to thy rest."

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief statement. It is generally agreed that we will attempt to transact no business today; that the Senate will adjourn until noon on Thursday, and that then, after the morning hour, the veto message of the President on the farm interest rate will be taken up and disposed of. Beyond that, I am not prepared to make any announcement.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection to the proposal made by the Senator from Kentucky. However, is it the purpose on Thursday to go forward with the Court measure or to proceed with the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think it is likely that after disposition of the veto message the Senate will proceed to the consideration of bills on the calendar. I am not prepared at this time to say definitely, but that is very likely to happen.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator means unobjected bills on the calendar?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. May I submit a parliamentary inquiry?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McNARY. Does the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] have the floor under the order which was made?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He would not have it until 2 o'clock, the Chair is advised by the Parliamentarian.

Mr. McNARY. Very well.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am willing to yield if any Senator desires to introduce a bill, or for business of that sort.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator want to have the regular morning business proceeded with?

ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. I think we had better not do that; and that we had better abide by our understanding. Therefore I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon on Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, July 22, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JULY 20, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Unto Thee, O God, do we give thanks; yea, unto Thee do we give thanks; righteous art Thou and true is Thy judgment. Teach us the way of Thy statutes and give us understanding, and may our delight be in Thy commandments. As servants and representatives of a great people, may we draw near to Thee for wisdom and fresh inspiration. Humble and grateful we are, yet wondering, we pray, that we may be very sure of our faith in Thee and in ourselves. Today give us the accent of valor, faith, and independence in our deliberations. Persuade us, our Father, of Thy divine tenderness and goodness. When problems press, when labor seems hard, help us to be calm and confident and not forget that Thou art ever near. Through Christ, our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

The Clerk read as follows:

"SEC. 3. This resolution shall be effective as of August 1, 1937."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendments to the resolution.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution as amended.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to address the House for 25 minutes on tomorrow after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, after the disposition of Calendar Wednesday business, and following the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN], who, I understand, has 25 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Friday next, after all legislative business is concluded, I may address the House for a period of 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

REORGANIZATION OF THE JUDICIARY

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I have placed on the Speaker's desk a petition—No. 9—to discharge the Judiciary Committee from further consideration of H. R. 4417, a bill to regulate the Supreme and other Federal courts. I would like for the Members who favor the President's Court plan to please sign the petition. It is my opinion that if the said measure would be enacted into law the common people of our country would be greatly benefited.

[Here the gavel fell.]

RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES OF THE GOVERNMENT

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of the House to the Treasury statement of July 14, showing that the receipts for the 14 days of this year to this time are $208,722,786 and the expenditures $402,878,666, or a deficit of $194,155,880. The principal thing I want to call to the attention of the Members is this fact: That we have now gone in the red this year over that of last year in the amount of $94,321,107. You are talking economy, and if you watch the Treasury statements daily you can see where we are putting any economy into Government, then there is something wrong between the thought you have in mind and what the Treasury statements disclose. I ask you to pay attention to them. Your increased daily expenditures this year so far has increased $6,737,000 a day over the expenditures of a year ago. You talk of a balanced Budget; you state you are for economy. You can see what you are doing. According to the Treasury statement, you are doing just the opposite. You are fooling the American people, or at least trying to do so. Why continue this policy until you wreck this Nation financially? I claim this administration is not financially sound, it never was, and I question if it ever will be. I hope, however, that you will see what it means to our Nation, that you will stop your ruthless expenditures, that you will cut out useless bureaus, consolidate departments, as you have promised the American people you would do. Our national debt is over $36,597,525,791. It cannot go much higher without serious results to our Nation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. O'BRIEN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. This is the day set apart for the consideration of private omnibus claims bills. The Chair will state that the first bill on the calendar is the omnibus immigration bill.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I think I propounded a parliamentary inquiry on the last Tuesday when the private omnibus bills were on the calendar, and I want to repeat it for the assurance of Members who have items in the omnibus bills on this calendar. I think the Chair ruled that if I let the Claims Committee come in with other bills I would not lose my rights on the immigration bills.

The SPEAKER. The Chair ruled upon the gentleman's parliamentary inquiry that he lost no rights on the calendar on last Tuesday. Does the gentleman now waive the right to call up the omnibus immigration bill?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I waive the right for today to call up that bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will be passed over.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Obviously a quorum is not present.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

COMMITTEE ON RIVERS AND HARBORS

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, I ask unanimous consent that that committee may be permitted to hold hearings the rest of the week during sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the first omnibus bill on the Private Calendar.

The Clerk called the first omnibus bill of the Private Calendar, H. R. 6336, for the relief of sundry claimants, and for other purposes.

GUIDEO BISCARO, ET AL.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.—

Title I—(H. R. 886. For the relief of Guideo Biscaro, Giovanni Polin, Spironello Antonio, Arturo Bettio, Carlo Biscaro, and Antonio Vannin.) By Mr. BEITER

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Guideo Biscaro, Giovanni Polin, Spironello Antonio, Arturo Bettio, Carlo Biscaro, and Antonio Vannin the sum of $3,500, being the amount of the bond deposited with the United States Immigration Service guaranteeing the presence in court of Virginia Nasato, Melchiore Miotto, Silvio Polin, Augustino Del Bianco, Daniel Biscaro, Augustin Taveron, and Emilio Miotto, and later forfeited because of failure of the bondsmen to produce the aliens in court for deportation proceedings.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 11, strike out the word "being" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "in full settlement of all claims against the United States for the refund of."

Page 2, line 8, after the word "proceedings", add the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of New York: Page 1, line 3, strike out all of title I.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, title I of this bill is an attempt to reimburse seven individuals for losses they sustained when bail bonds were forfeited in the deportation cases of seven aliens 12 years ago.

These losses came about, I am satisfied from reading the report, through the misconduct, negligence, or ignorance of the attorney employed by these individuals. The facts are these: In 1924 seven aliens of Italian ancestry entered this country illegally through Canada. They paid no head tax, they submitted themselves to no inspection, they had no visas, and they were not charged against the quota of their nationality. They were apprehended about a year later and released under bond of $500 each. These bonds were supplied by an attorney named Corti. With each bond he deposited $500 of Liberty bonds as collateral. Hearings were held and the men were ordered deported. The bondsman was ordered to deliver the aliens at a certain time and place for deportation. He failed to do so. In fact, he failed to do anything; he made no effort to obtain an extension of time, and I doubt whether he even notified the aliens to appear at the time and place designated. The bonds were forfeited, the collateral was forwarded to Washington, and the proceeds covered into the Treasury. Subsequently the aliens were apprehended by immigration officers and deported.

It now appears that each of the seven claimants in this bill supplied $500 of Liberty bonds to their attorney for deposit as collateral when the bail bonds were given, but the Government was no party to those transactions, and the Government had no knowledge that the bonds belonged to anyone except the bondsman who deposited them. The Federal Government never had any dealings of any kind with the claimants in the pending bill.

The sole question here is whether we should reimburse these individuals for their lost collateral. You cannot say anything more in their behalf than that their losses were sustained through the incompetence, the neglect, or the malpractice of the attorney selected by them and employed by them. The claimants apparently have a grievance against their own attorney, but none against the Federal agents. As far as the Government is concerned, its agents have proceeded exactly in accordance with the law. There was no misconduct on the part of the immigration authorities. They performed their duty as we expect them to do it, and they are entitled to our support.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Were there any extenuating circumstances on the part of the seven aliens to show that they were in no way to blame for the nonappearance of these aliens they bonded?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. That does not appear definitely in the report, but it is indicated that the attorney who was also the bondsman failed to notify them. If there was any misconduct any place it was on the part of the bondsman. The question now is whether we are to reimburse these claimants because of his neglect. The immigration authorities complied with the law. The procedure took its regular course.

Mr. DONDERO. Were these seven men innocent of any wrongdoing on their own part outside of coming into the country illegally?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. So far as I know, they were.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is it not a fact that these seven aliens came into this country illegally in the first place?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. That is undisputed.

Mr. CRAWFORD. They put up a bond through Mr. Corti?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. That is right.

Mr. CRAWFORD. When the question of their deportation came up they failed to show up?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. That is right.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And the $3,500 was forfeited to the Department of Labor in accordance with the law?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is it not also true if we go ahead and permit the refund of $3,500 to these people we invite aliens to come into this country illegally and invite them to come in any way they can?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. If we pass bills of this character there is very little reason for ever demanding security when an alien held on deportation charges is released. Just go ahead and release him and let the immigration authorities find him again if they can.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The purpose of the bill is to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the beneficiaries named in the bill the sum of $3,500, which represents the amount of the bonds posted by the beneficiaries guaranteeing the presence in court of Virginia Nasato, Melchiore Miotto, Silvio Polin, Augustino Del Bianco, Daniel Biscaro, Augustin Taveron, and Emilio Miotto.

The aliens were taken into custody at Akron, N. Y., in the month of August 1925. The amount of a bond required for each alien was $500. The beneficiaries in the bill posted Liberty bonds valued at $500 each, which are described in the receipts of the district director of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, dated August 29, 1925, the receipts having been made on Form 553A–1 of the Immigration and Naturalization Service. The receipts show that the bonds were received from Frank A. Corti, attorney for the beneficiaries of the bill, but on the reverse side of each Corti certified that the bonds were received from the individuals named as beneficiaries in the bill.

The bonds were to be returned to those who posted them by the Immigration and Naturalization Service upon the appearance of the aliens at the immigration office for deportation. All the aliens, with the exception of one, was deported, the excepted one having been in the country illegally and having since proceeded toward citizenship. However, the bond posted for the latter is also forthcoming. The attorney engaged by the bondsmen to represent them failed to notify them of the appearance of the aliens, and therefore they failed to call at the immigration office on the appointed date. The following day they were taken into custody by authorities of the Immigration and Naturalization Service from Black Rock.

Payment of the bonds has been withheld for approximately 12 years, and it has inflicted great hardships on the bondsmen, some of whom were obliged to seek aid from the welfare authorities.

Proof that the aliens and bondsmen were not notified by their legal counsel to appear at the immigration office at the appointed time is on file with the committee in the form of sworn statements from the employers of the aliens to the effect that they were at work at the time they should have appeared at the immigration office. These statements were made by members of the Beaver Products Co. and the Universal Gypsum & Lime Co., of Buffalo, in which firms the aliens were employed.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEITER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. That particular endorsement was a memorandum put on there by the attorney himself. There is no evidence to the effect that that was brought to the attention of the immigration officials.

Mr. BEITER. The evidence has been subsequently submitted to the committee in affidavit form.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. The immigration officials had no knowledge of these bonds belonging to anyone other than the men who deposited them. The attorney for the Labor Department suggests that the Labor Department had no knowledge that these belonged to anyone except the people themselves.

Mr. BEITER. The bonds were endorsed by the attorney.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. That is true; but not by these claimants.

Mr. BEITER. The bonds were to be returned to those who posted them.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEITER. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Are these seven aliens in the country today?

Mr. BEITER. No. Six of the aliens have been deported, and one has become a citizen. The injustice of the whole matter is that the men who posted the bonds are the innocent sufferers, because the attorney failed to notify them. We have affidavits to the effect that on the following day deportation agents went to the plant where the aliens were employed and apprehended them. The authorities took these aliens into custody and deported them.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Were they immediately deported?

Mr. BEITER. You may say the only redress is through the attorney, but the attorney in this town has done nothing and will do nothing in the matter. They cannot get anything from him. It does not cost the Federal Government one penny to return these bonds. In many cases the men who posted the bonds are now on the relief rolls and could be immediately taken from the relief rolls and would be able to use this money. There would be a saving to the Federal Government. As I stated, it does not cost the Federal Government one single penny. I am only asking the return of this money to the rightful owners.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. The gentleman states it does not cost the Federal Government a penny.

Mr. BEITER. Yes.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. The proceeds of these bonds were covered into the Treasury 12 years ago and we are now asked to appropriate $3,500.

Mr. BEITER. The money belonged to these bondsmen. What right has the Government to spend this money?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Why, the bonds were properly forfeited. There was nothing irregular in the Immigration Department. They simply pursued the regular course.

Mr. BEITER. I grant that, but understand that on the following day they came to the plant and arrested these men.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. It was necessary for the immigration officials to go out and apprehend them.

Mr. BEITER. That is true. The bondsmen did not produce the aliens, but the reason the bondsmen did not produce the aliens was because the attorney failed to notify them that the Government had commanded their appearance in court. Had they any intention of trying to evade deportation proceedings or skip out of the country they certainly would not have been working there at the plant where they were apprehended.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. These claimants have their remedy against the attorney.

Mr. BEITER. I grant that, if the attorney had anything to seize, but the attorney has no assets.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEITER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. What can the gentleman say to the House as to the illegal entry of these seven men into the United States?

Mr. BEITER. It is true the men entered illegally without proper visas and without paying the proper head tax. I am not arguing that. I am arguing for the men who posted the bonds for the appearance of these aliens, who are the real sufferers. Six of the aliens have been deported and the other one has become a citizen.

Mr. KERR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEITER. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. KERR. There was no fraud on the part of these aliens in not answering the mandate of the court?

Mr. BEITER. No.

Mr. KERR. It was simply a mistake on their part.

Mr. BEITER. That is true, although it could not exactly be described as a mistake; rather it was a case of ignorance, since they knew nothing of the deportation order.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute in order to answer a question.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule covering the consideration of these bills, 5 minutes on each side is the limit for debate.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the Chair cannot entertain that motion.

The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HANCOCK of New York) there were—ayes 48, noes 77.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ninety-nine Members are present, not a quorum.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 141, nays 159, answered "present" 1, not voting 130, as follows:

Title II—(H. R. 1025. To confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of the Italian Star Line, Inc., against the United States.) By Mr. DELANEY

That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon, notwithstanding the lapse of time or any provision of law to the contrary, the claims of the Italian Star Line, Inc., (1) for damages arising from breach of a charter sales agreement for the purchase of a steamship (Liberty Land) entered into on April 26, 1920, between said corporation and the United States (acting through the United States Shipping Board and the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation), and (2) as if the United States were sueable in tort, for damages for abuse of process, malicious prosecution, and unlawful appointment of a receiver (based on the prosecution of receivership proceedings against the Italian Star Line, Inc., begun in the United States District Court, Southern District of New York, in December 1920, and a criminal prosecution of said corporation for conspiracy to defraud the United States, begun in the said district court in February 1921). The Court of Claims shall not have jurisdiction under this act unless the said corporation files a petition setting forth their claims for such damages in such court within after the date of exactment of this act. The Court of Claims shall hear, determine, and render judgment on such claims without prejudice by reason of the failure of the claimant to receive redress in respect of such claims in court actions heretofore instituted by such claimant. The Court of Claims shall, if it render judgment for the claimant, allow interest on the amount of damages found, at the rate prescribed by law at the time of such allowance in cases of judgment against the United States from the time such damages were sustained until the judgment is paid. Review of such judgment may be had by either party in the same manner as is provided by law in other causes in such court.

SEC. 2. There is authorized to be appropriated such sum as may be necessary to pay the amount of any judgment rendered and interest allowed pursuant to this act. The amount of such judgment and the interest allowed shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury upon presentation of a duly authenticated copy of the judgment of the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendments: Page 3, line 2, beginning with the "(1)" strike out the rest of line 2 and all down to and including line 15 and insert the following: "for loss or damage to said Italian Star Line, Inc., arising out of the negotiations, transactions, and litigation, both criminal and civil, had with the United States, the United States Shipping Board, and the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, concerning the steamship Liberty Land, including amounts paid to the United States, the United States Shipping Board, and the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation for the steamship Liberty Land, and other assets including goodwill: Provided, however, That the Court of Claims shall not consider prospective profits and losses in proceedings or actions had under this act."

Page 4, line 6, after the word "within", insert "1 year."

Page 4, line 11, after the word "claimant", strike out the remainder of the bill.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: Page 2, beginning in line 17, strike out all of title II.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, the amendment which I have offered would strike from this omnibus bill all of title II.

This bill is for the benefit of the Italian Star Line, Inc., which is a shipping company organized in 1919 to engage in the merchant shipping business. The company entered into a contract with the United States Shipping Board on April 26, 1920, to purchase the ship Liberty Land, a vessel of 7,800 deadweight tons. The purchase price was approximately $1,500,000, to be paid on a 10-year deferred-payment basis. The contract was the standard contract used in all such cases.

The vessel was delivered on April 28, 1920, and the first monthly charter-hire payment was made, amounting to $39,125. In addition, a down payment of $41,920 was made, as were also the two payments for May and June of $39,125.

The company was not financially successful. It met with difficulties from the start and every operation was unprofitable. The company entered into negotiations with the Shipping Board to try to reduce the terms of its contract, which the Shipping Board failed to do, insisting upon the payment of the full price. As a result of three voyages, the total loss on operations to the company was $129,781.93. Of this amount, the company owed the Shipping Board $114,863.76. The company had $60,000 cash on hand, but refused to pay any of this money to the Shipping Board. However, the directors then did declare a dividend to their stockholders.

At that time the stockholders brought a suit to appoint a receiver. One of the stockholders attached $30,000 of the company's funds. On December 6 the Shipping Board came in and brought suit to have a receiver appointed. With the consent of the attorney for the company, a receiver was appointed.

This bill would authorize the company to go to the Court of Claims and sue for damages. I call the attention of the House to the fact that in 1930 at least two, if not three, suits were brought in the Court of Claims against the Government. In one case a judgment of $104,000 was won, but on a motion to dismiss that action, because the jury finding was not in keeping with the facts, the court did dismiss the action. In each case the shipping company has had the action dismissed on motion. Now, you are asked to allow them to go back to the Court of Claims, first, to sue for damages arising from a breach of the contract to purchase, a breach, mind you, alleged to be by the Shipping Board, when it was clearly shown by the books of the company that the company itself was financially unable to carry out the terms of its original contract, due to bad shipping conditions in the country; and, secondly, to seek to collect damages for abuse of process, malicious prosecution, and the unlawful appointment of a receiver.

I call to your attention the fact that 3 days before the Shipping Board sued, the stockholders had brought an action for the appointment of a receiver; one stockholder had attached the funds of the company. It was not until 3 days later that the Shipping Board, to protect its own rights, came in and demanded the appointment of a receiver. At the time the receiver was asked for, the company was actually indebted to the United States Shipping Board in the sum of $114,000. There is a statement in the committee report, on page 8, which would indicate that the company had some very large assets on hand. However, if you will notice, one of these assets consists of cargo contracts unexecuted, for which a value of $120,000 is shown, and another asset is goodwill, $153,000. This was a company organized solely for the purchase of a Government ship, and the operations of the company had all been at a loss. How they could compute goodwill at $153,000, I do not know.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Members vote "yea" on this amendment to strike out the title.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DELANEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from California.

As the gentleman from California has stated, this line was incorporated in 1919 for the purpose of encouraging the merchant marine. The company was formed under the laws of Delaware. At that time there were about 4,000 stockholders, all of whom were poor Italians, who each subscribed in good faith to a certain amount of the stock of this company.

This matter goes back to the time when the Shipping Board was more or less controlled by a combination, because, as the report clearly shows, after the investigation of charges against the admiralty counsel his brother-in-law was removed as attorney for the receivers in all of the steamship company cases and the admiralty counsel was removed from his office. Furthermore, the trial of this matter lasted for 9 days. The jury deliberated for a few hours, giving a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $105,000. On the 31st day of March Judge Cox set the jury's verdict aside and dismissed the complaint.

This is simply a matter of permitting these people in good faith to go into the court and have their case adjudicated by the Court of Claims. This is not an appropriation nor an authorization, but simply permission to go into court and present their case and have the court decide what the equities are and have the matter finally decided.

The bill has been amended by the Claims Committee and apparently has met with the approval of the Claims Committee, because they voted it out unanimously. I believe the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] again appeared before the committee and presented his side of the case and also his objection to allowing them to go to the Court of Claims. I am informed that after hearing his objections the Claims Committee again decided to report the bill unanimously.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that all these people want is simple justice in being allowed to go into court and present their case, the motion should be voted down.

As the chairman of the Claims Committee has indicated in his report, this is purely a jurisdictional matter. It is a matter of giving them an opportunity to be heard and giving them what we believe is only justice. As I have said, the objections of the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] were again overruled by the Claims Committee, and a vote of "yes" on this motion will mean you are denying these people the right to go into court and have these claims adjusted or adjudicated, while a vote of "no" means that we are willing to give these people an opportunity to go into court and have their case heard, and we will rest upon their decision.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DELANEY. I yield.

Mr. REES of Kansas. If a judgment is rendered in their favor, however, who will pay the judgment?

Mr. DELANEY. Who will pay the judgment?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Yes; if the court decides that a judgment should be allowed?

Mr. DELANEY. This money has already been paid into the United States Government, and because of the fact that there was so much dispute about the matter at the time—in other words, a sort of combination in the Shipping Board of people associated with the Board who allowed their brothers-in-law or their relatives to become involved in the matter and be appointed receivers through influence exerted at that time—this simply involves money paid to the United States Government, and the Court of Claims is going to decide whether or not the United States Government is justified in returning this money or not.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Will it not take further legislation, then, to turn the money over to them?

Mr. DELANEY. I do not believe the gentleman would want to have the Government owe anybody a just amount of money without paying it. The Court of Claims will decide on the merits of the case; and if they find for the plaintiffs, the Treasury will be ordered to pay the amount decided upon.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] to strike out the title.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COSTELLO) there were—ayes 56, noes 57.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 120, nays 186, not voting 125, as follows:

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. O'CONNOR of New York). The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: Page 5, strike out all of title III.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, this bill would authorize the payment of $5,000 to Ellen Kline because of the death of her husband Lewis R. Kline, who was killed, as alleged here in the bill, through the negligence of the Reclamation Service. The Reclamation Service in El Paso, Tex., purchased from the El Paso Headlight Co. acetylene gas in these small acetylene tanks. When the tanks were empty, Mr. Kline, who was the owner of the El Paso Headlight Co., would call at the office of the Reclamation Service and collect the tanks and take them back to his company for refilling. On July 1, 1918, Mr. Kline and his son called to pick up empty tanks. As I recall, two tanks were taken on this occasion and placed on the truck and returned to the company. It appeared to be a rather hot day.

There is some doubt as to the testimony in this one particular. It is not clear whether the empty tanks when stored at the Reclamation Service were stored in the sun or were transported in the truck in the sun or whether on their arrival at El Paso Headlight Co.'s plant, were left out in the sun. At any rate, the tanks became quite heated, which caused an expansion of the gas, and on the opening of one tank for the purpose of draining off what little gas there might be remaining, the tank exploded, and that explosion caused the death of Mr. Kline. The question is raised whether the tank was full or empty. Claimants contend this tank was full at the time it was taken away from the Reclamation Service. However, there is testimony that shows that the tanks were tested by Mr. Kline before they were placed on the truck, and there was only a small quantity of gas in each of these two tanks.

That is one of the items of dispute. The Department of the Interior takes the position that there is no responsibility on their part, alleging that Mr. Kline should have used due caution and care in handling the tanks, and that in view of the fact they were tested at the Reclamation office before they were taken away, he was, therefore, put upon his guard as to any subsequent handling of those tanks. It is my personal opinion that the tanks were not full at the time, that if they were full it would have been indicated at the test when it was made at the Reclamation office.

One other point I wish to bring out in this connection is that this accident took place in July 1918. Nothing was done about this until 1927. In that year a bill was presented to Congress and then for the first time an affidavit was prepared supporting this claim, but nothing was done upon it during the 9 years previous.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. What bearing would it have on the issue whether the tanks were full or partially full or empty?

Mr. COSTELLO. The amount of gas in the tank would determine to some extent the amount of pressure. The more gas the greater the pressure.

When this tank did expand there was a terrific explosion and the tank itself hit the ceiling of the storeroom in which it was placed.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I understand this accident occurred in 1918.

Mr. COSTELLO. That is correct.

Mr. REES of Kansas. And nothing was done until 1927?

Mr. COSTELLO. That is correct.

Mr. REES of Kansas. At that time did the matter come before the Claims Committee, or what was done at that time?

Mr. COSTELLO. The matter was presented by a bill in the Seventieth Congress for the first time.

Mr. REES of Kansas. And that committee turned it down; is that true?

Mr. COSTELLO. I do not know the legislative history of it from the Seventieth Congress on, but it has been before Congress subsequent to that time.

Mr. REES of Kansas. And now, 10 years later, it comes up for further consideration; is that correct?

Mr. COSTELLO. That is correct. It has been before the Congress, I believe, during that time.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the reason given here for the nonpresentation was that the claimants were told they could not sue the Government and they did not know there was such a right?

Mr. COSTELLO. But nothing was done to present it to the Congress for a 10-year period.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] has expired.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, it is my candid opinion that there has been no more meritorious bill from the Claims Committee, certainly for a long time at least, than this one. I may be a little biased, because I knew Mr. Kline and I know this widow and her fine son. If the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] has no better argument against this bill than the fact that this claimant with her little boy, who was then 12 or 14 years old, did not know they had a valid claim against the Government and therefore did not present it until my predecessor, Mr. Hudspeth, presented it 10 years ago, then I think you will have no trouble in voting down his amendment.

I happen to know something about the facts in this case. Mr. Kline was the owner and operator of the El Paso Headlight Co., which manufactured this acetylene gas and placed it in these tanks that are described in the report. The United States Reclamation Service was one of its largest customers. The custom for a long time had been that Mr. Kline would deliver the filled tanks to the warehouse of the Reclamation Service, and when a tank was used that tank was placed at the west end of the warehouse, exposed to the sun, and then Mr. Kline would be notified when the tanks were to be refilled, and he and his son, whose testimony is in the report, would go there on their truck and get the empties.

Acetylene gas, as the testimony shows by the statement of the Bureau of Mines, is a very dangerous and explosive gas. This happened on the 1st day of July. When those tanks were full they would put wet sacks and things of that sort on the tanks and keep them in the shade in order to prevent any possible explosion. Then when the tanks were used they would be placed near the west end of this shed, exposed to the sun. So on this particular day Mr. Kline and this boy went there to the place where they were accustomed to go to get empties. They put the empties, or what they thought were empties, on the truck, and took them back to their plant to have them refilled. The testimony will show conclusively, if you will read this report, that either by mistake or negligence—and that is the unanimous report of this committee, "either by mistake or negligence"—the servants and agents of the Reclamation Service got a filled tank over there among the empties. That is the tank that he took back to his plant. When he got back there he started to test that tank, and I can best explain what happened by this:

> After unloading all of the drums, they were taken into the building which housed the factory, and my father began opening all drums to allow the remaining gas to escape. During this process, he came to the one that was to explode a few seconds later. On opening the valve, he found a terrific outflow of gas, so he closed the valve immediately, which was only a natural course for anyone to follow when finding a full drum. In closing the valve the terrific flow of gas was stemmed. Now, according to a verbal statement given my mother by a representative of the Bureau of Standards, who made a special trip to El Paso to investigate the accident, the explosion took place in the following manner—which he described, and to which I invite your attention, but which I do not have the time to read. Nevertheless, it wrecked the building and literally blew Mr. Kline to pieces, and that tank landed down in the next block.

So that widow went to work. She did not know she had a claim against the Government. This bill has been reported out frequently by this committee, and I think every time it has been reported out by a unanimous report.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. MAY. As a matter of fact, that tank is what is known in the law as a dangerous instrumentality?

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Of course it was; and nobody knew it as well as the representatives of the Reclamation Service, where they kept these tanks stored. Both law and equity are on the side of this good woman. She ought to have been paid years ago. She is no longer a young woman, and she needs the money. I do not ask for charity, but I plead for justice. Her son is one of the fine young men of my city. Both are my good friends. I have an abiding faith that the Members of the House will do the right thing and pass this bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot recognize the gentleman to make that motion. Under the rule for the consideration of omnibus bills on the Private Calendar, the only amendments in order are "to strike out or reduce amounts of money stated or to provide limitations." A proforma amendment is therefore not in order.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California to strike out the title.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, line 9, strike out "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$4,999.99."

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, the law does not care for small things. I do not think Congress ought to take up time legislating on one penny. I submit that this is too small a matter to be considered by the House at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair must hold that under the spirit of the rule for the consideration of omnibus private bills, such an amendment, which is in effect a proforma amendment, is not in order, and in addition thereto, the amendment offered is an amendment to an amendment already adopted, and therefore not in order.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, may I be heard on the point of order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Under the rule that has been enunciated with respect to omnibus bills, the only way a Member can get recognition is to move either to strike out the title or reduce the amount. I think the amendment, therefore, follows the spirit of the rule.

As for the amount, 1 cent, the amendment was offered for the purpose of gaining recognition, because the Chair will not recognize anybody under a pro-forma amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair might state that the spirit of the rule is to dispense with anything which resembles a pro-forma amendment. Furthermore, the gentleman offers an amendment to an amendment already adopted.

The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Would the Chair care to rule whether an amendment reducing the amount by $1 would be within the spirit of the rule?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That question is not involved in the gentleman's amendment. The gentleman practically disclosed that his amendment was offered purely as a pro-forma amendment, which amendment is not within the rule for the consideration of omnibus private claims bills.

The Clerk will read the next title.

BRUCE BROS. GRAIN CO.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title IV—(H. R. 1758. For the relief of Bruce Bros. Grain Co.)
By Mr. DUNCAN

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $279.90 to the Bruce Bros. Grain Co. in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States to cover loss sustained by said company on a car of wheat, car no. 96110, Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, shipped from St. Joseph, Mo., July 15, 1921, to Minneapolis, Minn.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of New York: On page 6, strike out all of title IV.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, it must be apparent by this time that we are considering a series of very ancient claims which have been revived under the omnibus bill practice. The first claim that was allowed today was to reimburse a bondsman for loss occasioned on forfeited bonds in 1925. The second case was to allow a group of speculators in Brooklyn to go into court after they had already been there five or six times, and been defeated every time, on a claim that arose in 1920. We just passed a claim which arose in 1918 where a man was killed working on his own equipment in his own back yard.

This fourth title, I think, is even more grotesque. In 1921 a concern in Missouri sold a carload of wheat to a buyer in Minneapolis. The contract provided for the delivery of hard winter wheat. The inspector in Missouri found that the sample submitted was hard winter wheat; but the seller, in order to protect himself further, had the Government inspector also examine this wheat. He, too, found it was hard winter wheat. The Government inspector was a very cautious man and wished to keep his own skirts clean, so he asked the Government board of review in Chicago to examine the same specimen. They found that it was hard yellow wheat. The board of review in Chicago notified the buyer that it was hard yellow and also notified the seller. In the meantime the wheat was shipped to Minneapolis. The purchaser declined to accept it because what he wanted was hard winter wheat. Now, the company which sold the wheat comes here asking us to pay the difference between the price of hard yellow wheat and hard winter. The shipment was sold in the open market at the current prices of hard yellow in Minneapolis. The claimant wants us to pay for a grade of wheat which he did not have to deliver. He does not ask the purchaser to pay it; he asks the taxpayers of the United States to pay it. It is not now claimed that the findings of the board of review were incorrect or that the wheat in question was anything other than hard yellow wheat. The claimant was disappointed by that finding, and we are asked to compensate him. If there is any merit in the claim, I would like to have someone explain it.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion.

Mr. Speaker, the Claims Committee considered this bill and has considered it in previous sessions. During each of those sessions it was reported out by the Claims Committee. It was passed in an omnibus claims bill in the Seventy-fourth Congress, too late, however, to go through the Senate. This bill has been pending before the Claims Committee continuously and it is not due to any lack of diligence on the part of Bruce Bros. Co. that the bill has not finally become a law.

This is a meritorious case, in the opinion of the Claims Committee. I am speaking in its behalf because of the absence of the author of the bill, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DUNCAN], who is, unfortunately, detained in St. Joseph, Mo., at this time.

It seems that Bruce Bros. Grain Co., of St. Joseph, Mo., made a contract to sell a carload of wheat to a purchaser in Minneapolis, Minn., and the contract provided that it was to be no. 2 hard winter wheat. It was inspected by the State grain inspector, it was inspected by the Federal supervisor, both of whom found that it was no. 2 hard winter wheat.

Now, without any application on the part of the shipper whatever, the board of review in Chicago inspecting a small sample of the grain found it was no. 2 yellow hard winter wheat; consequently, when this carload of wheat reached the shipper in Minneapolis, the shipper refused to accept it on the ground that it was not as represented. The original claimant, the Bruce Bros. Grain Co., made this contract only after the grain had been found to be no. 2 hard winter wheat.

The Department of Agriculture, speaking through its Secretary, Henry Wallace, said:

It is the duty of the board of review to issue appeal grade certificates in the event interested party calls a board appeal from inspections performed by licensed inspectors and district supervisors, but in the present case no such board appeal was called.

This is the only time this has occurred, and this new finding by the Chicago board of appeal was requested by the shipper; consequently the contract could not be carried out, but such contract failure was through no fault of the shipper whatsoever.

Mr. Wallace also said:

It would seem that the second appeal grade certificate was issued without regard to the regulations, and under the circumstances should not have been issued at the late date of July 23. This was the first case of this kind which arose in the administration of the act, and as soon as the matter was brought to our attention steps were immediately taken to prevent a recurrence of the situation.

The shipper was compelled to sell this wheat at the current market price at point of arrival, which was Minneapolis, and sustained a loss of $279.90, for which recovery is sought through the medium of this bill. This damage was done by an agency of the Government. It was contrary to law and contrary to regulations, and, in the opinion of the Claims Committee, it seems the Government should respond in this amount of damage, which was the actual amount of damage sustained, without interest.

The reason for the 15-year delay apparently is that the claim has been hanging around this Congress and the Claims Committee. It has been reported repeatedly by the Claims Committee, but the gentleman knows that in previous Congresses we have been unable to get consideration of a great many meritorious bills.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Does the gentleman contend this examination by the board of review in Chicago was contrary to law? It was made at the request of the Government inspector in Missouri. It was a new service which the Government was giving. The inspector was a cautious man and he wished to be sure he was right. He found he was wrong. Is there any contention this wheat was hard winter wheat?

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. No.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. The claimant is asking then for something he did not have. He was paid for hard winter wheat and the fact is that hard yellow wheat was shipped. He got all that the goods were worth.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. The contract was made only after the State supervisor and the Federal supervisor said it was no. 2 hard winter wheat and on that basis he made his contract.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. He had a contract to ship hard winter wheat, but he had his samples examined after he made the contract. That is true.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK] to strike out the title.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title V—(H. R. 1858. For the relief of Charles E. Names.) By Mr. MCANDREWS

That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Charles E. Names the sum of $225, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for the loss of an article of mail registered at the Osceola (Iowa) post office on April 29, 1920, which contained certain abstracts of title to lands owned by the said Charles E. Names. The postmaster at such post office was held responsible for the full amount of the loss, but the amount of the judgment recovered against him was inadvertently covered into the general fund of the Treasury as "Fines, penalties, and forfeitures", and the said Charles E. Names has never been reimbursed for the cost of new abstracts of title: Provided, That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to cancel post office settlement warrant no. 10581 in favor of Banta & Banta (E. G. Banta, successor), Osceola, Iowa, in the sum of $50: Provided further, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Title VI—(H. R. 2093. For the relief of Marion Shober Phillips.) By Mr. LAMBETH

That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Marion Shober Phillips the sum of $5,000, the payment of such sum being in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States by reason of injuries sustained by the said Phillips on May 27, 1934, while assisting Government officers, under their orders, in seizing and destroying an illicit liquor distillery: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 8, at the end of line 14, strike out "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,500."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title VII—(H. R. 3276. For the relief of the Delaware Bay Shipbuilding Co.) By Mr. WENE

That the claim of the Delaware Bay Shipbuilding Co., of Leesburg, N. J., against the United States for damages alleged to have been caused to its marine railway by the United States Coast Guard boat CG 227, on the morning of November 6, 1931, may be determined in a suit to be brought by said claimant against the United States in the District Court of the United States for the District of New Jersey: Provided, That notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and upon such notice it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That such suit shall be begun within 4 months of the date of the approval of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey to hear, determine, and render judgment, as if the United States were suable in tort, upon the claim of the Delaware Bay Shipbuilding Co., Inc., of Leesburg, N. J., for damages to its marine railway in the Maurice River, at Leesburg, N. J., allegedly by reason of being struck by United States Coast Guard patrol boat CG–227, on November 6, 1931: Provided, That the United States shall be permitted to file, and the said court shall hear and determine, any counterclaim or set-off as the result of alleged damage to United States Coast Guard patrol boat CG–227 by reason of striking said marine railway of the Delaware Bay Shipbuilding Co., Inc.

"SEC. 2. Suit upon such claim may be instituted at any time within 1 year after the enactment of this act, notwithstanding the lapse of time or any statute of limitations. Proceedings for the determination of such claim, appeals therefrom, and payment of any judgment thereon shall be in the same manner as in the cases over which such court has jurisdiction under the provisions of paragraph twentieth of section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the Delaware Bay Shipbuilding Co., Inc."

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: Page 9, line 7, strike out all of title VII.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, this bill would authorize the Delaware Bay Shipbuilding Co. to go to the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey and bring a suit there against the United States for damages to its marine railway in the Maurice River at Leesburg, N. J. The damage, it is alleged, was due to the marine railway being struck by a United States Coast Guard patrol boat.

This boat, the CG–227, on November 6, 1931, was patroling this river. Its officers were not particularly familiar with the navigation of the river. After the boat got to a point approximately opposite the plant of the Delaware Bay Shipbuilding Co. it prepared to turn around in the river, and in so turning the tide and current helped to wash it a little bit shoreward. The Coast Guard patrol boat ran aground against the marine railway.

The permit of the shipbuilding company to have this railway submerged required that the railway should be properly marked and indicated for the benefit of shipping and navigation in the river. Those markings were not provided, and as a result there was no means of notifying the officers in charge of the Coast Guard boat of the presence of that marine railway. Because of the failure of the Delaware Bay Shipbuilding Co. to have its railway properly marked so that the ship would know of the existence of the railway, I contend they are solely at fault and that the Coast Guard boat is in no way responsible for the damage that ensued to the railway. Had the railway been properly marked, unquestionably the Coast Guard boat would not have been turned around at that point and would not have come in contact with the railway.

The amount of damages sought amounted to $4,957.19. It appears to me that there is no actual negligence on the part of the Government in connection with the navigation of its ship in turning in the river. The only actual negligence that is shown from the facts in this case is negligence on the part of the Delaware Bay Shipbuilding Co. in having failed to properly mark their own marine railway; and for this reason I believe the title should be stricken from this omnibus bill.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I may say to the Members of the House that this particular bill is really a jurisdictional bill permitting these people to go into the United States district court and have their day in court. On page 41 of the report we admit that the question of damage is debatable. It seems to me that we should permit these people to go into court and have their day in court and there determine whether or not their claim is justified.

To show further this is a debatable claim, the report of the Department states it may be possible the Government has a claim against the Delaware Bay Shipbuilding Co. It seems to me we ought to permit the Delaware Bay Shipbuilding Co. to go into court and at the same time permit the Government to enter a counterclaim against the Delaware Bay Shipbuilding Co., and thus determine in the proper course whether there is any merit to the claim of the Delaware Bay Shipbuilding Co.

It seems to me, under these circumstances, we ought not to strike this title from the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] to strike out title VII.

The amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title VIII—(H. R. 4169. To carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of the Atlantic Works, of Boston, Mass.) By Mr. McCORMACK

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Atlantic Works, of Boston, Mass., the sum of $22,170.30 in full settlement of all claims against the United States for the difference between the actual cost of the construction of the revenue cutter Daniel Manning and the amount paid under the contract entered into for the building of said vessel as found by the Court of Claims and reported in Senate Document No. 5, Sixty-eighth Congress, first session.

With the following committee amendment:

At the end of line 13 change the period to a colon and insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: On page 11, strike out all of title VIII.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes to pay the sum of $22,170.30 to the Atlantic Works, of Boston, Mass. The Atlantic Works is a shipbuilding concern. You have previously been told about the age of some of the titles which appear in this particular omnibus bill. This cause of action arose over a contract to build ships which was entered into on June 27, 1895. The ship that was to be constructed was of an experimental nature. The contracting company apparently was not experienced in building this particular type of ship, and as a result numerous extra expenses were added, the cost of the ship being greatly increased. The company itself was not adequately prepared to construct a ship of this character, a steel vessel.

The company has already presented this matter to the Court of Claims and has not been successful there. Now the company comes back and asks for a donation on the part of Congress. The Court of Claims in its findings made this statement:

Changes in the specifications, which were not carried out, and rigid tests and inspections, which were not promptly acted on, caused delays which resulted in an increase over the contract price of $22,170.30.

This is the amount they are seeking in the bill. However, the contract provided for a number of changes. It provided that further changes should be agreed to by the parties. It provided for a definite penalty in the event of delays. Actually the excess cost amounted to some $133,000.

The important part of the decision of the Court of Claims is this:

There is no liability on the United States under the terms of the contract to pay said claim, and the claim is neither a legal nor an equitable one. The claimant insists that the claim is one for "a grant, gift, or bounty" by the Government.

This is simply the situation that confronts you. They have been to the Court of Claims, and the Court of Claims has made the statement that if they were to be given this $22,000 it would be nothing more than a donation to the company, which has neither a legal nor an equitable claim to be paid this amount of money. For this reason, in view of the fact this is a bill which is over 30 years old, I sincerely urge the Members of the Congress to defeat it by adopting my amendment.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California states the Court of Claims has made a finding against this claim. The Court of Claims has made a finding that this amount is reasonably due. As a matter of fact, the Court of Claims makes a finding that the hull of the Daniel Manning was the first composite vessel of its class to be built by the Government. The building of this vessel was for experimental purposes. As a result this company received many instructions from the Navy Department to change the specifications, a natural thing to do, but the company had to stand the expense.

The Court of Claims has found that the difference between the contract price and the expense actually incurred in the building of this vessel by the company was $22,170.30. There is not a penny of profit included in that amount. It is the actual expense this company incurred.

This matter was referred to the Court of Claims, and the Court of Claims made a favorable finding. Of course, there is no legal responsibility in any of these matters, and this is why we refer them to the Court of Claims to ascertain the moral obligation of the Government. If this company could have sued the Government in the United States district court, we would not have had to come here and ask for the passage of a private bill authorizing the company to go to the Court of Claims. In this case we have already passed the bill referring the matter to the Court of Claims, and the Court of Claims has made a finding with reference to the amount in which the Government is morally obligated to this company, the sum of $22,170.

There are two or three payments which have been made in the past in connection with some other contracts. The Fore River Ship & Engine Co. case is one where a bill has gone through for payment in connection with a similar contract with respect to an experimental ship, where the contractor incurred additional expense in assisting the Government. Those people came to the Congress and Congress recognized the moral obligation involved. The George Lawley & Son Corporation bill we passed last year covered a similar situation.

The mere fact that thirty-odd years have gone by is no bar. Half a year was passed in securing the report of the Treasury Department board. Attempting to secure legislative enactment for the first $138,000 actually due under the contract took 4 years. Securing the findings of the Court of Claims took nearly 20 years. This company has been pursuing its remedy as diligently as it possibly could. It is no fault of the company that it took years for a bill to pass referring the matter to the Court of Claims. Now, the Court of Claims has made a finding in this sum, and this is a bill to carry out the finding the Court of Claims has made, that the Government has a moral obligation to pay the company this particular sum.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Do I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts to say that this expenditure of $22,000 was for the benefit of the Government?

Mr. McCORMACK. Exactly.

Mr. REES of Kansas. In what respect did the Government benefit thereby?

Mr. McCORMACK. The Government was building a new type of vessel and it was just the same as if the Government had made a contract with the gentleman. The Government gives you certain plans and specifications, and as the vessel is being constructed the Government changes its plans and specifications, and you, in cooperation with the Government, proceed in accordance with the changed plans and specifications. However, you are limited to your contract and you cannot get the money for the expenses you have incurred as a result of complying with the change in the specifications that the Navy Department has made, and this is a bill to obtain for this company expenses it incurred as a result of cooperating with the Federal Government in trying to meet the changes in specifications that the Navy Department made subsequent to the making of the contract.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California, striking out the title.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COSTELLO) there were—ayes 34, noes 50.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 94, nays 204, not voting 133, as follows:

PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the next omnibus bill on the calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 6337, a bill for the relief of sundry claimants, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc.—

Title I—(H. R. 738. For the relief of Asa C. Ketcham.) By Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Asa C. Ketcham, of Fairmount, Md., the sum of $4,000 in full satisfaction for his claim against the United States Government for loss of his vessel J. J. Underhill, loaded with oyster shells, when it ran into a submerged pile while approaching a dock in Alexandria, Va., June 17, 1933, and sank.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 8, strike out "$4,000" and insert "$2,500."

In line 10, after the word "Underhill", strike out the remainder of the bill and insert "which was negligently beached in August 1933, so as to render it unfit for further use, and the possession of which was refused said Asa C. Ketcham prior to such beaching, by employees of the Corps of Engineers, War Department: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: Page 1, beginning in line 3, strike out all of title I.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, this title provides for the payment of $2,500 for the loss of a boat, the J. J. Underhill, to be paid to the claimant, Asa C. Ketcham. This boat in coming up the Potomac River struck a submerged piling near Alexandria, Va. The boat was towed up the river, but finally sank near Hains Point. Being in the navigation channel of the river, it was a hindrance to shipping in the river. As a result, the War Department deemed it necessary to immediately remove the vessel from the channel. The claimant advised the district engineer that he was without funds with which to salvage his own vessel, and so he authorized the district engineer to remove the vessel. The vessel was, therefore, raised and towed to the mud flats adjacent to Gravelly Point, and there this boat was beached. The boat was advertised for sale with the requirement that a bond be furnished by the vendee of the boat against any possibility that it would sink before it could reach a marine railway. In other words, the Government demanded that whoever should purchase the boat should make certain that in removing it from Gravelly Point to a marine railway for repairs he should see to it that it would not sink on the way. The claimant was the only bidder, but as he could not furnish the necessary bond his proposal was rejected. Within a few days a storm came on, and being battered about, the vessel became so useless that its sale or removal was impracticable, and now the claimant is coming in trying to recover $2,500 in damages from the Government.

It is quite evident that the removal of the boat from Hains Point was a proper action upon the part of the Government in keeping open the navigation lanes of the Potomac River. Its beaching at Gravelly Point was quite within the power of the War Department.

The failure on the part of the owner to provide a good and sufficient bond for moving that boat from its point of beaching to a marine railway was sufficient reason in not allowing him to take the boat from that position. The fact that the storm came on and finished the destruction of the boat to such a degree that it was thereafter worthless was not the responsibility of the War Department or of the Government, and for that reason it is my contention that the claimant is not entitled to recover any sum of money whatsoever from the Government. I therefore urge upon the Members to adopt my amendment to strike the title from the bill.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. Yes.

Mr. KELLER. What made the boat sink?

Mr. COSTELLO. It ran into a submerged piling off Alexandria, and due to the damage to the boat it leaked so badly that it finally sank off Hains Point.

Mr. MCFARLANE. And what is the theory upon which the Government is asked to pay this $2,500 to this claimant?

Mr. COSTELLO. The claim is that in beaching it at Gravelly Point and not having it properly moored and tied down when the storm came on, the boat was further rendered useless, and they blame that responsibility on the Government. To my mind, it was up to the owner to take care of the boat from the time it was removed from the channel and placed at Gravelly Point.

Mr. MCFARLANE. In other words, if a horse should stray out onto the highway and an automobile came along and killed it, and the highway department dragged the horse off the highway to keep the lane open for the public, the highway department ought to pay for the horse. Is that right?

Mr. COSTELLO. Not quite, but it is a somewhat similar situation.

Mr. MASSINGALE. What action did the Court of Claims take on the bill?

Mr. COSTELLO. This particular matter I do not believe has been brought to the Court of Claims. It is being presented to Congress as a first claim for a direct payment of money.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. It cannot go before the Court of Claims unless Congress authorized it to be sent there, and the only redress is to come direct to the Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] has expired.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California to strike out the title.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH) there were ayes 37 and noes 42.

So the motion was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title II—(H. R. 1085. For the relief of John L. Alcock.) By Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland

That (1) the Court of Claims of the United States be, and is hereby, given jurisdiction to hear and determine the claim of the said John L. Alcock, and to award him compensation for losses and/or damages, if any, sustained by him by reason of the action of the officers of the Signal Corps and/or the Spruce Production Division of the War Department in promulgating the order refusing to permit any further shipments under his said contracts and foreign orders and directing the canceling of the said contracts of the said Alcock with the said American mills; and to enter a decree or judgment against the United States for such losses and/or damages, notwithstanding the executory character of such contracts and that there had been no delivery of title to him under his contracts with the American mills, such losses and/or damages to be measured by the difference between what he would have received from the foreign purchasers upon delivery of the lumber, free on board cars at mills, and the amount he had agreed to pay the American mills free on board cars at mill.

With the following committee amendment:

Beginning in line 16, on page 2, strike out all down to and including line 9, on page 3, and insert:

"That (1) jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, determine, and render judgment on the claim of John L. Alcock, of Baltimore, Md., for loss and/or damage, if any, sustained by him by reason of the action of officers of the Signal Corps and/or the Spruce Production Division of the War Department in promulgating the order refusing to permit further shipments under his contracts and foreign orders for the shipment and delivery from February to December 1918 of 6,000,000 feet of spruce and fir lumber for the use of the British Army in the prosecution of the World War, and by reason of their action in directing the canceling of his contracts with the American mills for the production and shipment of said 6,000,000 feet of lumber. The Court of Claims shall hear, determine, and render judgment on the claim, notwithstanding the executory character of such contracts and that there had been no delivery of title to claimant under his contracts with the American mills, and shall measure the losses and/or damages, if any, by the difference between what claimant would have received from the foreign purchasers on delivery of the lumber, free on board cars at the mills, and the amount he had agreed to pay the American mills free on board cars at mills."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

(2) The Court of Claims in the adjudication of the said claim is authorized in its discretion to use, in addition to any evidence that may be offered in any suit which may be brought under this act, the pleadings and evidence in the case of John L. Alcock & Co. v. The United States (61 Ct. Cls. 312), and in the case of John L. Alcock & Co. v. The United States (No. J–567), decided April 4, 1932.

(3) Suit hereunder may be instituted at any time within 4 months after the approval of this act, notwithstanding lapse of time or any statute of limitations, and proceedings therein shall be had as in the case of claims over which such court has jurisdiction under section 145 of the Judicial Code as amended.

With the following committee amendment:

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of John L. Alcock."

The title was amended.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of New York: On page 2, strike out all of title II.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, title II is an attempt to recover profits which a man named Alcock, of Baltimore, Md., might have made if the United States had not entered the World War. The claim is not for any out-of-pocket expenses or any losses, but for prospective war profits. The matter has been in the Court of Claims twice and adjudicated twice, and now we are asked to send it back a third time, stripping the Government of every possible defense.

This bill, in effect, is a direction to the Court of Claims to assess damages in the amount of $195,000 with interest at 6 percent from 1918 down to date. That is the effect of the bill. The report is rather voluminous.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. The bill has been amended and there is no amount fixed here. This is simply another jurisdictional bill authorizing the Court of Claims to hear this claim.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. We know what the claim is from reading the decision of the Court of Claims. You will find that what this man seeks is profits he might have made on a contract he had with a firm of brokers in Scotland for the delivery of several million feet of fir and spruce. He has made the same claim in the Court of Claims before. It was for $195,000 and it was rejected. The opinion of the Court of Claims has been taken as a guide in drawing this bill to insure a favorable decision on the next hearing. The grounds on which this claim was rejected by the court have been eliminated here, so that the Government has no defense whatever the next time the case reaches the court, if this bill is passed.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. How many lives do these supposed claims have? Do we not ever get through with them? Whenever they are adjudicated and passed on by some court against the claimant, that ought to end it sometime, some place, somewhere, somehow.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I agree with the gentleman, yet there is a bill before my committee for a claim arising in the War of 1812.

Mr. McFARLANE. Let us try to stop this one.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Let me briefly state the facts here. I want you to get the picture as I see it. The gentleman in Baltimore, the claimant in this title, did a very large business selling fir and spruce from our western forests to England, France, and Italy, where that lumber was greatly needed in the construction of airplanes.

The prices steadily advanced and he made substantial profits. When the United States got into the war, Secretary Baker realized that a great deal of war profiteering was going on in lumber and that it was impossible to allocate it between the Allies and for domestic uses without Government control, so the spruce division, very wisely, was formed. They took over control of production and distribution of lumber in this country and fixed prices. When the Government engaged in this activity, performing a very necessary governmental function in an emergency, the emergency of war, Mr. Alcock had two lots of lumber which he had contracted to sell. One was already in the seaports or on trains in transit to the seaports. He had purchased the lumber and had received payment for it. The Government seized that property and allocated it among the Allies and fixed the price, allowing Mr. Alcock a small profit. So, in that case he actually lost the profits he would have obtained on lumber which was his, if the Government had not intervened.

The Court of Claims allowed him those profits, every penny of it, $163,000 with interest at 6 percent, under the authority of a private bill passed for the benefit of this claimant in 1928.

There was another lot of lumber which he contracted to sell to a firm of brokers in Scotland. No money had been paid to him, he had paid nothing to the mills, not a cent of investment had been made, the lumber had not been cut, it was not in being. It was purely an executory contract, as the court found. In those circumstances he sustained no loss, except the possibility of an estimated profit, if the Government had not exercised a necessary governmental function in keeping down war profiteering and seeing to it that the lumber went to our allies, who needed it. He actually lost nothing. He received $163,000 profit from the lumber to which he had title. He now asks for $195,000 profit on lumber he never had.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. In other words, he is just like the Arkansas hog farmer who said that he lost $100,000 last year on hogs. When they asked him how that was he said, "Well, if I had had the hogs to eat up the acorns last year, I would have made $100,000." That is just about the situation regarding this claim.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. That is about the situation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I just want to point out, stealing a minute, that the Supreme Court has passed time after time on this class of cases, and has uniformly held in favor of the Government. Every time there is a war, a tariff law, or an embargo, many people lose prospective profits. This is another one of those cases.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, my friend, the gentleman from New York, is somewhat mistaken with reference to this claim. As I understand it, it is true this party did go into the Court of Claims on a previous bill passed by Congress and obtained $163,000. At that time he also filed his claim for the amount of the anticipated profits under his contract, which had the approval of the War Department, but the Court of Claims then stated that it was not, in their opinion, the intention of Congress to cover this particular item of his claim. It was the intention of Congress originally to give Mr. Alcock an opportunity to be heard on the claim here involved, and this bill is to give him an opportunity to go into the Court of Claims and have them determine whether or not he is entitled to what he now claims.

The War Department applies this case to existing law as established by the Supreme Court in the case of Omnia Commercial Co., Inc., against United States, whereas your committee believes the claim is more applicable to the existing law as established by the Supreme Court in the case of the International Paper Co. against The United States, where the Supreme Court found that the Government had taken property which rightfully belonged to the International Paper Co. for its own use without reimbursement for same. It is my opinion, therefore, that the Court of Claims should be allowed to determine which law this case is applicable to, and that is all this bill does.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. The gentleman is aware, is he not, that under this bill the Government cannot set up as a defense the executory character of the contract, or that there had been no delivery of title to the claimant under the contract, which are the very grounds on which the Court of Claims threw this claim out the other time when he was there? This bill strips the United States of every defense.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I do not so understand it. It is my understanding that the bill as now worded does not do that.

All this man is asking is to go into the Court of Claims and have his case determined; in other words, he had the approval of the War Department when he entered into this contract and then at a subsequent date the Government came along and took away from him his rights under the contract which it previously had approved. All he is asking is to have his day in court and have this claim determined on its merits and to have it ascertained whether or not he is entitled to damages and the extent of the damages.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. The gentleman is familiar with the report of the War Department in which it is pointed out that if this bill should pass it offers a precedent for tens of thousands of other similar claims for loss of possible profits because of our entry into the war, or because of peace coming on. Either of these events broke up somebody's plans.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I appreciate that, but Congress always has control of the situation and can determine what cases should be heard. It is up to us to say whether we will allow tens of thousands of claims or one, but we should not hesitate to do justice because of the possible fear that other claimants might come in. This claim has been passed by the Claims Committee, and, in my judgment, when a claim gets past them it has plenty of merit to it.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Many of these cases already have been to the Court of Claims, and the court found against them. In fact, they have taken some of these cases to the Court of Claims two or three times.

Then they bring it back to Congress and want us to authorize payment of claims that the court has ruled out. Does not the gentleman think that is an imposition on the membership of the House when they do not know more about these claims than they do?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. That is not the case. In other words, we have a bill before the House to permit these people to go into court. We passed this bill during the last session of Congress and the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from New York voted for it. It was considered in an omnibus bill on May 13 last year, which bill passed the House.

Mr. RICH. I will bet if the gentleman is referring to me, I did not vote for it.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I can assure the gentleman I did not, either.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I do not know whether there was a record vote or not, but that bill was passed. These people are entitled to go in and have their case heard in court. This bill merely gives the court jurisdiction to hear the case, and nothing more. I think when the committee passes on a claim, after having heard it and after having filed a complete report, the Congress ought to adopt it.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. I understood the gentleman from New York to say that this claimant had its day in court.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Not on this particular item. There were two items involved. The court held that the original bill as passed, which gave them $163,000, did not intend that the court should hear this particular matter.

Mr. McFARLANE. Where has this claim been since the World War?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. It has been here all the time, and the gentleman from Texas and others have been objecting to it.

Mr. McFARLANE. If it had any merit it would have been passed long ago, and the fact that we have been able to defeat it in the past shows me the more why there is little merit in giving it favorable consideration now.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland) there were—ayes 70, noes 16.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title III—(H. R. 1258. For the relief of E. G. Briseno.) By Mr. THOMASON of Texas.

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to E. G. Briseno, of El Paso, Tex., the sum of $5,000 for painful, severe, and permanent injury to his minor son, Hector Briseno, caused by the explosion of a shell picked up upon private property, which shell had been dropped and left there by troops of the United States Army engaged in target practice.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 5, line 6, after the word "of" strike out all of line 6 and all of lines 7, 8, 9, and 10 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$5,225.35, in full settlement of all claims, against the United States for personal and permanent injury to his son, Hector Briseno, a minor child, from the explosion of a 37 mm shell, on November 7, 1932, which he picked up on private property, and which had previously been picked up and carried from a target range of the United States Army, where it was lying in the open, by George Pell, also a minor: Provided, That of the amount herein appropriated, the sum of $4,000 shall be held in trust by the said E. G. Briseno for use in maintenance of his son, Hector Briseno, and the sum of $1,225.35 shall be received by him as reimbursement for medical expenses incurred as the result of said injury to Hector Briseno: Provided further, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

Page 6, line 8, strike out all of section 2.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill for the relief of E. G. Briseno and Hector Briseno, a minor."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HALLECK: Page 5, beginning in line 3, strike out all of title III.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I objected to this bill when it came up for consideration on the Private Calendar because on investigation I did not find that a case of liability was stated against the Government. It is my purpose now to attempt to point out the facts in this case, as I understand them, to the end that the membership of the House may determine whether or not this claim should be paid.

The bill seeks to pay E. G. Briseno, of El Paso, Tex., the sum of $5,225.35. In January of 1932 the Briseno family and the Pell family were living side by side in El Paso, Tex. In that month one of the Pell children, George, 17 years of age, accompanied by his sister and two of the Briseno children, a brother and sister of the claimant in this action, went on a picnic to a target range belonging to the United States Government. While they were there George Pell, the 17-year-old boy, picked up an unexploded projectile fired from a 37-millimeter gun and carried it home with him. This was in January of 1932.

For something like 10 months the unexploded projectile was in and around the Pell and the Briseno homes. The children of the two families played with it. The adult parents knew it was there and were familiar with the fact the children were playing with the projectile.

Subsequently the projectile was put in the garage of the Briseno home, and I think there was some evidence it was put up out of reach of the children. In November of 1932 this little fellow, Hector Briseno, got the projectile down from the shelf and began playing with it. He dropped it and the shell exploded, causing him very severe and permanent injuries.

Mr. Speaker, as I interpret the case, it proceeds on the theory that the Government is liable by reason of the fact that the projectile was allowed to remain there on the target range. There is no showing that the Government or any agent of the Government knew the projectile was there. I say, from the very nature of things, the Government could not know that fact.

The projectile was taken to the homes of these people. They knew it was there. If there was any negligence in allowing that projectile to be available as the plaything of these children, that negligence is chargeable to the parents themselves and not to the Government of the United States. If there was any original negligence on the part of the Government, there was subsequent intervening negligence on the part of the parents themselves, who, in my opinion, certainly should know enough to appreciate that the shell was a dangerous plaything for children.

There is much to be said on the sympathetic side in the consideration of this bill; and as far as my own sympathies are concerned, I would like to see the youngster taken care of. If this is to be treated as a matter of gratuity, then likely the amendment I have offered should fail; but if we are to consider this measure on its merits and as it might involve negligence or even moral responsibility of the Government, I say my amendment should be agreed to.

It probably is not altogether fair to say that the youngsters in the first instance were trespassers, although they did go upon the property of the United States Government, where, as a matter of fact, they had no particular right to be. In addition to that, the El Paso papers carried notices for a period of 9 years stating to the people that that was a firing range, and certainly that ought to set up in the minds of the people sufficient notice that it was a dangerous place.

Mr. SOUTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SOUTH. Did this Mexican boy know that this projectile was dangerous or not?

Mr. HALLECK. It is asserted in some of the affidavits that they were people unacquainted with the nature of that sort of a thing and did not know it was dangerous. As I say, following on the heels of the World War, anyone living in the immediate vicinity of this sort of a target range certainly had some idea of the dangerous character of the projectile.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, this is a sad, and, in my judgment, a very meritorious case. The gentleman from Indiana has not stated quite all the facts, because I have some personal knowledge of the situation.

At the outskirts of El Paso, Tex., is Fort Bliss, which is one of our large Army posts. Some few miles from Fort Bliss is the Casner target range, out in the desert where they fire up against the Franklin range of mountains. There is not a fence anywhere near. There is not a signboard of any kind. There is not the slightest bit of warning to anybody, adult or child, that that is a target range. When the time came in this particular year for target practice the Army went out there with their large projectiles and fired across the desert up against the mountain. When the springtime came and the Army had gone back to quarters the picnic season started, and the Briseno and the Pell families, or the children, at least, went out there for a picnic. These families are illiterate but highly respected people of Mexican descent. They are absolutely without any knowledge of firearms. It is true, as the gentleman from Indiana has stated, that there had been some kind of a notice in the advertising section of the local paper to the effect that at a certain time there would be some firing out on the target range, but it was after the target practice had finished that this incident occurred.

The children went out on the range for their happy picnic. The Pell boy picked up this unexploded shell. To leave it in such a place was negligence per se. There was no kind of a sign, there was no kind of a warning, there was no kind of a fence there to tell an adult that he was a trespasser upon anybody's land; because most of it is public land, state school land or university land, with no fence or protection or anything of that sort about it.

These little innocent Mexican children took that unexploded shell home with them, where, it is true, they played around with it and tossed it about. Perhaps their parents ought to have known better, but they did not. It is safe to say that no parent knowing the danger of that unexploded shell, which our great Army had left out there to be picked up by innocent children, would have left such a shell lying around. The children played with the shell, treating it as a kind of toy, because they are not the kind who have many toys. One of the children was little Hector, 5 years old. He found the shell and took it from the shelf in their humble home, when he dropped it, and it exploded.

Last summer when I was home, that honest, innocent, and illiterate old father brought the boy to my office. I do not know when I have seen a worse disfigured child or a much brighter one, with one arm gone, with a leg terribly lacerated, and with one eye nearly blind and which will probably have to be removed. To me it would be the most unjust thing in the world not to give this relief, because the Army went out there and fired all those shells and exercised no caution whatever for the public, but left unexploded shells out there where children might find them. You know the law of explosives in all the States—that due care and extra caution must be taken by those using that kind of instrumentalities to see to it that children and innocent, ignorant people do not suffer as the result of such use. Explosives are attractive and inviting to children. The law demands that extra caution be exercised.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. Would the gentleman suggest there is any duty on the United States Government or its Army to comb the territory of that target range and pick up the unexploded shells that may be there?

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. With respect to the unexploded shells that showed signs of not having been exploded, I say it was their duty to do it. Furthermore, I say it was their duty to put a fence or warning sign of some sort around that place. I have heard there is a regulation that requires the Army to pick up or bury all shells.

Mr. IZAC. Was this a 37-millimeter unexploded shell?

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. I believe that is what the report states. I am not much more familiar with firearms than this little boy or his father.

Mr. IZAC. For the benefit of the Members, I believe it should be stated you cannot tell whether such a shell is armed or unarmed. The doughboys brought back from France and other places many of these shells, and you could not tell by looking at them whether they were armed or not.

Mr. McCORMACK. Furthermore, the Committee on Claims has passed on this bill, and that is a presumption in favor of it.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. They passed on it three times by unanimous action, I understand. The bill has merit, and all doubts ought to be resolved in favor of this terribly mangled little boy.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] to strike out the title.

The amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title IV—(H. R. 1690. For the relief of Ralph Riesler.) By Mr. BUCKLEY of New York

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Ralph Riesler the sum of $5,000 for damages suffered by reason of his son, Ralph Riesler, being struck and killed by a Government automobile which was driven by an employee of the Post Office Department.

With the following committee amendments:

Beginning in line 14, on page 6, strike out all down to and including line 20 and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Ralph Reisler, of New York City, N. Y., the sum of $2,500 in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for the death of his minor son, Ralph Reisler, Jr., who died from injuries sustained when he was struck by a United States mail truck in the Bronx, New York City, on January 21, 1925: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Ralph Reisler."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: Beginning on page 6, line 12, strike out all of title IV.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, the present title provides for the payment of $2,500 to Ralph Reisler for the death of his minor son. This death was occasioned by the son's riding on a sleigh apparently out of a private driveway into a public street. The street was covered with snow. The collision occurred in New York City on January 21, 1925, when the child was run over by a mail truck. Apparently the children around there had been using this driveway as a sleighing ground, and would come down the hill out of the driveway and then curve into the street.

It appears the accident occurred at about 7:30 p. m. Some of the children were standing in the street. They apparently attempted to stop the mail-truck driver from driving by the driveway. The youngsters knew the boy was going to come down the hill on his sleigh. However, they were ineffective in stopping the truck driver, who apparently was not driving at a fast or excessive rate of speed, but who did not hear the call of warning by the children. Various details concerning the accident are very much in dispute, as the affidavits which are presented show.

However, the driver of the mail truck on February 3, 1925, was charged with manslaughter before the New York City court and that court found that the evidence was insufficient to show culpable negligence on the part of the mail-truck driver.

It would appear to me that in view of the fact that in the House this afternoon we have been led, apparently, to go upon the findings of the Court of Claims and even pass bills here where the Court of Claims has declared there was nothing more involved than a donation or grant, that where the court has found that the Government employee was not guilty of culpable negligence, we should follow the court in that respect and not attempt to attribute negligence to the Post Office Department in having occasioned accidents. For this reason it appears to me it is only proper that relief should be denied in this case if the driver of the mail truck was not in any way negligent or in any way directly responsible for causing the accident.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I will be pleased to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DOWELL. There is a wide difference between culpable negligence and negligence. It seems to me that this man might be acquitted of culpable negligence and at the same time might be liable for this damage. There is a wide difference between the terms, and conviction of a crime is entirely different from the collection of damages for negligence. I think the distinction is quite clear, and if that is the question involved, it seems to me this claim should be paid.

Mr. COSTELLO. My only contention is that the driver of the truck was not negligent. The real negligence was on the part of the children in allowing the sleigh to go out on the public streets, in front of oncoming cars, and more especially when the streets were covered with snow, with great probability of accidents of this sort taking place.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The sponsor of the bill is out of the city and not able to be here this afternoon, and I shall endeavor to explain to the Members of the House as best I can the facts in this case.

There was a very heavy snow on this particular day, and it appears that a number of children were riding sleds in a private driveway. There were children out on the streets warning truck drivers and automobile drivers to stop their trucks or automobiles whenever one of the children was riding down this private driveway. This mail truck came along in a northerly direction, and at the same time an automobile was coming toward the point where the accident occurred in a southerly direction, and the children there warned the driver of the mail truck and also the driver of the automobile that was going in the other direction that there was a sleigh coming down this private driveway with these children on it. The mail-truck driver failed to stop, while the driver of the other automobile going in the other direction heeded the warning of the children and stopped. The mail truck collided, or the sleigh ran into the mail truck, and as a result this young child was injured and died the next day. He was only 12 years of age, and for this reason he is not presumed to have been negligent in this case.

The gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] has stressed the fact that the court did not hold this mail-truck driver for manslaughter. That is altogether a different question. We do not claim that by passing favorably on this bill that the driver of the mail truck is to be considered as a criminal or as guilty of manslaughter, but we do claim he was negligent, and we also claim that whenever children are on the street, as is the custom in a busy city, warning the driver of an automobile or a truck that children are sleigh riding, the driver of an automobile or truck should stop.

These are the facts as presented to the committee, and the sum involved is only $2,500, and we believe the claim should be paid.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. May I suggest to the gentleman that a child 12 years of age, under the law, is only expected to exercise the degree of care which a child of that age is capable of exercising, and that is not the degree of care expected of an adult person. Furthermore, the gentleman is absolutely correct that in criminal proceedings they must prove a man guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, while for manslaughter willful and reckless disregard must be proven, and in civil proceedings all you have to prove is mere negligence, although negligence in itself is not a crime.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I thank the gentleman very much for his statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] to strike out the title.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title V—(H. R. 2789. For the relief of Cohen, Goldman & Co., Inc.) By Mr. PEYSER

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Cohen, Goldman & Co., Inc., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $19,030.20, in full settlement of all claims against the Government growing out of contracts nos. 1325, 1645, 2299, 3220, and 4519N, and contracts supplementary thereto, for the manufacture during 1917 and 1918 of overcoats and uniforms for the United States Army.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 8, line 2, after the word "Army", change the period to a colon and add the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: Page 7, beginning in line 14, strike out all of title V.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, the present bill seeks to pay to Cohen, Goldman & Co. $19,030 for claims growing out of contracts for the manufacture of overcoats and uniforms during the years 1917 and 1918. The testimony in the case is quite voluminous. There are numerous items contained therein, and there are quite a number of different contentions on the part of the claimant as well as on the part of the War Department. At one time the War Department brought suit against Cohen, Goldman & Co. for $136,000. As an offset to that the claimant herein brought a counter claim for $40,000. However, the War Department, after attempting to gather together the necessary testimony to proceed with its action, finally came to the conclusion that it was not able to prove its case. In other words, the books of the company and the facts and details of the action were in the possession of Cohen, Goldman & Co., and it was quite a difficult matter for the War Department to obtain the necessary facts to sustain their action. For that reason the War Department dismissed the case which it had against the claimant herein.

The contract called for the making of these uniforms for the Army. Bonuses were provided for the production of uniforms within a less period of time than originally specified in the contract, and penalties were provided for delay. In addition, if the company saved cloth they were to receive a bonus, and if they used an excessive amount of cloth then they had to pay an additional cost. It is a rather difficult thing to go into the details of this case, and I think gentlemen will find, if they read the report, that the claimants overused the expensive types of cloth, 16-ounce Melton costing $2.65 a yard, to the extent of some 1,300 yards, while in the less expensive types of cloth there was a certain saving.

It seems to me that in going over the facts the Government actually had a valid claim against these claimants, but because of technicalities was unable to prove the case. On the other hand, it does not seem reasonable to me that we should turn around now and pay to this company the sum of $19,000 when, apparently, if the Government were in a position to prove its case it would be able to collect some five or six times the amount of money the claimant is trying to recover.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Is it not true that the Government did enter a counterclaim and later withdrew it?

Mr. COSTELLO. The Government brought the original suit and the claimant entered a counterclaim, and the Government dismissed its suit because it did not have the facts necessary to prove its claim. The statement of the War Department is that they are unqualifiedly opposed to this particular legislation. They say they do not believe that the claimant has a valid claim on the Government, and for that reason I urge that the House strike this title from the bill.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman please explain on what foundation the Government brought suit against the company?

Mr. COSTELLO. On the usage of materials, and things of that kind. It was difficult for the Government to prove it, because of the fact that the books and the details were in the control of the company itself. It is not thus possible for the Government to prove that the amount of cloth allegedly used by the company was actually used.

Mr. PETTENGILL. What interpretation does the gentleman put upon the attorney-fee clause? It says that not more than 10 percent shall be paid to any agent or attorney. If there were five attorneys, they could each get 10 percent, or a total of 50 percent, could they not?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. That is the usual 10-percent clause.

Mr. PETTENGILL. What does it mean?

Mr. COSTELLO. I do not think it has any meaning, no matter how it is worded. Possibly other language should be used to clearly show that only 10 percent should be paid regardless of the number of the attorneys.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in the absence of the sponsor of the bill to state that if the membership would take time to read the report I think it would come to a different idea of what this bill purports to do. This bill is to pay out of the Treasury of the United States $19,000 to this company, and here is what the report says and what is proven by the facts. The Court of Claims heard this particular case and found that this company was entitled to this sum of money, nineteen thousand dollars and odd. However, because the claim was brought more than 6 years after the contracts were executed, the Court of Claims was helpless to order the Government to pay the money. The gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] before called upon the membership to follow the ruling of the Court of Claims in a previous case. Here is a particular case where the Court of Claims has found a meritorious claim, but could not order the Government to pay the same simply because the statute of limitations had expired, and I feel that the membership should support this particular title because I believe we are justified in following the facts as found by the Court of Claims. The Court of Claims found this amount to be due from the Government to this particular company.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] to strike out the title.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland) there were ayes 77 and noes 30.

So the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title VI—(H. R. 3426. For the relief of Rose McGirr.) By Mr. BLOOM

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Rose McGirr, of New York City, the sum of $2,500. Such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States on account of damages sustained by the said Rose McGirr, when she was struck and seriously injured by a motor vehicle of the Prohibition Bureau of the Treasury Department in New York City on May 16, 1929: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 8, line 19, after the word "and", strike out the word "seriously."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title VII—(H. R. 4170. To carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of the Union Iron Works.) By Mr. MCCORMACK

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to the Union Iron Works the sum of $165,284.53 in full settlement of all claims against the United States for the difference between the actual cost of the construction of three torpedo-boat destroyers and the amount paid under the contract entered into for the building of said boats, as found by the Court of Claims and reported in Senate Document No. 78, Seventy-third Congress, first session.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 9, line 22, add the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN: On page 9, in line 10, strike out all of title VII.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Members of the House to read the title of this bill. The title reads:

To carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of the Union Iron Works.

What are the findings of the Court of Claims? Turn to page 65 of the report and read the conclusion of law, which is as follows:

Upon the foregoing special findings of fact, which are made part of the judgment herein, the court decides, as a conclusion of law, that plaintiff is not entitled to recover, and its petition is dismissed.

Judgment is rendered against the plaintiff for the cost of printing the record herein, the amount thereof to be ascertained by the clerk and collected by him according to law, which amount is found to be $2,159.82.

The bill provides to pay to the Union Iron Works $165,284.53. Who can say that represents the findings of the court?

This bill grows out of some construction work done for the Navy Department, for which the Government paid prior to the turn of the century—to be exact, way back in 1898. I have opposed this claim on this floor for years. I know all the facts concerning the case, and I say without fear of contradiction that if you carry out the findings of the Court of Claims, all you have to do is to collect the cost of printing from the plaintiff, the Union Works, if that has not been paid.

The contract called for the construction of three vessels. The findings of the court show the Navy Department fixed the maximum or upset price at which bids would be considered after it had estimated the cost, and such price was intended to provide and usually allowed a fair return to the contractor for his work. The findings further show that previous to submitting its proposal the company had realized a material profit on the construction of naval vessels in the prices set by the Navy Department. I read from the findings:

Officers of the Navy Department believed that the prices fixed in the advertisement for the torpedo boats and torpedo-boat destroyers were fair and reasonable and that a profit would accrue to the builders.

The president of the plaintiff company, before submitting the proposal for the construction of these vessels, made inquiries at the Navy Department and was there informed that the upset price of $295,000 fixed for each boat would cover the cost and there should be also a profit.

Before final payment was made by the Navy Department the Union Iron Works, pursuant to a clause in the contract, executed a release whereby the corporation, for itself and its successors and assigns and its legal representatives, released and forever discharged the United States from any liability growing out of the contract.

I have gone over the case with extreme care, and I can find absolutely no justification for the payment of this money. I therefore, Mr. Speaker, hope that the House will not place its stamp of approval on this bill, but will vote for my motion striking the title from the bill, which, if it prevails, will save the taxpayers of this country $165,284.53.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The gentleman from Missouri refers to the findings of law of the Court of Claims. The Court of Claims always makes such findings of law. They make a finding of law against all claims. It is not the finding of law that we search for; it is the findings of fact. Every case that goes to the Court of Claims is decided by the Court of Claims against the claimant, as a matter of law, because that finding of law simply says there is no legal obligation on the part of the Government for which the Government could be sued. So when the Court of Claims makes a finding of law, that is the finding it makes in all cases. You will not find any case referred to the Court of Claims but what, as a matter of law, they find against it, but in accordance with the mandate of Congress they ascertain the facts.

Now, what are the facts in this case? The facts are that this company incurred this loss, this additional expense, at the request of the United States Government. Every Secretary of the Navy has recommended payment of it. The report of the committee and the report of the Court of Claims shows that the changes in the plans and specifications were made by the Navy Department from time to time as the work progressed.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Not just now.

The report shows that each of these vessels, when completed, were 54 tons more than the original specifications called for, and that the Navy Department asked this company to make the changes. This company, cooperating with the Navy Department, spent its own money, and the Court of Claims has made a finding of fact that the extra money spent by this company was the money named in this bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. The facts are in favor of this company. Here is something further that has just been called to my attention in the opinion of the Court of Claims:

Whether plaintiff is to have relief from its loss, and the amount of relief, if any, is therefore solely within the wisdom and sound discretion of the Congress.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes; I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman let me read the two sentences above that?

Mr. COCHRAN. Were the court to base its judgment on the merits, the petition would still have to be dismissed, since the facts show no breach of contract, and none is alleged. The plaintiff is not entitled to either legal or equitable relief. The claim is one for a gratuity.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is the finding of the Court of Claims in all cases. The Court of Claims in this case—and the gentleman cannot deny the fact that the Court of Claims has found that this company incurred extra expenses as a result of instructions of the Navy Department, changes of specifications. This is a case of legitimate business doing something for the Government at the Government's request.

Mr. COCHRAN. Why has not the court since 1898 found for the company, if it was legitimate?

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the House divided; and there were—yeas 65, nays 41.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present, and make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 172, nays 123, not voting 136, as follows:

PURE FOOD AND DRUG LEGISLATION

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, for the past 3½ years food and drug legislation has been pending before Congress. The weaknesses of the present law, passed in 1906, and a compromise measure even then, are well known. President Roosevelt in a message to Congress on March 22, 1935, has said:

It is time to make practical improvements. A measure is needed which will extend the controls formerly applicable only to labels to advertising also; which will extend protection to the trade in cosmetics; which will provide for a cooperative system and method of setting standards and for a system of inspection and enforcement to reassure consumers grown hesitant and doubtful; and which will provide for a necessary flexibility in administration as products and conditions change.

Ample evidence exists to show the need for a new law. Many dangerous drugs are commonly used in patent medicines. The presence of most of these drugs does not, according to the present law, even have to be stated on the label. The consumer has no way of knowing when he is subjecting himself to the perils inherent in their use.

DINITROPHENOL

The past few years have shown an ever-increasing list of persons killed by dinitrophenol. In many more persons its use has resulted in cataracts of the eye, often so severe that complete blindness ensued. A year ago the American Medical Association reported that there were 23 reducing preparations on the market which contain dinitrophenol. A high-school girl can in some areas buy a package of Redusols, a dinitrophenol preparation, at the corner drug store. She is then equipped to embark on a course of self-medication with a drug which, even when taken under expert medical supervision, has caused death (Facts and Frauds in Woman's Hygiene).

STRYCHNINE

Strychnine is another highly toxic drug the presence of which does not have to be declared under the present law. In one 5-year period 75 children, most of them under 5 years of age, died in New York State alone of strychnine poisoning (The Home Medicine Cabinet). Laxative and tonic pills containing strychnine were responsible for the majority of these deaths and are the foremost cause of fatal poisoning among young children. Parents assume such preparations to be innocuous. They have no way of knowing that the chocolate or sugar coating of these pills, so attractive to children, covers sufficient strychnine that six or eight tablets accidentally eaten may constitute a lethal dose of poison for a small child.

AMIDOPYRINE

Amidopyrine is present in many headache remedies and other pain killers. The drug causes in people who are sensitive to it a baffling disease, agranulocytosis, marked by a sharp reduction of the white blood cells. More than 1,500 persons in the United States died from agranulocytosis during the 3-year period ending with 1934 (Consumer Union Reports, April 1937). Yet multitudinous preparations containing amidopyrine are being sold over drug-store counters throughout the land. The present law requires neither that the presence of the drug be stated nor that any warning be given concerning its dangerous character.

ACETANILIDE

Acetanilide is another drug which has proved deadly to many people. Deaths from it were reported as long ago as 1909 in a pamphlet put out by the Public Health Service (Harmfulness of Headache Mixtures, by Kebler, Morgan, and Rupp, Government Printing Office, 1909.) The use of remedies containing it has not infrequently caused permanent heart injury, anemia, and loss of memory. The Government publication mentioned stated that "in not a few cases the patients were reduced to a condition of invalidism." Over 20 patent medicines sold for headache, insomnia, and colds have been found to contain acetanilide (Facts and Frauds in Woman's Hygiene). Unlike the other drugs named, the present law does require that its presence be stated on the label. It does not, however, require that the label bear a warning regarding the dangerous character of the drug. The labels of many acetanilide-bearing nostrums carry the statement "Contains no narcotics", thus giving the false impression that the preparations are absolutely safe. The Food and Drug Administration is powerless to prevent such labeling under the existing law.

MANY DANGEROUS PATENT MEDICINES ARE ON THE MARKET

The sale of patent medicines containing dangerous drugs is but one example of the inadequacy of existing legislation. Many nostrums, innocuous in themselves, are frequently the indirect cause of death, because the present law provides for no regulation of advertising. Worthless concoctions are advertised as being able to cure such diseases as diabetes, cancer, kidney disease, and tuberculosis. The gullible or unfortunate accept such dishonest claims at their face value, and lives which might be saved by medical treatment are lost.

DISHONEST ADVERTISING IS RAMPANT—CRAZY WATER CRYSTALS

Members of the House, the dishonest way in which many remedies are advertised at the best results in an economic waste. According to the book American Chamber of Horrors, written by the chief educational officer of the Food and Drug Administration, Crazy Water Crystals are essentially Glauber's salt, a horse physic. A package of Crazy Water Crystals retails for $1. The same amount of Glauber's salt can be purchased for approximately 25 cents. Crazy Water Crystals have been advertised for rheumatism, constipation, functional stomach diseases, liver disorders, cystitis, diabetes, and Bright's disease.

COSMETIC ADULTERATION

Cosmetics are entirely outside the scope of the present law. As long as they are unregulated we may expect repetitions of tragedies which have occurred in the past. Women have been blinded for life by eyelash preparations, poisoned by hair dyes containing lead or one of the dangerous aniline dyes, disfigured and disabled by cosmetics containing mercury, a powerful poison.

JAM

Mr. Speaker, though it is in the field of drugs and cosmetics that the consumer takes the worst beating, he also needs much better protection of the food he eats. The distinctive name proviso exempts countless proprietary foodstuffs from all provisions of the present law except the requirement that no poisonous ingredient be added. For example, jam, which is not called jam, but sold under a distinctive name, need meet no requirements regarding fruit content—it may even be made of moldy fruit, yet the Food and Drug Administration is powerless to touch it.

CONSUMER GROUPS WANT GRADE LABELING

Mr. Speaker, the failure of the present law to establish grades for canned goods means that thousands of housewives each day pay grade A prices for grade C or even substandard canned goods. The interest shown by consumer groups in the grade-labeling provision of S. 1944, the so-called Tugwell bill, shows how urgently such a provision is needed and wanted by the public. Rising food prices make it more imperative than ever before that the consumer be provided the criteria necessary if he is to purchase food intelligently.

ADVERTISING SHOULD BE MADE TRUTHFUL

An outstanding weakness of the present law is its failure to provide for supervision of advertising. The Federal Food and Drug Administration has done notable work in forcing false and fraudulent claims to be removed from the labels of patent medicines and packaged foodstuffs. In many cases, however, the objectionable claims have been merely transferred to advertising.

Indeed much modern advertising is more dishonest and misleading in character than even the old-time labels. Advertising has become such an important factor in determining the buying habits of the public that the need for honest advertising, as well as for honest labeling, is now almost universally recognized.

LET US HAVE STRONG LAWS TO DEAL WITH THE PROBLEM

The need for new food and drug legislation is well established. The question of paramount importance is whether we shall pass a law even weaker in some respects than the existing act, or one which adequately protects the interests of the consuming public. S. 5, as it has passed the Senate, is weaker than the present law in some aspects which vitally affect public welfare. The power to make multiple seizures has been one of the most effective weapons the Food and Drug Administration could use against violators. This power is seriously impaired in S. 5. As the New York Times has pointed out editorially:

Under the Copeland bill multiple seizures are still possible, but the accused may demand trial in his home jurisdiction, where, if he happens to be an important manufacturer and the principal economic prop of a small town, conviction by a jury of his neighbors will be almost impossible. Consumers are more likely to receive the kind of court action to which they are entitled in the districts where they live and have been harmed than in that of a distant manufacturer who may have transgressed the law.

I BELIEVE MY BILL, H. R. 5286, ANSWERS THE REQUIREMENTS

Mr. Speaker, I have introduced a bill, H. R. 5286, which affords the protection so urgently needed by the public. The main features of this bill are:

First. The establishment of a consumers' bureau in the Public Health Service.

Second. The registration of proprietary products.

Third. Informative labeling.

Fourth. Prevention of false or misleading advertising.

Fifth. An adequate budget.

Sixth. Health education, publicity, and scientific research.

REGISTRATION OF PROPRIETARY PRODUCTS

The registration of proprietary products is a measure definitely in the interest of public welfare. The registration provision of H. R. 5286 requires every manufacturer of a proprietary product to register with the Consumers Bureau, the agency set up to administer the act, the formula of his product, a statement of all claims to be made for it, and the name of the licensed pharmacist or chemist under whose supervision the product is manufactured. This feature would greatly simplify the whole procedure of enforcement. A product deleterious to health would be prevented from ever reaching the market since a certificate of registration would be denied if the product contained harmful ingredients.

THE PREVENTIVE FEATURE

This preventive feature is the main virtue of the bill. It would benefit all concerned. Public welfare would be better protected; the work of the enforcement agency both simplified and expedited; money would be saved for Government and business alike, since many long-drawn-out and expensive court cases would be eliminated. The soundness of preventing offenses rather than punishing them after they have been perpetrated is so obvious as to be incontrovertible.

The necessity of registering the name of the licensed pharmacist, chemist, or other technician under whose supervision a product is manufactured is apparent. Ruth de Forest Lamb in her book, American Chamber of Horrors, has told of Claude Bell, who, with only a graduate and scales for equipment, puts up in his own home a preparation for hay fever and asthma. The principal ingredient of the nostrum is potassium iodide, a drug which converts latent tuberculosis into an active form of the disease. Claude Bell has no scientific training. He left school after the eighth grade.

Ladies and gentlemen of the House, the background of many other patent medicines is probably no more reputable. This picture of an ignoramus dispensing medicine to the public detriment but his private profit is an incongruous one in our country, where scientific training and skill are supposedly held in high esteem. It is a picture which would be eliminated were H. R. 5286 to become law.

REVENUE RAISING MADE EASY

Another advantageous feature of the licensing plan is that it would provide a steady source of revenue for the bureau enforcing the act. Yet the cost to the individual manufacturer, an initial fee of $25 and $10 per year for renewal, would be so light as to impose a burden on no one. The Food and Drug Administration is continually handicapped by lack of funds. Its appropriation for the enforcement of the Food and Drugs Act is approximately $1,600,000, a sum which represents little over a penny for every person in the Nation. The Chief of the Administration, in his 1936 report, has pointed out that much necessary work is either inadequately performed or never undertaken because of insufficient funds. The means provided by H. R. 5286 of insuring an adequate budget for enforcement is simple, fair, and reliable.

INGREDIENTS AND THEIR PROPORTIONS SHOULD BY PRINTED ON THE LABEL

Another feature of H. R. 5286 in the interest of public welfare is the requirement that labels of proprietary foods, drugs, and cosmetics shall tell what ingredients are present and in what proportion, only spices, flavoring and perfuming agents being excepted. Such informative labeling has been demanded by consumer groups for years. The need for it is obvious. If a consumer is to use medicines intelligently, he must know what is in them. If a consumer is to spend his food dollar wisely, he must know what he is purchasing.

Mr. Speaker, the provisions of S. 5 only partially meet this need. Although S. 5 requires that the label of preparations containing two or more drugs list the active ingredients, it does not require that the proportions in which they are present be named except in the case of a few drugs considered particularly dangerous.

ALKA-SELTZER

Of how much aid, for example, would this provision of S. 5 be to a consumer who wants to know what he is taking when he downs a dose of that widely touted remedy—Alka-Seltzer? He would read the label and discover that Alka-Seltzer consists essentially of a mixture of aspirin, baking soda, and citric acid. Since innumerable car cards have vaunted the "alkalizing" effect of Alka-Seltzer, he would probably decide that an Alka-Seltzer tablet consists mainly of a dose of baking soda with a little aspirin thrown in. Actually it is just the other way around. Every Alka-Seltzer tablet contains 5.5 grains of aspirin, more than the amount in the usual aspirin tablet (Drug and Cosmetic Control, by Department of Investigation and Accounts, New York City). But if S. 5 goes into effect, the consumer will still have no way of knowing that.

OVALTINE

Nor would the type of informative labeling provided by S. 5 be of much help to the housewife who wishes to do her food purchasing intelligently. The manufacturer of Ovaltine, for example, could truthfully label his product as containing dried egg. A mother having difficulty in getting her child to eat the number of eggs prescribed by the doctor might decide that feeding him Ovaltine would be a good way to increase his egg consumption. S. 5 would not require the manufacturer to label Ovaltine so that users may know that the amount of dried egg it contains is very small indeed.

CHOCOLATE MALTED MILK

That part of the chamber of horrors prepared by the Food and Drug Administration to show the need for informative labeling of foodstuffs had an exhibit giving the composition of various brands of chocolate malted milk, a product used mainly in feeding children. Many of these chocolate malted milks contained much more sugar and cocoa than they did malted milk. If S. 5 were to become law, a mother would still have no way of knowing when she purchases such a product, whether she is paying malted milk prices for sugar and cocoa. Furthermore, it is a problem which not only affects her pocketbook but the nutrition of her children, for sugar, cocoa, and malted milk have widely different values in meeting the food needs of children. The right of farmers to know what they are feeding their stock is so well recognized that most States have laws requiring real informative labeling of feed for animals. Is the proper feeding of children less important than that of livestock?

FALSE ADVERTISING SHOULD BE ELIMINATED

Mr. Speaker, effective control of advertising is another measure which is imperative if consumer interests are to be protected, for advertising has become such a potent force that to a large degree it determines the buying habits of the Nation. The advertising provisions of S. 5 are lamentably weak. The Government may only seek an injunction in the courts to restrain the false advertising—no other penalty is provided. Consumers Union has pointed out in its March 1937 reports that—

> The practical meaning of this would be that an advertiser could "try anything once", and continue to try it for a long period while a hopelessly cumbersome enforcement machinery was being brought into action. No matter how great his falsifications, the advertiser would have nothing to fear except an admonishment to go forth and sin no more.

ADVERTISING CONTROL SHOULD BE VESTED IN THE ENFORCEMENT AGENCY

Ineffective as is the advertising control provided by S. 5, there has been a move still further to weaken it by entrusting the enforcement of this section of the bill to the Federal Trade Commission. Representative CAROLINE O'DAY has admirably set forth in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the reasons why control of advertising by the Federal Trade Commission would be highly unwise. This is an issue of such vital importance to consumers that it can hardly be overemphasized.

Mr. Speaker, the reasons why the regulation of advertising should rest with the enforcement agency are obvious. Advertising, as Mrs. O'DAY has pointed out, is but an extension of the label. In is obviously in the interest of economy and efficiency that the same agency which passes on labeling should also pass on advertising. In the past it has been necessary for the Food and Drug Administration to supply the Federal Trade Commission with technical material when the Commission wished to take action against false or misleading advertising. The necessity of two agencies dealing with the same material inevitably results in wasteful duplication of effort. Of greater importance, it results in the Federal Trade Commission, a body of people untrained in the medical field, passing on technical information, a situation which often works to the detriment of public welfare.

EXPERTS ARE FALLIBLE

Medicine, as every other profession, has its charlatans, and they are willing, for a price, to testify in support of even the worst patent medicines. Such evidence may be convincing to a layman, though an expert technician can quickly detect its fallaciousness. Ignorance of medical matters on the part of the special board of investigation of the Federal Trade Commission is the kindest interpretation that can be placed on its sanction of the advertising done for certain death-dealing nostrums.

CEASE-AND-DESIST ORDERS OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ARE FREQUENTLY IGNORED

The inadequacy of the Federal Trade Commission in protecting the interests of consumers is not a matter of conjecture. It is a matter of record. The February 11, 1937, issue of Advertising and Selling, a trade magazine, presents a gallery of cease-and-desist orders issued by the Commission and reproduces recent advertisments made for the products against which they were issued. This gallery could easily be enlarged by many other exhibits. It is apparent that cease-and-desist orders are regarded by industry as mere scraps of paper. They have no effect in stopping false and fraudulent advertising.

DELAYS ARE COMMON

Even if cease-and-desist orders were effective, relegating supervision of advertising to the Commission would still be highly undesirable from the consumer point of view. Mr. CHAPMAN, Mr. MAPES, and Mr. MERRITT have ably pointed out in the additional views of the 1936 report accompanying S. 5 that the actions of the Federal Trade Commission involve the lapse of many months and sometimes years, a period during which an offending manufacturer is unhampered in his dissemination of false information and claims.

As has been mentioned, the chief virtue of H. R. 5286, known as the consumers' union bill, is that it is a preventive measure. This holds true for false advertising. At the time of application for certificate of registration, a manufacturer must submit a statement of all the therapeutic, palliative, or other beneficial effects claimed or to be claimed for his product. If such claims cannot be substantiated by satisfactory evidence or authority, the certificate of registration is not granted. The simplicity and practicality of such a measure are apparent. Advertising would be effectively controlled without resort to long and expensive court proceedings. Worthless or vicious products could not be panned off on the poor, the gullible, and the ignorant while a cumbersome enforcement machinery was brought slowly into action, often too late to save needless suffering or death in the case of nostrums which are definitely dangerous.

PENALTIES IN H. R. 5286 ARE ADEQUATELY STRINGENT

The penalties set by H. R. 5286 for violation of the advertising provisions, while imposing no hardship on honest manufacturers, are sufficiently stringent to protect public welfare. Violations of this provision, as well as other provisions of the act, call for a public warning for the first minor offense, suspension of the certificate of registration for 1 month for a first major offense, suspension for 1 year for a second offense, and revocation of the certificate for a third offense.

I urge Congress to enact H. R. 5286.

The record of Congress the past 4 years in regard to food and drug legislation is one of which none of us can be proud. It will be a betrayal of our constituents' interests if we fail to pass a new law in the near future. It will be no less a betrayal if the new law is one which is little, if any, better than existing legislation, and even weaker in some respects. For that reason, I urge support of my H. R. 5286.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] is recognized for 20 minutes.

THE COURT QUESTION AND CONSTITUTIONAL DEMOCRACY

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, one question stalks behind every major move on Capitol Hill these days. It is this: What is to be done with the President's proposal to change the Supreme Court? It blocks action on other legislation. It delays adjournment. The struggle has taken one life. It threatens the health of others.

We had the original bill. A committee of the Congress, after 4 months of hearings and study, said:

> It is needless, futile, and dangerous. * * * It is a measure which should be so emphatically rejected that its parallel will never again be presented to the free representatives of the free people of America.

Now we have a so-called substitute and rumors of others. Of the whole business, last week we heard the respected chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the House, with his background of service here since 1913, say:

> It is unnecessary legislation.

Still the search goes on for some face-saving substitute. In all sincerity I want to say today that the life of either major party in America today is more important than the political record of any one man; and, further, that the American idea of a constitutional democracy or a republic, whichever term you prefer, is more important than the life of any political party.

And both the life of a major party and the endurance of constitutional democracy are endangered by the insistence on this legislation.

TWO SMOKE SCREENS AND TWO EMERGENCY PLEAS

The case for this proposal has been before the country under two smoke screens: A claim of usurped power by the courts, and talk of 5-to-4 decisions. And neither the original bill nor the substitutes do a thing about either matter.

The insistence upon action now is being urged on two emergency grounds: A so-called mandate to follow the President in every detail and the claim that some vast program of social legislation is imperiled unless the courts are changed. And neither of those things has any foundation in fact.

The truth is that this fight itself is the greatest bar today to completing the proper legislative program of this Congress. The truth is that America has more to fear from the destruction of constitutional democracy than it has from court decisions. And to these subjects I shall address my brief remarks.

The first smoke screen is the repeated allusion to some supposed "usurped power of the courts to pass on acts of Congress." Some people repeat that in ignorance, and some people repeat it who ought to know better.

WHAT THE CONSTITUTION SAYS

Section 1 of Article III says:

> The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish.

Section 2 says:

> The judicial power shall extend to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made under their authority.

And article VI, section 2, says:

This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof; and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land.

How can the English language be more explicit?

This Constitution and laws made in pursuance thereof shall be the supreme law of the land.

How can the courts be charged with more responsibility?

The judicial power shall extend to all cases in law arising under the Constitution and the laws of the United States.

During the debates of the Constitutional Convention it was once proposed to give the Supreme Court the right to share the right of original veto along with the Executive. But that idea was rejected on this argument by Mr. Gerry; as the Madison notes tell us:

Mr. Gerry doubts whether the judiciary ought to form a part of it as they will have a sufficient check against encroachment on their own department by their exposition of the laws, which involved a power of deciding on their constitutionality" (p. 147, Formation of the United States).

So the courts have never had an original veto. They never step out and say that a law is unconstitutional; but when someone feels substantially injured by a law and comes before the court, the judges lay the law down by the Constitution and merely say whether the law is in pursuance of the supreme law of the land or not.

In Marbury against Madison, Chief Justice Marshall said:

The Constitution is either a superior paramount law, unchangeable by ordinary means, or it is on a level with ordinary legislative acts, and like other acts, is alterable when the legislature shall please to alter it.

But the Constitution expressly reserved the right of amendment to the States and the people and provided a method for amendment. If the Constitution could be amended by legislative acts, this power of the people would mean nothing. In at least seven cases before the Constitution was framed, State courts had declared State laws to be contrary to State constitutions. The Federal Constitution was written with this background of accepted power in the courts.

The claim of a usurped power, moreover, overlooks the very necessity for the power. When laws conflict, what is the ruling law? When legislative acts conflict with the Constitution, which controls? When public officials harass citizens and violate their constitutional guaranties, who is to stop them if not the courts?

AND AS FOR 5-TO-4 DECISIONS

The second smoke screen is reference to 5-to-4 decisions and talk about the whim of one man deciding matters. Of course, it is not the whim of one man but the conclusions of five men in a close question. And whatever the situation, the proposals brought forward do nothing about changing that.

A court of 15 men can split 8 to 7, which is closer fractionally than 5 to 4. A court of 11 can split 6 to 5. And under the so-called substitute we will have Supreme Courts of 10, 12, and 14, so that they could split 5 to 5, 6 to 6, and 7 to 7. Then lower court judgments would stand by default; thus determination of constitutionality would be left finally to lower courts, where it does not properly rest.

Not only that, but New Deal legislation has been upheld by 5-to-4 decisions on more important matters than it has been let down. I refer to the Gold Clause cases.

Furthermore, the record shows that of 13 acts of Congress held unconstitutional in the period from 1934 to 1937, only 3 were by 5-to-4 decisions. In the same time 19 Federal acts were sustained—3 by 5-to-4 decisions, 2 had one adverse vote, and the others were sustained unanimously.

In the same time over 220 acts of Congress were set aside by Presidential veto, I might add, if we want really to see where one man sets aside the will of Congress.

During the same years 54 State acts were held unconstitutional, 36 of them unanimously and only 2 by 5-to-4 decisions. During the same time, of 87 State powers upheld, 78 were by unanimous decisions and only 6 by 5 to 4.

It is plain that the 5-to-4 question has been talked about out of all proportion to its importance and that the New Deal has won by 5 to 4 more than it has lost. Some questions are naturally close questions, and they will be, no matter how many judges you place on the bench.

The truth is that, despite the talk about usurped power and 5-to-4 decisions, the proposals before us do not change that situation one iota. The Supreme Court will still pass on the constitutionality of questions properly submitted to it, as it must, if we are to retain a constitutional democracy. This is not a usurped power but to take it away except by constitutional amendment would be usurpation.

The only way in which new judges can guarantee different decisions will be to agree to take orders on their decisions, an agreement which would violate their oath of office and disqualify them for service. If their decisions can be predicted by the one who appoints them, the President can get rid of 5-to-4 decisions, for one of the judges he aimed at has resigned.

So much for the smoke-screen excuses. The facts refute them and the proposals do nothing about them.

TURNING TO THE EMERGENCY PLEAS

But now we hear, "The 1936 election was a mandate. We have a responsibility."

No one can pretend that the 1936 election was any mandate whatsoever to attack the Supreme Court. The issue was raised in the campaign but was promptly and repeatedly denied by administration spokesmen from coast to coast. The people reelected the President, but not on any promise that he would convert the courts into echoes for the Executive voice.

This mandate argument is the last argument I ever expected to hear in America. It sounds like Hitler. But here it is being offered by men who call themselves Democrats.

If the American system of government means anything, it means that we have tried to establish a government in which the majority rules with a decent respect for the rights of minorities. That is why we have a Constitution, to insure that respect—and a Court to enforce it. Our system means that no party can ever get a mandate which will permit it to ride roughshod over the rights of minorities and individuals as guaranteed by the Constitution.

The history of free government is the story of man's struggle to free people from arbitrary power, whether that power rests on a personal army, an organized minority, or the mandate of a majority. Mob rule is not free government. As the inscription over the doorway at the Department of Justice Building says, "No free government can survive that is not based on the supremacy of law."

Personally, I care not whether you call our Government a republic or a constitutional democracy. Either term means a representative form of government, with the rights of the people protected in basic law. And there is all the difference in the world between that kind of government and a government that shifts with every changing wind. In the one you have order and safety and progress; in the other you have insecurity, reaction, and chaos.

We went to war to make the world "safe for democracy." A Member on this floor supporting these Court changes recently said, "I insist on the defense of democracy", meaning the election-mandate argument. The World War spawned, right and left, the kind of democracies he had in mind—democracies where today's vote surrenders blanket powers to popular leaders. Today those peoples have lost their courts, and their laws are the whims of one man. And those peoples are marching down that one-way road to war and revolution which every one-man government eventually travels. They have mistaken demagogy for democracy.

EVERY PRESIDENT WILL HAVE A MANDATE

Mr. Speaker, I do not approach this problem with any personal feeling against the author of the original proposals. I share with other people of this country an admiration for the courage with which he attacked the problems of the dismal day when he entered upon his duties. I share with them a gratitude for the help he has extended on many fronts of the depression. But I would be untrue to the people and I would confer no favor on him if I yielded my convictions on this subject.

I have not opposed what I thought was proper judicial reform. I voted for both the Sumners proposals to permit Supreme Court Judges to retire and to permit direct appeal in constitutional questions on motion of the Attorney General. But I cannot support any measure which proposes to make the courts mere ratifying echoes for the Executive voice. For, mark this, we cannot extend to one President the courtesy of a sympathetic, subjected Court and ever deny that courtesy to succeeding Presidents.

Every President hereafter will have his problems to solve. His champions will point to their mandate from the people. The machinery of justice will become but a camouflage for the Big Chief's club, and you will have one-man government—call it any name you will. It will only be demagogy, a mockery of democracy.

James Truslow Adams, one of America's outstanding students of history, in a letter under date of July 14, 1937, says:

> It is to my mind a travesty on democratic government to claim, because the President received 27,000,000 votes running on a platform which not only did not hint at this act but on the contrary disclaiming all intention of acting, except within both the letter and the spirit of the Constitution, that he received a mandate to do anything he liked. If that argument is sound, then any President who received a large majority would be entitled to become a dictator, revealing beforehand to neither the people nor party leaders what his intentions might be.

I beg of each one of you to look into the future 4, 8, 12, 16, or 20 years from now and ask yourself if you want to establish any such idea that the Executive is to command the courts.

WHAT LEGISLATION IS IN DANGER?

Finally, we are told that this program is needed or some vague program of social legislation will be imperiled.

Mr. Majority Leader, what are the social objectives that will be in danger? The people are alarmed by this argument. They have seen the Federal Government enter every activity of business and industrial life. They have seen Federal inspectors and investigators on farms and in factories. They have seen new employees swarm into county-seat towns until the average courthouse today has more persons holding commissions from Washington than are chosen by the local electors. What more is to come? What is the plan behind this plan? Is it so unconstitutional that the President must control the Court?

It is true that we live in a changing world. But constitutions, if they are for anything, are expressly for the safety of the people in times of confusion. When people cannot see the woods for the trees, they need the best guidance that has been evolved in the history of the race.

The editor of the New York Times, in Sunday's paper, says:

> The philosophies which seem to guide the fragments of civilization in their madly whirling courses are violent, or fatalistic, or confused. A madman's whim may drown a continent in blood. • • • But there is another emotion that may be growing, underground in the dictator-ruled countries, more openly in those that are still democratic—a resentment against regimentation, against the appeals to hate, against the hideous drumming-up of the instinct to kill.
> Surely the mass of mankind—or rather the multifarious, many millionfold individuals who make up that mass—want chiefly to be let alone to do their work, to love, have children, play, sleep easily at night. And surely this deep racial desire will not forever be frustrated. Surely there will be a turning of the bitter tide which has threatened to drown us; surely there will be an upsurge of a real humanity, and a resumption of that march toward the stars which began so long ago in the fens of northern Europe and on the plains of Egypt and Mesopotamia.

We all thrill to the cry of progress and new freedom. We all regret the lag between what we do and what we desire. But surely the experience of history is wiser than the excitement of today. When the nobles wrested the Magna Carta from King John they did not get all they wanted nor perhaps as much as they thought they got. But they broke into that old idea that the ruler was to be lawgiver, judge, and executioner. And people fighting for human freedom have pointed to the Magna Carta ever since. Today it is proposed that we shall reverse human progress and put the courts back into the hands of the Executive with such devices as will let him insure that their opinions will be satisfactory to him.

That is not the road to freedom; it is not the mark of progress; it is not true democracy. If the history of nations teaches anything, it teaches that rights of the people once yielded to rulers for good and gentle purposes are won back only by sacrifice and bloodshed. I do not question the motives of those who support these proposals, but I can plead with you that we shall not let this Congress be known as the Congress which put law, judgment, and execution back into the person of one man.

The tampering with words, the change of numbers, fail to destroy the menace of this measure. The substitution of the word "may" for the word "shall" in the substitute bill only increases the invitation to Executive domination of the Court. "Decide so-and-so, or else—." That is the effect of such a device. It means a club over the courts!

What possible piece of social legislation will be outlawed by the courts as now constituted that will compare in value with the cost of losing the independence of the judiciary? What step in social welfare can we not now take that is worth the surrender of our system of checks and balances?

THE PEOPLE SENSE THE DANGERS

Mr. Speaker, the people of America have recoiled from this proposal because they sense the inherent dangers in it. They may not be able to recite the page and the number, but they know that in the courts they have refuge against oppression by arbitrary power whether exercised by an organized minority or a temporary majority. They do not pretend to know the technicalities on which a Court may find one way in one case and apparently another way in a somewhat similar case, but they do know this: That where government merges the three branches of government—executive, legislative, and judicial—into one, that there liberty disappears!

In this day, elsewhere, they have seen courts become devices to wipe out those who disagree with the philosophy of those in power. Our people simply do not want to move in that direction.

The other day I received a letter from a man whom I know suffered from the depression. To get food for an invalid wife he resigned from a small position in party organization so that he could get on the relief rolls. He wrote me: "Do not let them take the courts. The people here are against it almost to a man—and every woman." I thrilled when I read those words, for I know the hardships those people have seen. "Almost to a man—and every woman." I read those words with some of the same surging pride I feel when I see gold-star mothers accept our poor praise on Memorial Day.

And then I got a post card from a woman one day. Just a 1-cent card, but on it she wrote, "As I understand it, he complains the Court won't cooperate." "But how", she asked, "how can a court cooperate with a litigant?"

There is a common sense in the common people, Mr. Speaker. I pray God that this body shall have as much in our deliberations on this matter. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Under a previous special order of the House, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHANNON] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to read and comment upon a most enlightening telegram sent out on July 14, 1937, over the signature of one Frank E. Gannett. I am sure Mr. Gannett exercised care in selecting those to whom the telegram should be sent. Nevertheless he made a mistake when he sent one of the messages to that great man and eminent lawyer, Mr. Frank P. Walsh, who immediately made it public. The telegram reads:

NEW YORK, N. Y., July 14, 1937.

FRANK PATRICK WALSH,
70 Pine Street, New York:

Emergency appeal from Senators leading Court fight prompts this telegram. Immediate vote on Court packing bill would be dangerously close. Our committee is asked quickly to renew aggressive Nation-wide drive to assure defeat. Also requested to supply funds to distribute Senators' speeches to their constituents to offset reprisals by Farley machine.

If court battle is lost, next move will be to jam through pending bills setting up one-man rule over industry, agriculture, and labor. Our fight will build opposition to these other dictatorial measures.

Senator McCARRAN rose from sick bed, defied Farley's threat to end his political career, and appealed to Nation: "It is time for the people to rise in defense of their Government."

Will you respond to Senator's appeal with financial support? This committee has organization and material to reach immediately million key individuals.

Please mail check today to Sumner Gerard, treasurer, 205 East Forty-second Street, New York City. Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER now reported wavering; telegraph or write your protest to him.

FRANK E. GANNETT,
Chairman, National Committee to Uphold Constitutional Government.

He brazenly states that this telegram was sent in response to an emergency appeal from Senators opposing the administration.

Mr. Gannett and his committee have sent out tons of literature against the Court bill and other pending legislation. I hold in my hand several letters and bulletins issued by this superlobbyist. In one of the communications, dated April 20, 1937, Mr. Gannett said this:

Please watch your mail for addresses of Senators GLASS, BORAH, and WHEELER, and Congressman PETTENGILL coming to you under their frank. These or similar addresses are being mailed to 1,000,000 key individuals in cities and to 2,500,000 rural readers in pivotal States. They should go to all farmers. Thousands of workers in the city should receive them. The cost to print, address, and mail (under frank) is from one-half to nine-tenths of a cent each. We will send you 100 copies free.

He explained that the copies of these selected speeches would be sent in franked envelopes, and needed only be addressed and mailed, no postage required. Mr. Gannett is indeed very generous in his use of the franking privilege extended to Members of Congress.

Every phase of the Gannett vilifying campaign has been thought out to the minutest detail. Nothing is left to the imagination or intelligence of those receiving his propaganda. They are told what to read, they are told what to write, and they are told to whom to write it. But the crowning achievement of the Gannett brain is a printed letter, addressed to himself and attached to his communication of April 20, which he asks his readers to sign and mail to him. In this prepared reply Mr. Gannett has you say:

I agree with you that Louis J. Taber's speech is valuable reading for farmers and others.

He tells you to agree with him that Mr. Taber made a fine speech, whether you read it or not. He infers that he is working for the best interests of the farmers and for the best interests of labor. Yet in the telegram I have just read, which he sent to a select group, Mr. Gannett warns that the passage of the Court bill might be followed by the enactment of the pending agricultural and labor bills, adding that his fight would build opposition to these measures.

How can he be sincere in his claim that he is working for the farmers and for labor and at the same time appeal for funds to "build opposition" to the very measures designed to benefit these groups?

In his communication of April 20, as in all others sent out by him, Mr. Gannett closed with an urgent appeal for funds. He said:

To carry through effectively, this committee needs an additional $100,000. If you have already contributed what you can afford, please help enlist the support of friends and associates. Ask them to use the enclosed subscription blanks. Your personal help is needed. It will cost some sacrifice.

He wants you to sacrifice and to ask your friends and associates to sacrifice so that he may carry on his self-imposed task. And he enclosed several subscription blanks to simplify, as much as possible, the forwarding of contributions.

Another bulletin issued by the Gannett committee announced that speeches of the leaders opposing the Court bill had been electrically transcribed and were available to radio stations without charge. If the radio stations would just give the time, Gannett would furnish the "canned" music.

Let us examine briefly the history of this "kept" man of the barons of riches whose denunciations of all remedial legislation proposed by this administration are reverberating throughout the length and breadth of this land.

Frank E. Gannett is the man who, when he needed funds to finance four of the newspapers in his chain, obtained $2,000,000 from the International Paper Co. The International Paper Co. was a subsidiary of that immense trust, the International Paper & Power Co., and itself—the International Paper Co.—derived more than half of its income from utility holdings, as distinguished from its newsprint business. The funds so borrowed by Mr. Gannett were not repaid until after the exposure of the loans at public hearings in an investigation of the Federal Trade Commission. According to the Federal Trade Commission's report, made to Congress in 1934, the International Paper Co. held, in 1929, as security for the loan, $1,954,000 of notes and 400 shares of common stock of the Brooklyn Daily Eagle Corporation, as well as lesser amounts of securities or interests in other Gannett newspapers. The 400 shares of common stock of the Brooklyn Daily Eagle Corporation represented 40 percent of that corporation's outstanding common stock.

Hence it can be seen that Mr. Gannett is a product of the trusts. He is trust-made, trust-branded, trust-minded, and is in every sense a typical agent of the trusts. And yet he has the effrontery to list among the speeches he is sending out under frank one by Senator WILLIAM E. BORAH, a man who gained national prominence largely through his fight against trusts and monopolies. But perhaps we should not be too critical of Mr. Gannett's tactics, for, as the old proverb goes, even "the devil can cite Scripture for his purpose."

Gannett is a Republican in politics. He was a Vice-Presidential candidate at the Republican national convention in the last campaign, and was in the forefront in all activities leading up to the political obliteration of Alfred Landon.

I offer this verbal portrait of Gannett as a sort of bill of discovery, so that those who receive his printed matter may know the manner of man that he is. He and his organization are the legitimate offsprings of the Liberty League, operating under the misleading appellation "National Committee to Uphold Constitutional Government." And it is a political campaign that he is carrying on. Time after time in his letters he refers to the fact that he and his organization will carry forward into 1938 and 1940 the issues of today.

Let no one be led astray by the noisy pratings and intense activities of Mr. Gannett and his ilk. In all questions involving the welfare of mankind there is room enough for all citizens to participate; but it is not needed, it is not proper, that Citizen Gannett should sit at the head of the table. The MacGregor at the table should be the man who was overwhelmingly chosen by the people of this country to be their leader—Franklin D. Roosevelt. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KELLER. Is this the same Gannett who is tax-dodging to the extent of $3,000,000 at the present time?

Mr. SHANNON. I am not familiar with that, so I could not answer the question.

Mr. KELLER. I understand that is the case.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McLEAN] for 20 minutes.

SIX-YEAR TERM FOR THE PRESIDENT

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, there is pending in the House a resolution introduced by me the purpose of which is to submit to the people an amendment to the Constitution providing that the President of the United States should be elected for a term of 6 years and be ineligible to succeed himself. The suggestion is not new. It gave the delegates who formulated the Constitution considerable difficulty in the Constitutional Convention, and cannot be said to have been finally settled by the adoption of the Constitution. It has been frequently discussed since Washington was President, with more or less emphasis, according to the circumstances which brought the discussion about. It was much discussed after the campaign of 1932. In the heat of that campaign, President Hoover had been drawn from the White House to tour the country for political purposes. The public reaction was that it was inevitable that this should result in the neglect of his official duties at a time when his presence was needed at the Capital. There was sharp criticism, with agitation for some method that would prevent a recurrence of such a situation, and the single but longer term was offered as a solution.

A consideration of the question must have its political aspects, but it portends a reform in our system of Government of such importance that it can be set aside from partisan politics. In fact, all major political parties from time to time have favored the change, and the benefits to be derived make it one of the questions upon which all Americans, irrespective of political affiliations, should be able to agree.

In the preparation of these observations I have been generously assisted by Dr. Clarence R. Williams, a member of the Legislative Reference Service staff of the Library of Congress, who has summarized the proposals for a 6-year term in a statement entitled "A 6-Year Term for the President", from which I take the following historical facts:

The present plan under which our Presidents are elected for a term of 4 years with no restrictions upon their eligibility for subsequent service, except the precedent established by Washington in refusing a third term, was the plan finally determined upon by the Constitutional Convention after much discussion and compromise and in the face of profound differences of opinion. These differences of opinion were primarily due to what have been called "the compromises of the Constitution." These were three in number. The first, which concerns this discussion, dealt with the fundamental conflict between those who desired a strong central authority and those who feared the extension of Executive power. This was compromised by investing the President of the Republic with great powers, but for a limited term only, and by a complicated system of "checks and balances", whereby the exercise of his power was at divers points and in various ways subjected to the control of Congress or of the Senate, and how long this power should be invested in a single individual was the difficulty presented.

The first recorded action in the Convention was the resolution of Randolph, presented as a part of the Virginia plan on May 29, 1787, wherein it was proposed that the National Executive—

> Be chosen by the National Legislature for the term of ——— years, * * * and to be ineligible a second time.

It is important to note that, in considering the length of the term of the President and the matter of whether or not he should be eligible for reelection, the opinion of the delegates depended upon the mode of election. If the National Legislature was to choose the President, a long term with no reelection was favored by most. If the choice was by some other method, a short term with possibility of reelection was generally favored. This fact is usually overlooked in debates today. Charles Warren in his book, The Making of the Constitution, published in 1928, says (p. 365):

> Votes of the Federal Convention are quoted as if they represented an absolute expression of opinion of views as to the proper term of the Presidential office, whereas, in fact, they should be considered as expressing the views of such a term only in its relation to the specific mode of election which was being concurrently voted.

On June 2, when the mode of election was to be by the National Legislature, it was actually voted, and it was decided also, that the President should serve for 7 years and be ineligible for reelection. On July 17, the ineligibility for a second term was struck out, but in spite of an effort to change the term from 7 years, this was not agreed to (Hunt and Scott, Madison's Debates, pp. 271 and 274). On July 19, Luther Martin would reinstate ineligibility, but was defeated, but the term was made 6 years when election was to be by electors. On July 24 the Convention which had been favoring election of the President by electors went back to election by the National Legislature, which necessitated reconsideration of length of term and eligibility for reelection. Terms of 8, 11, 15, and 20 years were suggested, but not voted on and the following day, July 25, there were other proposals offered. On July 26, having already returned to the plan of choice by National Legislature, the Convention returned to the original proposal of Randolph and voted for 7 years and no reelection. Rotation in office was favored by our statesmen of the Revolution, and the Articles of Confederation allowed no Member of Congress to serve more than 3 years in any 6 years.

The report of the Committee on Detail proposed that the President should be elected by ballot of the National Legislature, but it did not specify whether by separate or joint ballot. If by joint ballot the small States would have less influence. This seems to have turned the thoughts of some to favor election by electors chosen by the people, which had been defeated June 2, adopted July 19, and rejected July 24. On August 24 Gouverneur Morris made a strong speech on the dangers of choice by the National Legislature and favored choice by electors chosen by the people. Five States voted for and six against the proposal of Morris.

The report of a committee on postponed matters, made on September 4, finally solved the difficult question of the method of the election of the President in favor of electors; but if no person received a majority, the Senate was to elect. The term of the President was to be 4 years, with no restrictions as to the eligibility for reelection. On September 6 the Convention was ready to decide the length of the term. An attempt was made to fix the term at 7 years, which was defeated, as was the proposal to fix it at 6 years. The 4-year term was suggested by the committee and accepted. If electors failed to choose, election was to be by the Senate. But, on the proposal of Roger Sherman, of Connecticut, this was changed to election by the House, but in such a choice each State should have but one vote. This was carried, only Delaware dissenting.

The mode of choosing the President has been called "the most difficult of solution of any of the tasks before the Convention", and Madison later confessed in a letter to George Hay, August 23, 1823, that the final arrangement—

> Took place in the latter stage of the session, and it was not exempt from a degree of hurrying influence produced by fatigue and impatience in all such bodies, though the degree was much less than usually prevails in them.

Nevertheless, Hamilton, in the Federalist (no. 78) spoke of it as—

> Almost the only part of the system of any consequence which * * * escaped without severe censure.

Even Richard Henry Lee, an ardent opponent of the Constitution, confessed "the election of both Vice President and President seems to be properly secured." But it remained in operation less than 20 years before being altered by the twelfth amendment.

The twelfth amendment came about as a result of a tie vote for President between Thomas Jefferson and Aaron Burr, over which a very bitter controversy arose, to be finally compromised by an arrangement between Jefferson and Alexander Hamilton whereby Hamilton furnished enough votes in the House of Representatives to elect Jefferson President, resulting in the election of Aaron Burr as Vice President, in return for Jefferson giving Hamilton sufficient support to enact his monetary program.

During the first century under the Constitution over 125 amendments were submitted to change the term of the President and to fix the period of eligibility. More than 50 of them proposed to fix the term at 6 years. In 1826 such an amendment was proposed for the first time by Hemphill, of Pennsylvania. At different subsequent periods this change was advocated. That the President should be ineligible for reelection was stipulated in all but 14 of these proposals. Over 90 proposed amendments would restrict a President to a single term. In each of his annual messages Andrew Jackson recommended to Congress an amendment restricting the eligibility of any person to one term of 4 or 6 years, but, as Jackson himself took a second term, his consistency was called in question (Niles Register, vol. XL, pp.

387–389). During the period of reconstruction, amendments were frequently presented making the President ineligible for a second term. In 1875 the House Committee on the Judiciary proposed the term of the President be 6 years, and he be ineligible to reelection, which came to a vote, but failed to receive the necessary two-thirds. In the next Congress the majority report of the Committee on the Judiciary favored 4 years, the minority 6, but both agreed on a single term. The highest vote for any of the proposed amendments in the House was 145 to 108. Amendments limiting the President to one term of 6 years were favorite propositions during the period just before 1889.

During the second century under the Constitution—prior to 1928—some 85 proposals regarding the term of office of the President and his eligibility for reelection have been offered. These were especially numerous in 1892–93 after Cleveland was up for reelection, and in 1912–13 after Roosevelt sought another term. Of the 14 amendments submitted at the Cleveland peak, 7 provided for a 6-year term with no reeligibility. During the Rooseveltian peak 16 of the 22 amendments offered a 6-year period with ineligibility for a second term. It is evident that a 6-year term with no reelection has been the most favored plan of late, being introduced no less than 63 times—before 1928. This proposal once passed the Senate after a long debate from March 11, 1912, extending through the elections of 1912 until February 1, 1913, when the Senate passed Senate Joint Resolution 78 by a vote of 47 to 23. The House referred it to its Committee on Judiciary, and it was not reported out before the close of the session. Herman V. Ames, Proposed Amendments to the Constitution of the United States During the First Century of Its History (1897), and M. A. Musmanno, Proposed Amendments to the Constitution, Seventieth Congress, second session, House Document No. 551 (1929), are interesting studies in this connection.

Notwithstanding all of the efforts that have been made to effect this suggested reform, the statesman of today is better able to determine it because of the actual experiences we have had since the beginning of the Government, many of them in recent times, but it takes some great crisis to bring the American people to a realization of many of their problems. We have been on the verge of such a situation many times which should give us cause to very seriously consider this proposal.

The country is entitled to the most efficient service that its servants can give. The physical and mental strain attributable to the complexity of our civilization and the magnitude of our affairs place a burden upon the encumbent of the Presidential office which would seem to be entirely too great for any individual to bear. Also, there would be greater inducement to statesmanship if the present system, with its temptation to influence one's judgment through political considerations in anticipation of reelection, were eliminated. It has been suggested, too, that by conserving the health of our Presidents we would have available in their retirement for the public service a group of men possessing the confidence and esteem of the people of the country with training and experience in national and international affairs.

In our own time I have observed four Presidents in political campaigns and have had occasion to observe the toll which physical strain is apt to take of men who labor under the terrific responsibilities of the Presidential office, and how the interest of the country might be jeopardized as a result.

During the political campaign of 1912 President Taft visited New Jersey. He was forced into a political campaign and compelled to tour the country; and when he arrived in my county he was incapable of making a public address, to say nothing of discharging his official duties. It so happened, however, that his defeat, after a 4-year term in the White House, was a blessing. He was subsequently appointed Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States and served with distinction.

About the middle of his second term President Wilson was stricken while touring the country in the hope of obtaining support of his program for the League of Nations, and it is questionable whether from that time on for a period of almost 2 years he was capable of discharging the duties of President.

The sudden death of Mr. Coolidge came as no surprise to those who were familiar with the real reason why he "did not choose to run" again for President, and physicians attribute his physical condition to his service as President. The Philadelphia Record, on January 10, 1933, editorially, under the caption "Help Save Our Presidents", stated:

> Calvin Coolidge's father, Col. John Coolidge, died at 80. The Coolidges are a long-lived family, but Calvin Coolidge died at 60. Under normal conditions he might have had two decades of public service before him. What cut short his life? Those who have seen pictures of the smooth-faced man who went into the Presidency in 1923 and Coolidge's lined and wrinkled face when he went out in 1929 show that the cares of his high office played a great part in bringing on his untimely end.

When Mr. Hoover retired, a United Press writer made the observation that "4 years in the White House left their deep mark upon Herbert Hoover."

These illustrations ought to be sufficient to show the effect, the anxiety, and strain of the Presidential office has on men capable of attaining this high office, much of which would be eliminated if so much of the physical strain and anxiety incident to a campaign for reelection and the temptation to think and act along political lines were eliminated by placing the President in a position of dignity and freedom of action, which is impossible when the frailties of humankind are tempered with self-interest. The national policy would be strengthened by eliminating the reelection requirement.

Hon. Frank O. Lowden, former Governor of Illinois, and sagacious elder statesman, has given considerable thought to this subject. His views are fully set forth in an interview published in the New York Sun on February 6, 1933. Up to that time, for a period of 30 years, he had urged a change in the tenure of the Presidential and gubernatorial offices. Starting in 1906 Mr. Lowden, while a Member of Congress, introduced a resolution in three successive Congresses providing for a 6-year term for the President, and, when chosen Governor of Illinois in 1916, he at once let it be known that he was putting into practice his principles and would not seek a second term. He says:

> The Executive now aspires to a second term as an endorsement of his first. Denial of reelection is considered a rebuke. As a result, regardless of how high-minded or patriotic the President may be, this feeling of concern over reelection causes him to be influenced unconsciously in both appointments and policies, with a view of renomination and reelection. Experience has shown that a person who goes into office for a definite period will meet the duties that are laid upon him with better results than if his judgment is influenced by a desire for a second term.

Rabbi Silberfeld, who has occupied the pulpit of Temple B'nai Abraham in Newark, N. J., since 1902, in an article in the Newark Sunday Call approved the proposal in the following:

> I consider the office of President of the United States so august, so dignified, so imposing that I think it almost a sacrilege when that office is besmirched by personal attacks upon its incumbent. We must not forget that that office is undoubtedly the highest honor that could be bestowed upon any mortal being, that in his person the President of the United States represents the greatest, the most powerful, and most advanced nation on God's footstool, that he speaks in the name of 125,000,000 of freemen; and for the holder of that exalted office to be exposed to personal attack and abuse is most degrading to the office of the Presidency, and should not be tolerated even under the guise of free speech.
> Of course, the excuse for such vulgarity is that a President who runs for reelection is not only the President but also a candidate for the Presidency, and in this latter capacity he has to expect political attacks, which often trespass beyond the lines of decency and respect. And that is exactly what should be avoided if the reputation of democracy is to be preserved without stain or blemish. There is only one way how this could be accomplished, and that is by a constitutional provision that a President should not be eligible for reelection, and owing to the fact that it takes almost 4 years to familiarize oneself with the arduous duties and complicated responsibilities of the Presidency, the term of the President should be extended to 6 years, with no possibility for reelection. This solution has been suggested in many quarters before, and at every Presidential election it gains in strength.

Frank Kent, the famed political commentator, in an article in the Baltimore Sun of December 16, 1936, after reviewing many reasons for the change, said:

> Altogether there has been no period when the single term suggestion appeared so timely and so desirable; nor one when it seemed more certain to have public sentiment behind it.

The objectors to a change contend that a person serving under the proposed plan would be more susceptible to paying political debts during a single term, being without any limitation or restraint.

The strongest opponent of any change was President Wilson, who is given credit for having defeated it in 1913. At that time, as we have seen, a resolution providing for the necessary constitutional amendment had passed the Senate and was pending in the House of Representatives. Mr. Wilson made known his objection in a letter to Hon. A. Mitchell Palmer, then a Member of Congress, in which he said:

> Four years is too long a term for a President who is not a true spokesman for the people, who is imposed upon, and does not lead. It is too short a time for a President who is doing or attempting a great work of reform and who has not had time to finish it. To change the term to 6 years would be to increase the likelihood of its being too long without any assurance that it would in happy cases be long enough.

It seems to me that Mr. Wilson overlooked the fact that in our system of government we look to more than one source for limitation and restraint upon our various departments of Government. The whole idea of our Constitution is one of checks and balances.

We have seen from time to time how a biennial election of Congress has its effect in molding policies and administrative action to public opinion. This was the intention of the framers of the Constitution when the term of Congressmen was fixed at 2 years. Also we are a Government of principles and not of individuals, and principles of reform when put in motion, if sound, will find their fruition of their own force and power. A change of administration never has, and never will, retard rightful progress. A single 6-year term filled by an Executive who knows that he will not seek reelection will be more productive than two 4-year terms which involve all of the bargaining and compromise frequently resorted to with the hope of reelection. With a single term the health of the President will be conserved, his judgment will be uninfluenced by political consideration of self-interest. There will be no possibility of neglect of duties, such as must necessarily result when a President is involved and actually engaged in a political campaign. The public welfare demands that everything possible be done to relieve the President of physical and mental strain, and place him in a position where none other than consideration of the general good will control his motives and influence his actions.

I first introduced this resolution in the first session of the Seventy-third Congress, but to have pressed it at that time in the first term of the President and under conditions then existing would have weakened the merits of the proposal by the criticism that it was made entirely for political purposes. Now seems the opportune time for its consideration. Sufficient time has elapsed since the last campaign and the next is so far ahead that we could be in no better position for academic discussion, free from personal interest or political bias. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] has declared himself in favor of the suggestion and has introduced in the Senate the necessary legislation to bring it about. I have hoped that his political affiliation with the party in power might have advanced it and caused it to be presented to the people at this session of Congress.

I am firmly convinced that in course of time the need for this change in our system of government will be taken seriously and be adopted. I trust it will not come as a result of some tragedy in our public life. It will be my effort to convince my colleagues of its wisdom and continually press for appropriate action to bring it about.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JULY 21, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Gracious God, our Father in Heaven, incline our hearts to do Thy will. We thank Thee for sustaining faith and for the star of hope. We praise Thee for our Republic. Its genius assures every citizen the right to think his own thoughts, to enjoy the fruits of his own labors and to worship according to the dictates of his own conscience. We pray Thee that we may ever hold sacred these inalienable rights and guard them against all intrusions. We ask Thee, our Father, to help us cherish them in the teaching and in the spirit of our most holy faith. May we harmonize our thoughts with Thy thoughts, our ways with Thy ways, and submit our wills to Thine. Clothe us each day with the spirit of the golden rule: All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them. In our Savior's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SPECIAL CLERK TO THE MINORITY

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 281

Resolved, That under authority of the act making appropriations for the legislative establishment for the fiscal year 1938, George P. Darrow is hereby named a special clerk to the minority of the House as successor to Joseph G. Rodgers, deceased, effective July 13, 1937.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a radio talk of mine over the Pan American radio station.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

BONNEVILLE DAM

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 4 minutes and to read a telegram from the Jackson Club of Portland, Oreg.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, the telegram is dated Portland, Oreg., and reads as follows:

PORTLAND, OREG., July 17, 1937.

Hon. WALTER M. PIERCE,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Motion carried at regular monthly meeting, July 15, to send you the following, since you mention J. D. Ross, of Seattle, as Bonneville Dam administrator: Jackson Club of Oregon wishes to inquire which State you represent in Congress—Washington or Oregon?

CLAUDE KEMP, President.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Who sent that telegram?

Mr. PIERCE. It is from the president of the Jackson Club in Portland, Oreg.

Mr. RANKIN. I do not know how the gentleman from Oregon feels about it, but, in my opinion, J. D. Ross is doing more for the cause of public power in this country and for the consumers who pay the bills than almost any other man in America. He is doing more for the people of the State of Oregon and will do more for the State of Oregon than will any of those men who are criticizing him. I hope, if this bill goes through—and I believe it will—I hope the President will do the State of Oregon and the State of Washington the kindness of putting J. D. Ross in charge of it.

Let me say further that I also hope the bill for unified control goes through, in order that when Mr. Ross takes charge, or whatever administrator may be appointed takes charge, he can go ahead and operate that great plant for the benefit of the people in the far West.

Mr. PIERCE. I thank the gentleman for his statement, especially with respect to unified control at Bonneville.

Mr. Speaker, my reply to this telegram is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 20, 1937.

Mr. CLAUDE KEMP,
President, Jackson Club, Portland, Oreg.

MY DEAR MR. KEMP: It certainly interests me to answer your amazing telegram of July 17, 1937, which you signed as president of the Jackson Club of Oregon. I do not know what called forth this telegram, unless it might have been a report in the press that when questioned I expressed confidence in Mr. J. D. Ross, who had been mentioned by the newspapers as the possible choice of the President for administrator at Bonneville.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman states he does not know what brought forth that telegram. I think I know what brought it forth. There have been tools of the Power Trust lobbying against unified control ever since the Bonneville bill has been before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. They are trying to get control of that power for a few interests in order to shut the door in the faces of the power consumers in the States of Oregon, Washington, Idaho, and the surrounding territory.

It is the old game of the Power Trust trying to get a monopoly of the power to be generated at one of these public projects. This is one time they are going to fail. We are going to save Bonneville for the people of that great western country.

Mr. PIERCE (reading):

I was a charter member of the Jackson Club of Oregon. Until I came to Congress I had missed only two annual meetings in a quarter of a century. I have a great affection for the club and its membership. I do not believe that a representative gathering of those members did make such an inquiry as that given in the telegram which I now quote. I am sending this letter to all the members of the Jackson Club, and want them to see the text of the telegram to which I am replying.

PORTLAND, OREG., July 17, 1937.

Motion carried at regular monthly meeting July 15 to send you the following, since you mention J. D. Ross, of Seattle, as Bonneville Dam administrator, Jackson Club of Oregon wishes to inquire which State you represent in Congress—Washington or Oregon.

CLAUDE KEMP, President,
1040 S. W. Washington.

Officially I do represent in Congress the Second District of Oregon. No one from that district has ever questioned my interest in the Bonneville matter. My interest in Bonneville legislation and administration extends far beyond the boundaries of my own district, and embraces not only the State but the welfare of the Northwest; and, above all, I desire a shining example in Bonneville for the whole country.

I am willing to trust, in the selection of administrator at Bonneville, the administration which gave us Bonneville. These criticisms and bitter expressions coming from Oregon by telegram and in the press are most unfortunate because they reflect upon the administration which is solely responsible for the project. Expressions are premature because the Bonneville bill has not yet passed Congress. It is certainly unfortunate to have the bill called for action on the coming Friday while pettiness, criticism over reported administrative choice, and contention over our great gift is the order of the day in Oregon. There should be no interstate strife over this great project. Bonneville does not belong solely to the people of Portland, nor even to Oregon and Washington. We owe it to the vision and courage of our President. To use his own words, "It is to be used as a yardstick so consumers may know the real cost of electric energy." It is national in its scope.

As far as Oregon is concerned, I am vastly more interested in the welfare of a million people than I am in a job for one.

I believe that my public life of nearly a half century in Oregon does not make it necessary for me to assure you nor the Jackson Club, nor anyone in Oregon, that I represent the people who earn their living there—laborers, the businessmen, and the farmers who keep the freight trains moving to Portland with the products of Oregon's ranches and farms. It is all Oregon and the Northwest, which builds up Portland and enables you to live and provides your profits.

I represent also those who are honest investors in private utilities, already established in Oregon, and do not wish to have them suffer further loss. The utilities are part of our business life, though they are, for the most part, sold out to holding companies now controlled in Wall Street. As their representative, I say to them in no unmistakable terms that they must quit taking advantage of people who do not have the opportunity to know what is being done in utility-ridden Portland.

You live in a city which pays excess tribute to Wall Street holding companies to the amount of $5,000,000 a year. The current used in Portland could be furnished by the municipal plant in Tacoma for $5,000,000 less than Portland users pay. I want to help to put that $5,000,000 back into Portland pockets.

This bill for electric current is really paid by the farmers and the laboring men, the ultimate consumers, who cannot pass the burden along to the next fellow. The extra toll taken by the utilities in Portland is paid by all Oregon and the rest of the Northwest. You live in a State which is paying seven and one-half million dollars each year more than it would pay if Tacoma electric rates prevailed. Does it interest you to change this condition?

Would you in Portland like to meet Tacoma on equal terms in the years to come, or do you intend to continue to pay tribute? In 8 years the Tacoma public plant will be entirely free of debt and can still further reduce rates. Tacoma's municipal plant contributes 10 percent of gross income for city and State taxes. What percentage are the utilities in Portland contributing to government? I have made a real study of this matter and have tried to set it forth for your benefit in a speech in Congress June 24, this year, The Tale of Two Cities. I take pleasure in enclosing copy for you and all other members of your club to whom I am sending this letter.

Are you aware that the people of the entire United States are paying annually over one thousand million dollars in excess electric rate charges over and above the Tacoma electric rates? If applied to the national debt, this excess toll, at 3-percent interest, would retire the entire debt in 21 years. These excess-charge figures have been presented to Congress and to a House committee by my esteemed colleague, Hon. JOHN RANKIN, of Mississippi. The figures were checked by the Federal Power Commission and have never been successfully challenged.

If Portland were using electric current as freely as it is used in Tacoma, it would take the entire present installed capacity of Bonneville in addition to what you are now getting. Of course, you cannot use electricity as freely as it is used in Tacoma, because it now costs too much in Portland. The quantity of electricity used is a question of price. In Portland there is an annual residential consumption of 1,110 kilowatt-hours a year; in Tacoma, 1,563; in Ottawa, Canada, 3,750; Winnipeg, 4,250; and Fort William, 5,240. If Portland were using electric current as freely as they are using it in Winnipeg, Canada, it would require the entire ultimate installation at Bonneville in addition to the present current used. Electric current ought to be as cheap as water. It is one of God's gifts to men. Why should your organization yield to the propaganda of Wall Street utilities?

Now, are you people in Portland who find yourselves in such a situation more interested in securing a job for one man who happens to have a residence there than you are in solving a great problem and making Portland a more satisfactory residence place? Are you more interested that a prospective administrator shall give lip service to a political party than you are to have a man with his heart with the people instead of with the utilities?

My friends of the Jackson Club, open your eyes. I am proud of that club, which has always taken such a liberal stand for the people and against the special interests which pillage them. This conforms to the principles of our great patron, Andrew Jackson. Is the Jackson Club changing its color? Does the Jackson Club care more for the welfare of the Aluminum Trust than it cares for the people of Oregon? If not, then why this effort to thwart the administration and this criticism before it has even announced that it is ready to select a candidate for the position of administrator of Bonneville?

If the proposed Bonneville legislation becomes a law, the appointment of that administrator will be in the hands of Secretary Ickes. I am convinced that political affiliations and geographical location will have nothing at all to do with the selection. I feel sure that the Secretary, understanding the President's deep interest in Bonneville, will consult with him over this appointment, which is as important as the appointment of a judge to the Supreme Bench. It will require a man of sufficient knowledge and ability and national reputation to sustain Bonneville project successfully before the Appropriations Committees of Congress.

Certainly I am deeply interested in the selection of the administrator. I have convictions on the matter. I believe he must be an absolutely honest man whom the "spoils of office will not buy." He must not be dazzled by the glitter of the King's gold. He must honestly believe in public ownership. He must be capable, with thorough knowledge of the electrical business and demonstrated administrative ability. He must have the interests of the people at heart and accept the principle of the "yardstick" to which Bonneville is dedicated. It is my wish and prayer that the Secretary may find a man who will rise to the occasion. If an Oregon man is chosen as the one best fitted for the place, that will be pleasing to me; but I desire, above all, the welfare of all the people of Oregon. If the right man develops Bonneville, in the light of its dedication to "the more abundant life", it may be the entering wedge that will give relief to people everywhere from the oppressive rates and methods of that small holding-company group, said to be less than 200 men, which today controls the private utilities of the United States and exacts an immense toll from the people.

Members of the Jackson Club, you have something to do besides eating good dinners and promoting the spirit of good fellowship. You in Portland are facing a crisis. There is an opportunity, this year, with the expiration of the franchise of the Northwestern Electric Co., to take over that property at a reasonable valuation and enter Portland in the list of progressive cities. Those who caution delay until cost of Bonneville current is determined are obviously speaking for the utilities. Every informed person now knows that the cost of current at Bonneville will not constitute 10 percent of the price for current in Portland. Generating costs are small compared to distributing charges. The Government plant is nearly ready to deliver current. Are you ready to use it most advantageously in Portland?

Study the matter of public ownership; investigate rates and consumption and the cost of generation and distribution of electricity. I have tried to help you here in Congress. I have given weeks of careful work and study to the preparation of speeches about Bonneville, and about public ownership, and very particularly about the unfortunate situation in Portland. I have been in this power fight ever since I have been in Washington, and long before. I know something of the methods and means of those who would sabotage the public power policies of this administration. I do not wish to see my Jackson Club friends lined up with the enemies of the administration. Work with the President on this matter of Bonneville. Make your city ready for the benefits of Bonneville. Do not waste your time sending such telegrams to Members of Congress. I beg of you to devote your thought and your energies to the success of Bonneville and the welfare of Oregon.

I am in the fight and I mean to stand by my principles as a public-ownership man. It will take more than your telegram to convince me that my friends of the Jackson Club and the forward-looking men and women of Oregon are not with the administration in this great undertaking.

Very sincerely yours,

WALTER M. PIERCE, M. C.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

SPANISH WAR PENSIONS

The SPEAKER. Today is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the committees.

Mr. GASQUE (when the Committee on Pensions was called). Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Pensions to call up the bill (H. R. 5030) granting pensions and increases of pensions to certain soldiers, sailors, and nurses of the War with Spain, the Philippine Insurrection, or the China Relief Expedition, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman what time will be allowed for discussion of the bill under this arrangement?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from California that if consent is given, the bill will be considered in the House under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. COSTELLO. Under those circumstances, Mr. Speaker, and in view of the importance of the legislation and the amount of money involved, I shall be forced to object to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

This bill is on the Union Calendar, and, under the rule, the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 5030 with Mr. WOODRUM in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. GASQUE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes. This bill does only two things which are clear and specific. It provides that the Spanish War veterans who have reached the age of 65 years in effect shall be declared totally and permanently disabled. In other words, it gives them a pension of $60 a month. The large majority of the Spanish War veterans today are getting $50 per month on a 75-percent disability. It is hard to get over that gap between 75 and 100 percent and get the Veterans' Administration to give them permanent and total disability. This Congress has gone on record in declaring that 65 years of age is total and permanent disability in the Social Security Act. We are just placing this class of veterans, most of whom are already drawing $50 per month, in the position to draw $60 per month when they reach the age of 65.

Then it does one other thing, and that is all. The Spanish War veteran now who is totally and permanently disabled and is bedridden, or who needs care and attendance of a third person at all times, is now getting $72 per month. Under this bill we give him $100 per month. These are the rates that were given to the Civil War veterans at approximately the same age. These Spanish War veterans were long neglected. It was a long time before they were even recognized and given anything, and we are only trying to treat them as we have treated the Union Army veterans in years gone by.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GASQUE. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. What is the average age of the Spanish War veteran now?

Mr. GASQUE. Sixty-two years.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GASQUE. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. I note that in order to receive the higher pension of $100 per month the veteran must be one who is shown to need the constant aid and attendance of another person.

Mr. GASQUE. That is correct.

Mr. DOWELL. May I suggest to the gentleman that in many cases that have come to my attention the Department appears to be not favorable to this provision, and wherever there is an excuse to hold that a veteran is not entitled to the aid of someone else it is denied.

Mr. GASQUE. That is correct.

Mr. DOWELL. Can the gentleman give us any information with reference to any way in which this can be prevented where one really needs attendance?

Mr. GASQUE. It would be impossible for me to do that, because I know personally of cases where they do need the aid and attendance of another person, but the Veterans' Administration cannot be convinced of it.

Mr. DOWELL. Under the construction that the Department gives the law the person must be absolutely helpless.

Mr. GASQUE. That is the construction; yes.

Mr. DOWELL. With that condition, it seems to me that that provision is not being carried out in the spirit of the legislation.

Mr. GASQUE. And it is the purpose of this legislation to see that it is carried out.

Mr. DOWELL. But the provision in this bill is identical with the language in the bill that is not being carried out; and I am wondering if we are going to improve that condition insofar as one who receives the higher pension is concerned.

Mr. GASQUE. I know that the Department is very sympathetic toward this legislation. While they do not recommend it, they are sympathetic to it, and I believe I can take it up with the Department and see that they do carry out the spirit of the legislation.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman, as chairman of this committee, intercede for these pensioners and ascertain if the Department will not be more lenient in granting an attendant, and not wait until the pensioner is on his deathbed before the attendant is provided?

Mr. GASQUE. I assure the gentleman that I will, and I have already done that with regard to other veterans and have had very good results.

Mr. DOWELL. I know there are a number of cases where I am sure the attendant ought to be provided and where the Department has turned it down. This bill should pass, and these veterans should receive the benefits provided in this legislation.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GASQUE. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Is this act intended to be an amendment to the present Spanish-American Pension Act, or is this act entirely new?

Mr. GASQUE. This is a new act entirely.

Mr. SNELL. How does this affect the present act on the statute books?

Mr. GASQUE. It does not affect it.

Mr. SNELL. If a man draws a pension under the old act, is there anything to prohibit him getting in under this act?

Mr. GASQUE. Nothing at all. He has a right to elect under which he will come.

Mr. SNELL. There is nothing in this which says he is withdrawn from under the old act?

Mr. GASQUE. Not a thing.

Mr. SNELL. It seems to me that this ought to be an amendment to the original act rather than a new act, and not repeal the old act.

Mr. GASQUE. This does not repeal the old act.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman thinks there is no possibility of a man's coming in under both?

Mr. GASQUE. No; he could not do that.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Section 5 provides that nothing contained in the provisions of this act shall be construed to diminish or reduce any pension heretofore granted.

Mr. SNELL. I can see that. Now, we are liberalizing the pension act for the Spanish-American War veterans, are we not?

Mr. GASQUE. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. It seems to me this should be an amendment to the original act, rather than an entirely new act, and then you would not have any complications.

Mr. GASQUE. I do not think any complications will be reached. However, I do not think there would be any objection to it being offered as an amendment.

Mr. SNELL. Certainly we have never done it this way before. I am for the act. However, I believe it should be an amendment to the original act, rather than an entirely new act granting new pensions.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GASQUE. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Has the gentleman the figures indicating how much the pensions were that we paid to the Civil War veterans when we raised them to $100 a month? What I want to point out is this: Is it not a fact that the amount which the Government paid to the Civil War veterans when they were raised to $100 a month was far greater than it will be to these Spanish-American War veterans, because they are fewer in number?

Mr. GASQUE. Absolutely, that is true. I do not have the figures with me, however.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GASQUE. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. In section 4 of the act it is provided that no one while an inmate of a United States soldiers' home or any National or State soldiers' home shall be paid more than $50 a month under this act. I can see the justice of that provision when a veteran is in a national home, but I cannot see the justice of it when a man is in a State soldiers' home. If there should be any offset, that should go to the State and not to the National Government. If a man is entitled to $60 and he goes into a State institution, it seems to me if that $10 is taken from his compensation it ought to go to the State that maintains that home and not be credited to the Federal Government.

Mr. GASQUE. That language is the language of the present law.

Mr. BOILEAU. I know it is, but it seems to me that those States which have State homes are being discriminated against. I do not see why that should be in the law. It seems to me it is objectionable in the present law, and we should not perpetuate it here. If they are in a State home and this deduction is made, it seems to me it should go to the State.

Mr. GASQUE. That might complicate matters to do that, because there are other classes of veterans that this does not take in.

Mr. BOILEAU. The Federal Government does not make contributions to the State homes, so why should the Federal Government get the benefit of this $10?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has again expired.

Mr. GASQUE. I yield myself 5 additional minutes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GASQUE. I yield.

Mr. GEARHART. As a former director of the California Veterans' Home, I know the Federal Government contributes $10 a month for every inmate that we have in our institutions. That, no doubt, accounts for the deduction of $10 for those who are occupying State homes, such as the California Veterans' Home.

Mr. GASQUE. I thank the gentleman for that information.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GASQUE. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. If what the gentleman from California says is true, then this is equitable. I was under the impression that was not the situation.

It seems to me we should have that clarified. That may have been the regulation at the time the gentleman from California refers to, but it is my understanding that it is not the regulation now.

Mr. GASQUE. I undoubtedly would think so because of the present law.

Mr. BOILEAU. Does the gentleman agree with me that if that is not the case, that provision should not apply to State homes?

Mr. GASQUE. I agree with the gentleman heartily.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GASQUE. I yield.

Mr. PACE. Can the gentleman give us the figures on what this increase will cost; also, what it is now costing?

Mr. GASQUE. I do not have the figures right now as to the present cost, but I am going to read a brief explanation of the bill, which will give those figures.

The Veterans' Administration in their report submitted two reports. The first report was based on the age of 62 years instead of 65. They recommended four amendments to that bill. The second report was based on the age of 65. They suggested we make the age 65. This amendment was adopted by the committee.

The figures used in the second report from the Veterans' Administration were used in the committee report on the bill H. R. 5030, which was reported out of committee. This report shows that section 1 of the bill gave a pension of $60 per month to all veterans 65 years of age. Twenty-three thousand three hundred veterans would be affected, and the additional cost $4,876,000 for those now on the rolls.

I want you to follow this next paragraph.

The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs in his report states that he believes that a group of approximately 13,350 additional veterans who are not now receiving a pension would be entitled to the $60.

Should this group of 13,350 veterans file claims it would mean an additional cost of $4,800,000. Mr. Means, who is chairman of the legislative committee of the Spanish War Veterans, stated in the hearings that that is impossible, that many veterans never having applied for pensions since the Spanish War are either dead, forgotten, or do not care for a pension. We know that that many will not apply.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GASQUE. I yield.

Mr. THURSTON. In addition to what the gentleman is saying, is it not true that the Spanish War veteran was not accorded hospitalization until 1928, or about 30 years after his separation from the service.

Mr. GASQUE. I was going to bring that out.

Mr. THURSTON. Whereas the World War veteran had those advantages and facilities immediately upon discharge.

Mr. GASQUE. Neither was he given the benefit of World War insurance.

Mr. THURSTON. Nor was any provision made for the care of his dependents.

Mr. GASQUE. None whatever. The report dealing with section 2 of the bill shows that there are 2,585 who will receive $100 a month pension. This will mean an additional cost of $873,000. The total cost of the bill is shown by the Administrator's report, leaving out that 13,350, to be $5,749,000. This amount was used in the committee report. The reason the other item was not used is as I have previously explained.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition in opposition to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. SNELL. I am not opposed to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to inquire if any Member present is opposed to the bill?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the bill and desire to be recognized in opposition to the bill if nobody on the minority side is opposed to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California in opposition to the bill.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I am not opposed in any way to the provisions of this bill. I am in favor of them, but I am very firm in my conviction that this is not the best way in which to accomplish what the committee desires. In the case of all other changes in pension laws they have been made by way of amendment of the existing statute. While I do not think that any beneficiary will ever draw two pensions, one under each of these bills, I am very sure it would be much better legislative procedure either to repeal the old law or to offer this as an amendment to the original Spanish War pension law; and I ask the chairman of the committee to give that serious consideration before he passes this bill in its present form.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from California yield to me for a question?

Mr. COSTELLO. I shall be pleased to.

Mr. TABER. I have in front of me the statute with reference to Spanish War pensions, and I would like to have the attention of the Chairman of the Committee as I go along on this, if I may. The statute under which pensions are paid at the present time is contained in Public, 299, of the Seventy-first Congress. It provides a certain sliding scale of pension rates. There is nothing in the pending bill and nothing in the original bill which would prevent a beneficiary being paid a pension under Public, No. 299, of the Seventy-first Congress and in addition a pension under the bill now before us.

Is the gentleman prepared to accept an amendment to section 4?

Mr. GASQUE. It is my understanding that the existing law prevents the drawing of two pensions.

Mr. TABER. Can the gentleman cite me to such a statute?

Mr. GASQUE. I cannot quote it right now.

Mr. TABER. I think that should be shown to the House, because I do not think we ought to pass this legislation under which two pensions might be drawn.

Mr. GASQUE. I know there is existing law providing that no person may draw two pensions.

Mr. TABER. What if he be entitled to it under two separate statutes? I would like to see the statute to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. GASQUE. I would remind the gentleman that the pending bill affects but one class of Spanish War veterans, those who have reached age 65. A man cannot become a beneficiary under this bill unless he is 65 years old or older.

Mr. TABER. At the same time a man 65 years of age or older could come under this and the other bill, too, the way the pending bill is drawn.

Mr. GASQUE. Oh, no.

Mr. TABER. This bill is not an amendment to the other statute.

Mr. GASQUE. This bill provides that he cannot do that.

Mr. TABER. Oh, no; it does not anywhere.

Mr. GASQUE. The interpretation of the existing law is implied in section 4 of this bill. I cite section 4715 of the Revised Statutes, United States Code 38, section 25.

Mr. TABER. There is not anything specifically there to say that.

Mr. GASQUE. There is nothing in this bill, but I will try to show the gentleman that we have existing law that provides that a man cannot draw two pensions. Under no condition may they draw two pensions.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to the fact that this bill, instead of being an amendment to existing law and getting the whole pension legislation in reference to Spanish War veterans in one place, where the rulings of the Veterans' Bureau as already made would apply, sets up a new statute and a new pension law, which will require additional construction. It is so worded that duplicate pensions may be paid unless there is some provision that I have been unable to find to the contrary.

Mr. GASQUE. I may say to the gentleman if he is worrying about that, I shall be glad to accept an amendment to that effect.

Mr. TABER. I wonder if the gentleman from South Carolina would accept an amendment at page 3, line 21, of this act by adding to the bill a provision that any pension received by any person under the provisions of this act shall be in lieu of all other pensions?

Mr. GASQUE. I will be glad to accept it.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] a question, and I should like also to have the attention of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. GASQUE]. It seems to me that the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] is intended to mean exactly as he stated, but I am afraid it should be polished up somewhat, because it may cause the individual who has already filed his claim and whose papers are on file to make a new claim entirely. This language should be to the effect that this law automatically encompasses all pensions. That is, it takes them all in.

Mr. TABER. But it does not.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. It ought to be that way.

Mr. TABER. May I say to the gentleman this only applies to certain individual cases among Spanish War veterans. It does not apply to all of them, and if that provision is put in we would wipe out and repeal a large number of the pensions that have already been granted now under Public, No. 299, of the Seventy-first Congress.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. This bill applies to certain individuals.

I do not think we should pass an amendment or any kind of law which would provide that those individuals have to come in and make new claims. This law should say that an individual in this class will automatically be entitled to such-and-such a pension. If there is any controversy about a man drawing two pensions, of course, that is not what we want. This other amendment goes too far the other way, and I think the gentlemen should get together, because if they do not I am afraid we will not have a bill.

Mr. TABER. My criticism of this bill is that, instead of going down the line and amending the existing statute with reference to Spanish War veterans, it sets up a new law entirely and leaves the old law on the statute books. That is a very bad way to legislate. If we would amend the old statute by increasing the rate for those above 65, we would then permit the Veterans' Bureau to go on and operate with the claims that are already on file there, and they would have to only consider the amendment as to amount with reference to specific cases; but if we go to work and pass this bill the way it is written, they will have to request new applications. There is no way of getting out of that. That is the trouble with this legislation.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That would be very unfortunate.

Mr. THURSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. THURSTON. May I ask the Committee on Pensions what has been the position of the Veterans' Administration in reference to duplicate pensions?

Mr. GASQUE. The Veterans' Administration has gone over this bill carefully and has helped us to rewrite it so far as amendments are concerned and has helped us in perfecting the bill. This bill deals with only one class of Spanish-American War veterans. It does not touch all of them. It specifically states it does not apply to any except the man who has reached 65 years of age. Regardless of the amendment I agreed to awhile ago—and I expect to accept the amendment—I feel it is not necessary, because there is legislation already on the statute books which provides that nobody may receive two pensions. I cannot conceive of any Member of Congress who does not know that a man cannot draw two pensions at the same time.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Chairman, it may seem just a little rash for an individual to rise on the floor in opposition to legislation dealing with veterans. However, in view of the position I have occupied in this House as one of the official objectors to bills on the Consent Calendar, may I say this legislation came before me in that official capacity and as a result it was incumbent upon me to make a study of the legislation in order to determine its merit. If I considered the bill meritorious, then I would not interpose an objection when it was called up for consideration on the Consent Calendar. Since this bill requires large annual expenditures and establishes a dangerous age precedent, I opposed its passage by unanimous consent, believing that the membership should at least have an opportunity to learn what the bill proposes to do.

This bill involves a considerable amount of money. It sets up a definite standard of pensions to be paid to veterans, and I think the Members of the House are entitled to some information as to exactly what they are doing in regard to veterans' legislation, because what we do for one group of veterans we will undoubtedly be called upon to do the same thing for all other groups of veterans.

The very first section of this bill provides that—

All persons who served 90 days or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the War with Spain, the Philippine Insurrection, or the China Relief Expedition between the dates of April 21, 1898, and July 4, 1902, both dates inclusive, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom—

And so forth. That is the first group of people. In other words, the question of need and the question of disability does not enter into the picture at all. It is purely a question of age.

You have been told that the precedent upon which this proposed legislation is based is what we have done in the past for the veterans of the Civil War. May I call to your attention the fact that after the Civil War it was 55 years before we passed legislation of this character? In other words, it was 55 years after the end of that war before we passed a general pension law, and that law, mind you, provided pensions to all Civil War veterans regardless of age, because the average age of the Civil War veterans at that time was approximately 75 years. Now, with that as a precedent, you are being asked to pass, for the Spanish-American War veterans, legislation which will give such veterans a blanket pension of $60 a month, and this pension is based upon the age of the veteran. It was not until the Spanish-American War that the question of age was introduced as a basis on which pensions should be paid. In other words, any veteran who reaches the age of 65 years is entitled to receive a pension under this legislation, regardless of disability. This principle I believe to be wrong.

Moreover, it is not 55 years since the Spanish War. That war ended in 1902 officially. You are being asked to do this for the Spanish War veterans exactly 35 years after the termination of that war. You are being asked to do this 20 years sooner than it was done for the Civil War veterans in the precedent on which this committee is relying for the passage of the pending legislation.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. MAAS. The gentleman certainly recognizes the fact that there is a vast difference between the period 55 years after the Civil War and this period, 35 years after the Spanish-American War, so far as economic opportunities are concerned. Men of 65 in those days could earn a living; but men of 65 today are incapacitated, whether physically disabled or not, for earning a living.

After all, we are pensioning these men so they may eat. Today an able-bodied man of 65 for all practical purposes is incapacitated for earning a living. Does the gentleman want these men to be dependent on charity? May I ask the gentleman what solution he offers?

Mr. COSTELLO. I simply suggest to the gentleman that in this particular bill the question of need of the individual is not brought in at all because it is purely a matter of age. The gentleman himself brings out the point that being 65 years old incapacitates a man. If this be true, then why not grant a $60 pension to all persons who are 65, in order that they all may eat, independent of charity? If this is the situation, then why not do the same thing for the World War veterans? Certainly the conditions under which the Spanish War veterans of 65 years of age are laboring today are absolutely no different from the conditions under which the World War veterans are forced to exist at the present time.

Mr. GASQUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. GASQUE. The World War veterans have no better friend than I, and I am not against them; but the gentleman knows the World War veteran was given a pension from the time he got out of the Army. He was given a bonus; he was given hospitalization; and he was given almost everything else that could be done for him. We are not asking all this for the Spanish War veteran. We waited approximately 20 years before we did anything for him. It was not until just a few years ago that we even let the Spanish War veteran have hospitalization.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. If the gentleman will permit, I think the gentleman did not realize that he stated the World War veterans were given a pension from the time they were discharged. They were not. Only the service-connected cases were given a pension, and only those men who are disabled now receive pensions.

Mr. GASQUE. I agree with that statement.

What I meant to say is that no precedent is being set by this bill, because this has been done before. We are not trying to set any precedent at all; we are following a precedent. We are trying to right a wrong that has been done the Spanish-American War veterans.

Mr. COSTELLO. The gentleman stated we are not setting a precedent, but I disagree on that very point. In the case of the Civil War veterans the matter of age was not introduced. Those veterans were all at least on the average 75 years of age. Now we are putting in a specific age proviso of 65 years.

May I show the House exactly what may be anticipated if this legislation is enacted into law? Regardless of what you may have done for the Civil War veterans, regardless of the comparative basis of benefits received by Spanish-American War veterans and World War veterans, the fact is that when you bestow a benefit upon any group the members of any similar group are going to think they are entitled to the same benefit. They are not going to say, "Well, I had something different, and therefore I am not entitled to this benefit. I have received mine." Quite the contrary; they are going to say, "If you did this for the Civil War veterans and did it for the Spanish War veterans, then do it for the World War veterans."

I asked the Veterans' Administration to prepare for me figures as to what this proposed legislation would cost in the event I were to offer an amendment to the bill, adding, on the first page, after the enumeration of the classes of service covered, the words "or the World War." It might astound the Members of the House to know that in 1937 there are 12,939 World War veterans who have already reached the age of 65 years. If this legislation were passed, giving them $60 a month, the increase in cost to the Government over what they may now be receiving, in order to pay these veterans $60 a month, would amount to more than $7,500,000 the first year. If you follow that increase on through, taking a complete chart, which I intend to insert in the RECORD, showing the ages of World War veterans, you will find it will be 1996 when the last World War veteran of the age of 65 is left in this Nation. The peak under such a proposal would be reached in the year 1963, at which time there will be 2,213,841 World War veterans aged 65. The cost in that one year alone of this type of legislation, over and above the cost of existing veterans' legislation, would be $1,299,596,000. This is exactly the precedent you are establishing by this bill. The estimates to which I refer are as follows:

Estimated additional annual cost of paying a pension of $60 per month to World War veterans who have attained age 65 years, by years, from 1937 to 1996

Year	Estimated number living at beginning of year, age 65 and over	Estimated additional annual cost
1937	12,939	$7,591,404
1938	15,652	9,183,102
1939	18,538	10,876,098
1940	21,729	12,748,290
1941	25,688	15,070,811
1942	29,690	17,419,075
1943	35,538	20,849,867
1944	42,194	24,755,393
1945	49,879	29,263,698
1946	56,850	33,354,103
1947	65,542	38,453,486

In general figures the total cost of such a proposal for the World War veterans would aggregate more than $20,000,000,000. The World War has already cost this Nation over $60,000,000,000, and by applying the terms of this legislation to World War veterans, we would add another twenty billion. The veterans' share of the cost of the World War amounts to $12,000,000,000. This is divided approximately as follows:

Payments for disabilities	$2,750,000,000
Payments for death benefits	500,000,000
For military and naval insurance	2,000,000,000
For the soldiers' bonus	3,500,000,000
For hospitalization	1,250,000,000
For vocational training	500,000,000

The World War veterans are going to be able to make not only as strong a case as do the Spanish War veterans, demanding such legislation, but a much stronger case, because they will say that you did it for the Civil War veterans, and you went further and did it for the Spanish War veterans. We, too, now are reaching the age of 65; why, then, should you not do the same thing for us of the World War?

The question is sometimes brought up that nothing has been done for the Spanish War veterans. In the hearings that were held in 1932 before a joint investigating committee, the question of the cost of the Spanish War was entered into, and that war cost this Nation $582,000,000, and pensions have been paid up to September 30, 1932, in respect of Spanish War veterans, in the amount of $715,921,664.51. This amounts to more than $45,000 per casualty of that war.

In that year the current appropriation for Spanish War veterans was $116,000,000. In addition there was $3,000,000 for hospitalization, and in all an appropriation of $119,396,447.

On October 31, 1932, 235,306 Spanish War pensions were being paid; 196,618 were for veterans, 38,150 were pensions for widows and other alleged dependents, and 538 were for nurses.

I mention these figures simply to give you somewhat of the picture of the number of veterans of the Spanish War who are at the present time receiving pensions.

If you read the report of the committee on this bill, you will find they refer to the hearings and they state that the cost of the first section of the bill, according to the Veterans' Administration, would amount to approximately $4,876,000 over and above the amount that you are now paying Spanish War veterans.

What this bill does is to take a pension of about $40 a month and increase it to $60 a month; in other words, at the present time the Spanish War veteran of the age of 68 is receiving $40 a month.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MAAS. I think the statement of the gentleman is beside the point. We are not incorporating a new principle of veterans' legislation in this bill; we are simply recognizing realities and increasing their pension by a small amount to compensate them for the loss of economic opportunity and increased cost of living. There is not a single new precedent established by this bill.

Mr. COSTELLO. I may state to the gentleman that so far as the question of age is concerned, they may not be establishing a precedent, but it was out of this committee and in reference to the Spanish War veterans that the Congress first incorporated in veterans' legislation the question of age, and by passing this legislation we are simply continuing to recognize that precedent of establishing pensions not on the basis of need, not on the basis of disability, but solely on the basis of age. Further, I may state to the gentleman that, undoubtedly, here in this very legislative body there are veterans of the Spanish-American War, and there is absolutely no provision in this bill that would deny them, if they are 65 years of age, the right of receiving this $60 a month.

Mr. MAAS. But the gentleman realizes there are very few veterans of the Spanish-American War of 65 years of age who are not in need of this pension. The majority of them are disabled and the committee took that into consideration. The committee also took into consideration the matter of need, and we have come to the conclusion that the most equitable, fair, American way to determine need for the Spanish-American War veterans is age, and I think you will find that it very closely coincides with need. General Hines, in testifying before our committee, stated that from 90 to 95 percent of these Spanish-American War veterans of 65 are in need. We wanted to get away from the un-American pauper's oath which I think is repugnant to all of us, and I believe this is a far more intelligent and American-like solution of the problem.

Mr. COSTELLO. I may state to the gentleman in that connection that I intend to offer an amendment at the end of the first section of the bill that will provide that any person who has paid an income tax during the preceding year would not be entitled to receive a pension under this legislation.

I think on that basis it will tend to eliminate many of those who may have received an income on which they have to pay an income tax, and would deprive them of an opportunity of receiving a pension under this legislation. But I call to the attention of the House exactly what is happening to the veterans' legislation. The committee report shows that 23,300 veterans under this first section of the bill would cost the Government in increased pensions the sum of $4,876,000. However, the committee report does not give you the additional testimony of the Veterans' Administration, although the chairman of the committee did refer to it.

The Veterans' Administration estimates that there will be an additional 13,350 veterans who are not now receiving a pension but who have attained the age of 65 years and who would be entitled to $60 a month under this bill. In the event that they should apply for their pension, an additional annual cost of $4,806,000 will be added to the cost of this bill. As a result, the granting of that pension to all 65 years of age, whether disabled or not, at $60 a month will mean approximately an annual increased sum totaling $9,682,000 over and above the pensions now being paid to this same group of veterans.

The second portion of the bill, which refers to those veterans who are in need of attendants, would grant to some 2,585 veterans an increased pension that would total approximately $873,000 additional. All in all, the cost of this one piece of legislation is going to amount to $10,555,000 during the first year. Ultimately, when this legislation, being in effect, reaches the peak, it is going to cost approximately $20,000,000 a year. In other words, the number of Spanish War veterans who are going to be entitled to these benefits is constantly increasing and will increase until 1946, when the peak of the Spanish War veterans will be reached.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. Yes.

Mr. MAAS. I think the gentleman is in error and has misunderstood the facts, because the figure $10,555,000 is predicated on 13,350 additional Spanish War veterans applying for this pension. Many of that number are duplications—that is, men who reenlisted. There are 13,350 who have not applied under existing pension laws, and there is no reason to believe that they or any considerable number of them will apply because of the $10 increase. The actual facts are that the cost of this legislation will be $5,700,000.

Mr. COSTELLO. That is totally ignoring every one of the 13,550 cases. It is true the Spanish War organization disputes with the Veterans' Administration about how many of those cases might apply. The figure I have given is the maximum figure. It just depends upon how many of those 13,350 do apply as to whether this additional cost of $4,806,000 will be reached.

Mr. MAAS. I am sure the gentleman wants to be fair. He made an absolute statement that the cost would be $10,000,000 and he knows that this is in all likelihood double the cost.

Mr. COSTELLO. I am making that statement from the figures presented by the Veterans' Administration before the committee. In other words, if these 13,350 do apply, they will add $4,806,000 to the cost of this legislation, and I might state that the Veterans' Administration in computing these tables and making their estimates, I think the gentleman will find, is correct within 85 percent of the figure. In other words, I do not think the Veterans' Administration has made many errors in computing a table like this, where they have taken into consideration the number of the veterans existing at the end of the war, considering the insurance tables, American mortality tables, and similar tables, to arrive at their figures, and they have reached these figures as a result of such study. The truth of the matter is that the predictions of the Veterans' Administration regarding the number of persons to be affected and the costs to be incurred by legislation are only too often too accurate, as is realized a few years after the legislation is passed.

Mr. MAAS. There is this difference between the records kept in the World War and the service records of the Spanish War, and the Veterans' Administration records are not comparable for these two groups. Many of those 13,350 are duplications. A man has been counted twice because he has reenlisted. There are not that many veterans, in fact. Anyway, for 20 years the men on this list have not applied, and they are not going to apply now, certainly not all of them, just because of a $10-a-month increase.

Mr. COSTELLO. The likelihood is that all will not apply, but the fact is that this legislation can cost ten and a half million dollars a year. The gentleman admits that the minimum cost is in excess of $5,000,000, and even if we were to split the difference, it would run to seven and a half million dollars.

There is one other point I want to call to the attention of the House, and that is this: You are increasing the pension for the disabled veteran who reaches the age of 65 and now you are taking the veteran who is not disabled and you are doing exactly the same thing for him. You are making absolutely no distinction between the man who is actually disabled and the man who is not, and it seems to me that there can be no question as to the need for a disabled veteran having a pension and certainly he should be entitled to more than the physically fit, able-bodied veteran who happens to be within the age limit, and, therefore, could apply for such pension.

Mr. GASQUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. GASQUE. I would like the gentleman to state to this Committee if he believes there are very many living men today 65 years of age who are not to some extent disabled.

Mr. COSTELLO. I do not think it is necessary for me to go into that particular question. I think it has been much discussed in many fields. It has been brought up in regard to our Supreme Court Justices. You will find that men 65 years of age are still serving as presidents of corporations, members of boards of directors, and in very active capacities. The question of when an individual is going to reach a period of uselessness is a question that can be determined only by a study of individual cases.

Mr. GASQUE. But the pension bureaus take into consideration physical disabilities.

Mr. COSTELLO. But in your legislation the only requirement is an honorable discharge and the age of 65 years. Nothing more is needed in order for them to come under the terms of this legislation. If he is in need, if he is disabled, there is no question but what he is entitled to a pension; but where he is neither in need nor disabled, then I raise the question as to whether such legislation should be passed.

Just digressing for a moment from this particular bill, which may cause an increase of some $10,000,000 annually, and reaching a peak of possibly $20,000,000 in some future year, there are innumerable pieces of veterans' legislation pending at this time before the Congress. Some are still in committee. Many have been reported out. Some are before this House for consideration.

There is an important piece of legislation, H. R. 6384, a bill that has been improperly called the "gold-star mothers bill." In that bill the gold-star mothers are a part, but a very small part, of the total number of people who are to be taken care of under that legislation.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I decline to yield at this moment.

The purpose of that legislation is to increase pension benefits. It changes existing law. As a result it is going to cost this Government approximately $8,952,000 the first year if that legislation is enacted into law.

Another bill dealing with disabled emergency officers of the World War was presented in Congress and passed by the other body. If that bill becomes law the increased cost will be $3,696,000 annually.

A third bill, S. 2219, dealing with pensions for widows of Civil War veterans, and on which hearings have been held in the other body, the Veterans' Administration estimates will cost $10,228,000 a year.

Another bill, H. R. 6294, dealing with mental and physical disabilities, will cost somewhere between seven and eight million dollars.

Just those few bills alone that I have enumerated, presented before this very session of Congress, if enacted into law at this session, would total an increased cost to Veterans' Administration of some $40,876,000 annually.

Now, let me call to your attention the fact that the Veterans' Administration at the present time is costing annually approximately $500,000,000. If we are going to take up in every session of Congress some half dozen bills that may mean an added cost to this Government for veterans' legislation anywhere from ten to fifty million dollars, you can readily see where we are tending.

It is my thought that the veterans are entitled to adequate compensation. They are entitled to decent pensions, but we as a Congress should have some definite policy. We should know exactly what we are doing and in what direction we are tending and what is going to be the effect of the legislation we are passing.

In that connection I have introduced a resolution—House Joint Resolution 442—proposing that a new investigation be made by a joint congressional committee of five Senators and five Representatives to study this question of veterans' legislation, particularly in regard to World War veterans, and to study the Veterans' Administration, and see if we cannot evolve a definite program and a definite policy, so that we will know what we are attempting to do, and we will not come in here in a haphazard manner, put through legislation for Civil War veterans which, when we finally bring it down into terms of the World War, may bring about the bankruptcy of the Treasury, or it may bring about this situation: If we continue to introduce pieces of legislation at random, setting up dangerous precedents, you may find that the cost of veterans' legislation may become so great that the public of the country will revolt against making such demands, and as a result will begin to demand the wiping out or a terrific curtailment of veterans' benefits. In short, the public may soon demand a new economy act, only they may demand far more drastic reductions and economies than were made in that act. I think, in the interest of the veterans themselves, in the interest of our own lawmaking capacity, a thorough investigation should be made.

In connection with the Veterans' Administration you have a situation where the Veterans' Administration not only passes upon the executive functions, in determining the payments that are to be made, but they also act as a quasi-judicial body. It is my thought that those two functions should be separated and not handled by the identical bureau.

Mr. Chairman, I do not anticipate that any veterans' legislation that has behind it the insistent demands of veterans' organizations will be defeated. I anticipate that this House will pass this legislation, but in doing so once again let me remind you that you are doing something that is going to establish a precedent for World War veterans just as you did 55 years after the Civil War, and just as you are now doing 35 years after the Spanish-American War, and the World War veterans are going to come in here and make exactly the same demands upon you. They are not going to wait 35 years; they are going to make a demand within 25 years. Because with the depression, because of the changed economic conditions of which the gentleman spoke, they are going to make that demand upon you, and if you do not resist this demand I can assure you that you are not going to be in position to resist the demand that the World War veterans will make upon you possibly in the next session or certainly within the next 2 or 3 years.

In conclusion I also want to point out one additional fact, that this bill does not have the approval of the Budget. The possibility is that without such approval this legislation may be vetoed. If you vote for the bill now, you should also keep in mind the fact that if the other body also passes the legislation it may come back to you with a veto message, and then you would be called upon to override that veto if you want the legislation. You should keep that in mind in voting on the bill at this time.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. MASSINGALE. The gentleman seems to be greatly alarmed lest the World War veterans also ask favors something similar to the favors granted the soldiers of the Civil War and that we are about to give to the soldiers of the Spanish-American War. I wish the gentleman would tell us, if the gentleman can, why they should not do it if they want to when the time comes.

Mr. COSTELLO. For the very simple reason, as I have already pointed out, that the cost of such a thing is absolutely prohibitive. If this same legislation is enacted for the World War veterans, the total cost over the period of years will exceed $20,000,000,000. The Government cannot afford to pay veterans' benefits for World War veterans, for a group which is 65 years of age; but that is exactly what you will be called upon to do if you pass this bill.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Does not the gentleman think that this is the wrong place to begin to economize on Government expenditures?

Mr. COSTELLO. Might I ask the gentleman if it is a question of economizing or is it a question of simply allowing the existing pension laws to remain as they are? A Spanish War veteran who is at the present time aged 68 receives $40 a month. A Spanish War veteran aged 75 receives $60 a month. In other words, it is not a question of economizing; it is simply a question of digging a little deeper into the Treasury and appropriating more money, of becoming a little more extravagant, being extravagant in a matter that may cause us to rue our extravagance and regret 2 or 3 years from now that we were extravagant today, because tomorrow's extravagance will run into the billions of dollars. As I pointed out, if you do this for the World War veteran, there are nearly 13,000 of them now, in 1937. The last one will come along in 1996 and he will cost $669. In other words, over that long period of years such legislation will cost the huge sum of over twenty billions; in fact, it would exceed a billion dollars annual cost for a period of 8 years.

If you pass this legislation now, there is no question but what you are going to have to pass similar legislation for the World War veteran.

Mr. MASSINGALE. If the gentleman wants me to answer that as a question, I may say that I believe in treating them all alike. I am not interested in economy in 1996, nor do I believe that the gentleman from California is.

Mr. COSTELLO. I can assure the gentleman that in 1996 there will be no need for economy, for then the last World War veteran will be in existence and he will have cost us $669. But during the preceding 60 years the total amount will be twenty billions if this type of legislation is enacted into law for the World War veterans.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does not the gentleman think that General Hines gives too high estimates on bills that come up affecting the Veterans' Administration? I have found many times that he has said the cost will be very much greater than it turned out to be.

Mr. COSTELLO. It is my understanding that the estimates that have come from the Veterans' Administration have been 85 percent accurate; in other words, their figures as to numbers and as to cost have been right within 85 percent. Moreover, the Veterans' Administration has no desire to augment the estimated costs of proposed legislation; they are merely attempting to give to the Congress as accurate an estimate as it is possible for them to make. On the other hand, a veteran organization might want to minimize the cost as much as possible, as has been done in this instance.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I should be very much interested in showing the gentleman some correspondence regarding legislation I proposed which they said would cost $72,000,000. A few years later a similar bill was introduced—the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] knows about it—and the cost was supposed to be $49,000,000. There was great inaccuracy in the figures somewhere.

Mr. COSTELLO. In some instances there may have been mistakes, and perhaps some very large mistakes. They may be due to error, but we must remember it is a very difficult task to attempt to estimate the administrative cost of veterans' legislation. In regard to this particular bill there is no dispute as to the first figure, namely, the $4,886,000 annual cost starting the first year, nor is there dispute as to the $800,000. The only question is as to the remaining $4,806,000. That amount may be somewhat excessive in the event that all of the 13,350 not now on the pension rolls do not apply. If they do apply, the Veterans' Administration figures will be 100 percent accurate.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. General Hines did not recommend against the passage of this bill, did he?

Mr. COSTELLO. General Hines and the Veterans' Administration at no time recommend the favorable passage or the nonpassage of legislation. They serve simply as an administrative body. They will find the facts for any Member of Congress or for the veterans' committees, but it is not their function to recommend for or against legislation, and they have always refrained from taking any such stand. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GASQUE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS].

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I think there is undue alarm on the part of the gentleman from California both as to the precedent that is being established, in his view, and in the cost.

In the first place there is no precedent being established at all. The precedent was established by the Congress long ago, when it first granted the Spanish-American War pensions. That is not the issue here.

The question is whether we are going to carry out congressional policy. The policy has already, long ago, been determined that we are going to give a pension to these veterans who served their country and who today are in dire need of food, clothing, and shelter. The economic conditions have so changed that these veterans today are not getting that pension which it was the intention of Congress they should have. This was through no fault of their own. The difference between the amount these men are receiving today and the amounts proposed in this bill, which are a very modest increase, is exactly the difference between the inability to live decently as Americans and the ability to just about get by, which is all we are attempting to provide.

Today these veterans who receive $40 a month, for illustration, cannot live on that amount. If we give $60 at the age of 65 they can live, not in luxury, but at least in decency.

We should pay them a pension which will enable them to live in decency or else repeal the whole pension and throw them all back onto charity. We cannot have them half on charity and half on pension. To continue the present inadequate rates is the cruelest thing in the world because today these men are getting a pension which is not enough to subsist on, yet they cannot get work because of their age. They canont get any help from the community chests or other places because the barrier is raised, "You are getting a pension." But these men do not receive the pension the Congress intended them to have when they passed the pension bill. Economic conditions have destroyed the value of that pension, and all we are trying to do by this bill is equalize the pension to living costs.

There is no new principle involved at all. It is simply a straight increase in the amount of the pension, and it is a very small increase at that.

Some question was raised as to whether or not the World War veterans should be included, but that is not the issue before us at the present time. But, so far as that goes, what would be so terrible about taking care of a 65-year-old World War veteran who could not help himself? Today a man at 65 is completely disabled as far as industry is concerned. You do not have to have both legs and both arms off to be unable to earn a living now. What man 65 years of age is capable of manual labor in competition with men under 45? Of course, you all know that no one hires a man 65 years old today. So if these veterans at 65 are going to be dependent, the question is whether they are going to be dependent upon local charity, upon local communities, or the Federal Government. I tell you that local communities are no longer able to bear the burden of supporting these men. They must be supported; that is, they must be fed. We can no longer support them in our poorhouses or under our local pension systems because the local taxation is raised on property largely, and today property is burdened beyond its capacity to pay. It certainly cannot pay any more. But when the Federal Government gives a pension it gets that money only from those who are able to pay it in the form of income taxes. While we all agree, perhaps, that the burden of the income tax is high, still only those who can pay do pay it. In the local communities the tax on the property is already too great, and if one cannot pay the tax the property is taken to pay the tax.

These veterans did not fight for a city or a State. They fought for all of the people of the United States, and it is, therefore, an obligation of the people of the United States to see that they may live decently in their old age. If you want patriotism in this country, and if you want to raise a generation that is willing to support the country and defend it, we better make this country one that is worthy of such support and defense by showing loyalty to the men who have previously defended the country.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GASQUE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I am one of those who is secretly rather glad that the pensions are costing us until it hurts. I hope it will hurt so much that we will think twice before we go into another war. [Applause.]

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman has expressed my sentiments 100 percent. I would like to know how many Spanish War veterans are living today and at what rate they are dying. I understand they are dying at the rate of 17 a day.

Mr. MAAS. I think there has been a slight increase.

Mr. HOUSTON. This cost would be negligible.

Mr. MAAS. The cost would begin to disappear very rapidly.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. May I say that the figures compiled by the United Spanish War Veterans show that 8,200 Spanish War veterans passed away during the year 1936.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Is it not a fact if we pass this bill the next year's increase will be the highest and from that time on it will taper right on down?

Mr. MAAS. That is correct.

Mr. COSTELLO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. COSTELLO. Is not the big peak the year 1946 in connection with Spanish War veterans? It is my understanding that 1946 will be the peak and from then on there will be a decline.

Mr. MAAS. That is true with reference to general pensions.

Mr. COSTELLO. I mean the total.

Mr. MAAS. The total; yes.

The question has been raised as between the World War veterans and the Spanish War veterans. I may say that I am a World War veteran, and as World War veterans we must recognize a distinction as between the two. We received a bonus. We immediately got splendid hospitalization from the beginning. The Spanish War veterans did not get any of those benefits, and they served under conditions infinitely worse than the conditions under which the World War veteran served. Our medical service in the World War was vastly superior. We had entirely different sanitary conditions. No one knows to this day the effect on the state of a man's health of his service in the Spanish-American War. They had fever right in our own camps in this country.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Is it not a fact that records show that the death rate during the Spanish-American War was the highest of any war in which the country was engaged?

Mr. MAAS. Yes; the highest of any war in which we participated.

Just to clear the mind of the gentleman from New York that two pensions may not be payable if this act is passed, I want to read from section 4715 of the Revised Statutes, as follows:

> Nothing in this title shall be so construed as to allow more than one pension at the same time to the same person, or to persons entitled jointly; but any pensioner who shall so elect may surrender his certificate, and receive, in lieu thereof, a certificate for any other pension to which he would have been entitled had not the surrendered certificate been issued. But all payments previously made for any period covered by the new certificate shall be deducted from the amount allowed by such certificate.

I think there need be no apprehension that if this bill is passed anyone is going to receive a double pension. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GASQUE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. THURSTON].

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Chairman, it is with some hesitancy that I rise to make a few remarks on this subject, but having served in the Spanish War, the Philippine Insurrection, and the World War, I feel I am conversant with the situation at least in a slight degree. Some of the men who would obtain pensions under this act have served in all three of the wars mentioned. May I also add that I have not applied for a pension under Spanish War acts nor have I requested any kind of compensation under World War legislation. I have not accepted the Federal or bonus provisions made by the State of Iowa; hence I do not feel that I am disqualified by interest when I state a few pertinent facts.

The question was raised with respect to whether need or amount of income should be shown. When our Government retires officers from our regulary military services, the Army and Navy, they are not obliged to show need or that they do not have other income but receive their generous allowances automatically.

May I call the attention of the House to the delayed favors which have been granted to these veterans? It is true we have a Soldiers' Preference Act, but this never was of much avail to the Spanish War veteran because he had attained an age where he was beyond the age of employment in most of the States or by the Federal Government before this privilege was accorded to him. With regard to hospitalization, a general bill was passed in 1926, or almost 30 years after the conclusion of the Spanish War. I personally know of many Spanish War veterans who were seriously ill throughout all that period and who were obliged to pay for their own medical services and hospitalization.

Then, these veterans have never had the opportunity for vocational training, the chance to draw several hundred dollars to assist them in preparing to fight the battles of life; neither were their parents ever allowed any amount because of their dependence upon these veterans. So there is a distinct difference between the total allowance they will ultimately receive and those favors which will be accorded to men who have served in other wars.

It was suggested here that our Government is too generous with veterans. Possibly that is true in some instances. However, only last year, in hearings before one of the committees of this House, it was disclosed we have between 3,000,000 and 5,000,000 aliens illegally here, who are on the relief rolls and being employed by our Government. Therefore, it seems that in this respect at least the Federal Government has had adequate funds to assist aliens, and I do not know that there has been any discontinuance of this practice. Several efforts have been made to stop this policy, but Executive influence has prevented this billion-dollar gratuity to aliens. We have been spending a billion dollars a year to feed or employ persons who are here in violation of our laws. Doubtless a number of them were in the enemy armies only a few years ago, but they are receiving sustenance from our Government.

The question of the age of Spanish War veterans has been raised here. Their average age is 62 years. Approximately two-thirds of these Spanish War veterans are now deceased. Therefore, if this increase should be available to them, the total amount of the payment will shortly decrease because of the age which they have attained, plus the impairments which will, of course, adversely affect their longevity.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THURSTON. I yield.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] a moment ago stated that this would be establishing a precedent by fixing the age limit. Under the law we have established, when an Army or Navy officer arrives at a certain age, an age much lower than the one provided here for the Spanish-American War veteran, he automatically receives a pension from the Federal Government, three-fourths of his pay, or several hundred dollars per month. Is it not true that nearly all the pensions provided in the various States and by the Government itself are based on age, the same as we are basing it in this provision; and is it not also true that at 65 years of age the Spanish War veteran is unable to seek employment either from the Government or from individuals anywhere under present conditions?

Mr. THURSTON. The gentleman's reasons are sound and he has amplified the merit for the passage of this measure. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GASQUE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman and colleagues, I have listened with keen interest to the speech of our colleague, Mr. COSTELLO, of California, in opposition to the bill before us (H. R. 5030) providing for an increase of pension for certain soldiers, sailors, and nurses of the War with Spain, the Philippine Insurrection, and the China Relief Expedition, I cannot agree with my colleague [Mr. COSTELLO]. I think this is a meritorious measure, and it affords me a great deal of pleasure to have an opportunity to speak and vote for it.

This measure provides that all soldiers, sailors, and nurses who served 90 days or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the War with Spain, the Philippine Insurrection, or the China Relief Expedition between the dates of April 21, 1898, and July 4, 1902, shall receive a pension of $60 per month after such person has attained the age of 65 years—in other words, all soldiers, sailors, and nurses who had 90 days or more service in the military or naval service of the United States between April 21, 1898, and July 4, 1902, and received an honorable discharge would be entitled to $60 per month after reaching the age of 65 years. Under the present law such persons are entitled to $72 per month in the event they need the regular aid and attendance of another person. This bill increases their pension from $72 per month to $100 per month. Of course, the law providing for $60 per month for these veterans and nurses who are totally and permanently disabled to perform manual labor, even though they may not be 65 years of age, still stands. This bill does not reduce in any manner pensions granted to persons for disabilities contracted in the service in line of duty.

Those who are opposed to this bill say that it is unnecessary and that the Government cannot afford the money involved, and they also urge that World War veterans may make similar demands. According to the Veterans' Administration, this bill will affect approximately 25,000 persons, and the annual increased cost to the Government over the present law will be $5,749,000.

The fact has been established that more than 95 percent of these veterans and nurses need the pensions. We know that the Government will not employ any person that is 65 years of age, and no railroad, factory, mill, shop, or mine will employ persons of that age. Few men 65 years of age are capable of performing any substantial amount of manual labor; and if they were able to perform such labor, they cannot secure employment.

Practically all of these veterans have families, and in view of the high cost of living they can barely get by on $60 per month. These veterans are dying off at the rate of nearly 9,000 annually. Unless we grant relief to these needy veterans, they will be compelled, a lot of them, to go to poorhouses, poor farms, and depend upon local charity.

It has been said that the largest group of men and women volunteered for service in the Spanish-American and Philippine War that volunteered in any war throughout the history of the world. It was a wonderful group of men and women. The death rate was greater in that war than in any other war in which this country has been engaged. They did not volunteer to fight for any particular community—they volunteered in defense of freedom and our country, and the Nation should not now shunt them off into poorhouses and on to poor farms and force them to depend upon community charity. It is not only the obligation of the Nation but this great rich Nation should welcome the opportunity to show its gratitude to these splendid men and women who now average 62 years of age and a great majority of whom are now in declining health.

Some have intimated that we should require a pauper's oath before these pensions could be paid. I first became a member of the Pension Committee of the House in 1919 and helped to report out and pass the act of June 5, 1920, and had charge of the bill for the Spanish War widows and children passed on September 1, 1922, and had charge of the Spanish War bill granting increases to the veterans and their dependents that became a law on May 1, 1926. I was a Member of the Senate when a further increase was granted to the Spanish War veterans in 1930, and voted to override the President's veto. When these measures were up, It was then urged that we should provide for a pauper's oath before anyone could secure the benefits of the legislation. In cooperation with other Members of the House and Senate we were able then to defeat all such proposals, and I am now opposed to any such provision. This aid from the Government for heroic and patriotic service should always remain a badge of honor and not a mark of poverty.

The ranks of this great group of men and women are thinning rapidly, and the small sums that we are providing for them in this bill will not be felt by the American people.

FAVOR RELIEF FOR WORLD WAR VETERANS

It is urged that World War veterans may urge like relief when they have attained the age of 65 years. No doubt 95 percent or more of them will need such relief when they have attained that age, and looking down through the years I can see no greater promise of economic security for them than the Spanish War veterans now have. The Government will not employ them and neither will industry nor commerce.

George Washington in his first message to Congress urged Congress to provide for those who had made our liberties possible. Abraham Lincoln was most solicitous for the defenders of our country and their widows and orphans, and this has been true of all our Presidents, with the exception of President Roosevelt. He has urged that there is no difference between those who went out and offered their lives and defended our country and those who remained at home.

We are told that more than likely the President will veto this bill. He has that authority under the Constitution, but that should not prevent us from doing what we think is right for the veterans and their dependents. I am happy to have an opportunity to vote for this bill, and will vote to override the President's veto in the event he does veto this bill.

It is also urged as an argument against this bill that the bill for the gold-star mothers and for the widows and orphans of World War veterans will be pressed upon Congress for action. I am in favor of that legislation, and it is insisted that the disabled emergency officers' retirement bill will be pressed if we pass this bill. I helped to pass that bill as a Member of the Senate, and I have always opposed the action taken by Congress in the Economy Act and the regulations thereunder taking away the pensions of disabled emergency officers. I trust that we may have an opportunity to vote for these several measures for the relief of World War veterans and their dependents.

BEST INVESTMENT FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE

War clouds are gathering throughout the world. The security of our Nation is threatened by forces without as well as forces within. We have many large and disloyal groups in this country. They would seize upon the first opportunity to overthrow our Government. We are now spending annually approximately a billion dollars for national defense, and I would have our country at all times adequately defended. Our country has never lost a war. Ships, guns, and other armaments are important, but the great reason we have never lost a war was because of the men behind the guns and the men who manned the ships. I wish to repeat what I have heretofore said on the floor of this House—the best dollar that this Nation can spend for national defense is to care for and protect those and their dependents who have fought our battles and defended our country. This Nation should never be wanting in gratitude. It will be wanting in gratitude if it stands by and sees its defenders become common beggars and forced to find care and support in poorhouses and on poor farms.

Some of our Democratic friends today are balking at a few million dollars to help the veterans, when we have squandered and wasted billions of dollars on boondoggling enterprises and projects. There was enough money wasted on the boondoggling project of undertaking to harness the tides of the bay of Passamaquoddy to pay the pensions provided in this bill for 3 years or more; and this is only one of the large number of ways in which the taxpayers' money has been squandered and wasted. Under this administration anybody and everybody can get money except the veterans and their widows and orphans.

There is another bill coming up following the bill now before us. It is H. R. 2904. It provides for the payment of travel pay and allowances for subsistence due to those who served in the Philippine Islands. This is a just obligation on the part of the United States Government; it has existed for many years. In the Seventy-fourth Congress we passed a bill to grant this relief and do justice to these veterans and carry out the obligation of the United States Government, but President Roosevelt vetoed the bill. I am happy to have an opportunity to support this measure again; and if it is vetoed, I trust that it will be done while Congress is in session, so that we may have an opportunity to pass it over the President's veto.

Whenever the veterans and their widows and orphans are involved, we hear a lot of talk about economy. The vicious Economy Act that rode roughshod over the disabled veterans of this country and the widows and orphans of veterans was passed by the present administration in the name of economy. They were going to balance the Budget, but the only economy that has been practiced has been at the expense of the defenders of this country and their dependents. Since that time the administration has created a deficit of approximately $16,000,000,000 and has increased the national debt from $20,000,000,000 to more than $36,500,000,000, and only two-thirds of the first month of the new fiscal year has elapsed, but the deficit is nearly $200,000,000. The expenses are nearly $100,000,000 more than they were for the first 20 days of the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1936.

Congress has appropriated approximately $16,000,000,000 for so-called recovery and relief. Now, when we propose to grant relief to approximately 25,000 veterans and nurses, costing annually less than $6,000,000, there is a great cry of economy. If we are going to economize, let us not start and end as this administration did, by showing the Nation's ingratitude to the old or disabled veterans and their widows and orphans. [Applause.]

Mr. GASQUE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRISWOLD].

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] was very adept and very adroit in drawing his conclusions and in stating figures which he admits are 15 percent wrong. However, like the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS], I am not so deeply interested in figuring now what this is going to cost the country. Like that gentleman, I think the time to think of the cost of war is before the war starts, when we gentlemen here in Congress decide that we are going to have a war and that we are going to send a lot of young men to war without their consent. Then is the time to think of the cost, not after we have accepted the service of the soldier and changed his economic status.

The thing to do with respect to this bill is to divest your minds of any connection or confusion with respect to the World War veterans. The gentleman from California tried to inject such comparisons into the debate. The gentleman from California remembered his figures well, but he forgot lots of other things so far as the Spanish-American War veterans and World War veterans are concerned. This is the difference he should have kept in mind: The Spanish-American War veteran, who was a volunteer soldier, served for $15 a month, while the World War veteran, who was a forced soldier, got $30 a month and was permitted to allocate $15 of it back home, which was matched dollar for dollar by the Federal Government, which gave him a total of $45 a month. The World War veteran was also permitted to take out insurance that would protect him in later life and in some way compensate him and his family for lack of a pension. The Spanish-American War veteran was not given this privilege. The World War veteran, when he left the service, was given a bonus of $60. The Spanish-American War veteran was not given this bonus. The World War veteran does not get anything that he does not deserve. In many instances he deserves much more than he received. The Spanish War veteran deserves as much.

If you want to draw comparisons, draw some of these comparisons about the difference which one man got for his services in comparison with what the other man got for his.

This bill, according to the report of the committee and, maybe, those figures are 15 percent wrong also, I do not know—but this bill provides for a cost of $5,000,000, which is less than half the cost of one destroyer, and this Congress, time after time, passes bills not only for one destroyer but for dozens of destroyers and in these same bills they have gone so far as to give $1,000,000 for the plans, one plan fitting the whole bunch of destroyers and $1,000,000 being allowed for the plans for each destroyer. If you give money away like this, why should you object to $5,000,000 to compensate these men? Why should you object to $40 a month for the Spanish War veteran when you give a citizen of Canada $5,200 a year as the Northwest director of the A. A. A.? It is preposterous that you should haggle over a thing like this under such a situation. If there be those who think the World War veteran receives too much they have a reason to vote against this bill. I do not think the World War veteran receives too much.

I think this bill by all means should pass this House and that these men should be given now some of the things that you have already given to the World War veterans which the Spanish War veteran did not get. This is an attempt to bring the Spanish War veteran in this particular class up to the same status as the World War veteran. [Applause.]

Mr. GASQUE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SAUTHOFF].

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, from the discussion we have just had evidently there are two objections. One is the objection that the bill as drawn might possibly permit two pensions. This I do not believe is true, as evidenced by a reading of the law by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS], but in addition to that, we can either adopt the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] or adopt an amendment which I suggest, namely, that at the bottom of page 3 you add this further proviso:

Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as permitting the drawing of two pensions under this act.

This would easily take care of this objection.

Now, what is the second objection? The second objection is that of the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] in regard to the cost. The cost, as I recall from the hearings before the committee, is estimated at $5,700,000.

A $5,700,000 cost ought not to be such an amazing hurdle for the gentleman from California to cross, because, as I recall it, the gentleman was in favor of many of the amendments that were offered on the Interior appropriation bill and the cost was many times the $5,700,000 contained in this bill. So it seems he is willing to deprive these men, who are 65 years of age and 90 to 95 percent of them disabled and unfit for service, of a livelihood. He is willing to take away from the men who are so disabled that they need an attendant $100 a month, which would provide for their care, but he is perfectly willing that there shall be added reclamation areas where nobody lives at 10 to 15 times the cost of this bill.

So I say there is nothing alarming about the cost, but I might add that I echo the sentiments of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS] 100 percent when he states it is a good thing that we do find out what war costs so we will not be so anxious to get into the next one.

I want to supplement this remark with the statement that we have a lot of foreigners who welched on their debts, who are owing us over twelve billion of dollars, and I have not seen the gentleman from California take the floor and rake them over the coals for not paying us even the interest on what they owe us. I would suggest that this Congress pay some attention to what is owed us by these foreign nations that have welched on their debts to us, who pay us nothing on the principal and now refuse to pay us the interest.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I yield.

Mr. BIERMANN. Has the gentleman any plan for collecting that $12,000,000,000?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Yes; I have a plan.

Mr. BIERMANN. I would like to hear it.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I do not know that I have the time to discuss it, but to begin with, we were given some bonds on that indebtedness, and my suggestion to the Treasurer of the United States is that we sell those bonds in the open market and use the cash, and one of the uses that we could put it to is to pay this pension for the Spanish-American War veterans. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. GASQUE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT].

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] made a very interesting speech upon this bill, the purpose of which is to provide a pension of $60 per month for every Spanish-American War veteran who has reached the age of 65 years. The speech showed study and it showed research. Some of the things the gentleman from California said are, of course, true, but in my opinion, if everything the gentleman said is true, and if all the suppositions he indulged in should prove to be correct, and if all of the predictions he made in regard to the matter should be fulfilled, still it is my belief his argument would not be sufficient to prevail against this bill.

This bill should stand on its own merits, and the question involved here is simply whether you think a pension of $60 a month for a Spanish War veteran who has reached the age of 65 years is too much. If you think that is not too much, you should vote for this bill.

The gentleman's predictions were interesting, particularly the prediction that in the course of time the World War veteran would be asking for a similar pension.

Let me say in reply to the gentleman that I am not at all sure that what he predicts will not happen. I can conceive even now that it well might happen. And I can also conceive that if it does happen there may be good and sufficient reasons for it. Furthermore, if it does happen, it can and ought to be decided at the time it happens, upon its merits, and its merits alone.

From the time of the Revolutionary War down to the present it has been the policy of this Government that those who offer their bodies as breastworks to the Nation in the time of the Nation's need shall be cared for by the Nation when they reach the age when they cannot take care of themselves. That has always been our policy. My opinion is that it will always continue to be. Only once did the Congress undertake to change that policy. In the hysterical days of 1933, under Presidential domination, the majority of this Congress passed the Economy Act under which all jurisdiction over veterans and veteran legislation was surrendered by the Congress and placed in the hands of the President. You all know what happened under that iniquitous act, which, thank God, has now been entirely repealed.

You know with what ruthlessness the veteran was treated while that law was in effect. You know with what insistence an outraged people demanded its repeal as soon as the people discovered what that law really was. The people then demanded that their Representatives in Congress recapture the authority they had surrendered to the President. And the Congress obeyed that mandate and recaptured that authority.

I am glad that the Congress is again in position to consider veterans' legislation calmly and independently and entirely upon its own responsibility. And that is the way, I believe, that the Congress now intends to consider and to dispose of the bill before us.

As for the cost of veterans' legislation to the taxpayers of this country, the taxpayers always know at the time they enter into a war and at the time they vote for a war what that cost is going to include. They know its cost is not merely for its immediate prosecution; they know that cost is going to last as long as there is a veteran living, and I agree with what was said a moment ago, that it may even be a good thing for the people of this Nation to have some experience now in the high cost of veterans' legislation. An adequate realization of this may be an important factor in keeping us out of another war.

Mr. Speaker, this bill should be considered on its own merits. Sixty dollars a month for a Spanish War veteran who has reached the age of 65 years is not, I think, anything more than simple justice and equity. If that is not equity, then what is equity? That is the only question to be decided here. In my opinion this bill, this belated bill, for the benefit of the Spanish War veteran who has arrived at the age of 65 years is long past due, and the legislation ought to be enacted without a dissenting vote. [Applause.]

Mr. GASQUE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I expect to support this bill for the many very cogent reasons already given and for other reasons that I could give myself. It costs a totally disabled Spanish War veteran who requires the aid and attendance of another as much to live as it does a Civil War veteran in the same condition. And in these strenuous days the cost of living is probably higher than it has ever been before. I favor this bill because I believe a totally disabled veteran is entitled to that amount if he cannot care for himself. In these days, when a man of 65 without a competency or a means of livelihood finds himself without a job, he has absolutely no chance to get one. The social-security laws which we have passed take care of those over 65 in practically all the States, but a veteran drawing a pension is not allowed to profit from that law. I cite this to show that we are showing a more liberal attitude toward all classes over 65, and why not do the same in the case of those who defended the Nation when war was winging its desolation over the world? I shall take the time granted me to discuss more fully the matter that was brought out by my friend from New York [Mr. TABER] and our distinguished minority floor leader [Mr. SNELL], as to whether or not this bill needs to be amended. The colloquies in which these two gentlemen and myself and others engaged raised a question as to whether the language of this bill was sufficient to insure that a veteran seeking a pension under the terms of this bill could not under its terms draw two pensions. At that time I felt that an amendment of the kind which they proposed was not necessary. I have read the bill carefully since then, and I have come to the conclusion that an amendment is not necessary. It strikes me that section 3 takes care of the situation admirably and completely. For instance, section 1 provides that the pensions of one group should be increased. Section 2 provides that the pensions of another group should be increased.

Section 3 provides that any veteran finding himself in either of these two groups mentioned in section 1 or section 2 should then make an application for an increase in pension, as provided in this bill. Applications will be furnished by the Veterans' Bureau and the Bureau will also provide regulations under which such application blanks will be sent out and regulations as to what language these blanks will contain and what the veteran will be required to show and prove in order to get consideration under this bill. In practically every case the new application will be built around the facts set out by the veteran in his papers on file with the Veterans' Bureau. It is a well-established fact that a veteran is not entitled to two pensions. The veterans are not seeking two pensions in this case. I think the amendment spoken of by the distinguished gentleman is not necessary. If it is passed, however, I can see nothing about it that will be harmful. If it is harmful, it can be taken out when the bill gets to the Senate. [Applause.]

Mr. GASQUE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, there are just two points I want to make. The first is a little first-hand experience. When I walked into the Chamber a few moments ago the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS] was discussing the difference between the service and the accommodations to the soldiers in the Spanish-American War and the late World War. I spent 2 years and a half in the Philippine Islands at the time of the Philippine Insurrection. I do not want to be understood as talking for myself, but I do want to say a word for my comrade veterans of the Spanish-American War. How would you like to sit down to a plate of snails? How would you like to banquet on locusts or grasshoppers? How would you like the experience of service in the United States Signal Corps, maintaining an office for 6 months afflicted with chills and fever as a chronic malarial condition, without a doctor or hospital accommodations anywhere, without any medicine, and with no food except what you could "bush-cow" for yourself? How would you enjoy living on green bananas? How would you like to hike in the rain or in the tropical sun for 2 or 3 days on emergency rations?

Those are some of the things that the soldier who served in the Spanish-American War and the Philippine Insurrection did. He had no canteens. There were no Knights of Columbus tents, no Y. M. C. A., no Salvation Army. There were no cots. He slept in the mud or wherever he could sleep, ate whatever he could eat, and drank whatever he could locate that was wet.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAY] has expired.

Mr. GASQUE. I yield the gentleman from Pennsylvania 1 additional minute.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. In this great day when our Nation is flooded with all kinds of "isms" and "osophies" and incantations that come from God knows where, you cannot go into the ranks of the veterans of the Spanish-American War and find that those "isms" will take root in that group of men nor can find lodgment in their ranks. There are no Bolsheviks that I know of in the hearts of loyal, patriotic Spanish-American War veterans. You will not find in all this land, among all our great organizations, any more patriotic men, any more patriotic sentiment than inspires those veterans of that greatest of all volunteer armies. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN].

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote against this bill because I do not subscribe to the doctrine that the mere fact that a young man wore the royal raiment of the Army or the Navy or the Marine Corps in the time of his country's peril entitles him to special monetary benefits from his Government after he comes out of the service unharmed. I hope that during my service in this House I shall never cast a vote to subscribe to that doctrine, which I believe does as much to undermine the morale and the patriotism of certain groups of young people in this country as any other one thing.

The amount of pensions we pay to the real deserving veterans of the recent wars is shamefully low. A widow of a man killed at Chateau-Thierry gets $30 a month. A man suffering permanent disability, service connected, gets a very small amount—I do not now recall just how much. Those are the people who deserve the financial help to be voted by this Congress. The doctrine that merely because young men in good health and foot-loose put on the uniform of their country at wartime should thereafter be considered an especially privileged group violates all ideas of patriotism and Americanism that are in my heart. I never shall cast a vote to subscribe to that doctrine while I am in this House.

The idea has been expressed that all these men are paupers and decrepit because they are 65 years of age. One of the wealthiest men in my district is a veteran of the Spanish-American War and he is drawing a pension, and within the month he wrote to me to see how he could get it increased. He is a millionaire, who came out unscathed. I know other Spanish War veterans who, though well to do, are drawing pensions.

Let us see about the Spanish-American War. There were engaged in the Spanish-American War, during the less than 4 months it lasted, 280,000 American troops. Thirty-eight years later, on June 30, 1936, there were 228,000 persons, veterans and their widows, drawing pensions on account of the Spanish-American War, which lasted 4 months.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, they drew out of the United States Treasury more than $108,000,000.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield briefly.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. The pension rolls of the Spanish-American War also include veterans of the Philippine Insurrection and the Boxer Rebellion. That increases the number.

Mr. BIERMANN. I think my figures do not include any but Spanish veterans. I got these figures out of the 1937 World Almanac, pages 938 and 939, and my understanding of the figures is that they do not include the Philippine Insurrection or the Boxer Rebellion. The dates of the hostilities as set out on page 939 seem to me to show clearly that only the Spanish War is included.

The gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] I think has performed a courageous service here in opposing this bill. I do not like to impute unworthy motives to Members of this body, but when we have been voting on veterans' legislation I have often wondered whether or not the fact that in the average district of the United States there are from eight to ten thousand veterans of various wars and perhaps 25,000 of their intimate relatives of voting age had anything to do with the course of the vote.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Iowa 3 additional minutes.

Mr. BIERMANN. I would like to see House Joint Resolution 442, by the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO], adopted by this body and the other body, so that the entire pension system of the United States may be investigated and remodeled and put on a basis of justice.

I would like to wipe out the shame of a widow of a service-connected veteran of the World War getting only $30 a month. I would like to see these men who really have service-connected disability much more generously treated. I would like to see stricken off the pension rolls of this country every veteran of any war who came out of it unscathed and who is not now suffering from his service in the Army. No other country in the wide world subscribes to our doctrine regarding pensions.

A few years ago our pension system had become so inflated that to the World War veterans and their dependents we were paying more benefits than Great Britain, France, and Germany combined, although their casualties were something like 42 times as many as ours. I hope that sometime we can have a calm discussion and an equitable revision of our pension laws. I would like to have a secret ballot, if that were possible under the rules of this body, to remodel our pension system, giving generous treatment to those suffering disabilities and to the dependents of those who died of service-connected disabilities.

The Economy Act was mentioned. I voted for the Economy Act and would vote for it again in the same circumstances. I think one of the mistakes we made was when we got away from the Economy Act. The Economy Act struck off the pension rolls of the country more than 400,000 former soldiers who were drawing pensions for disabilities that had no connection, not even a theoretical connection, with their service in the Army. I am glad to see that that one feature of the Economy Act still prevails.

Mr. MOTT. It also cut down pensions of Civil War veterans to $15 a month, did it not?

Mr. BIERMANN. It also provided that the President could change the rules regarding those pensions so that deserving ones could get more pensions after the Economy Act than before.

Mr. MOTT. It also cut down some service-connected, disabled war veterans so that they got only $10 a month.

Mr. BIERMANN. I do not believe that the record shows that. I believe the record shows that most of the deserving ones got more after the Economy Act than they got before.

Mr. MOTT. The act authorized the President to cut them down to $7 a month if he wanted to, and in many cases he went very near the limit.

Mr. BIERMANN. I do not think the record will show that any injustice was done to any service-connected case.

Some time ago a World War overseas veteran of Des Moines, Iowa, writing of another general gratuity, offered to veterans without regard to service, disability, or need, said:

> If I accept this "political bribe", I must forever renounce my title as a true veteran and a patriot. * * * When the love for money becomes greater than the love for country, veterans who returned in perfect health may well conceal their identity for they are no longer patriots.

But the blame for our unjust, demoralizing pension system is not so much on the rank and file of the veterans as it is on two other groups. One of them is some of the men in prominent or high-salaried places in veterans' organizations who seem to believe that they must continually ask for more and more for their constituents. As the disabled and the deserving are a very small minority, they ask for money for the multitude who are not deserving.

The other group are politicians, who during many years of our history have used pensions practically as campaign funds.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GASQUE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PETERSON].

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope this bill will pass the House without a dissenting vote. I realize that I may not change a vote. You are familiar with the bill. It has been thoroughly discussed; but I rise to show my appreciation for the service of those men who served during the Spanish War period, the Philippine Insurrection, and the China Relief Expedition. I know we cannot measure service to the country in economics, we cannot measure it in dollars and cents. I realize that when we pay pensions we have to raise the money; but I realize likewise that the sentiment that causes men to give their service to their country should inspire in the breasts of others a sentiment of appreciation for that service, and that appreciation should certainly be expressed by the Government of the country and the people of the country when the men who served are in need. When I say in need I do not mean to say that they should have to prove or make any showing of such necessity. When a man reaches the age set forth in this bill, 65, he may face a dire need for funds; but even if he does not, the funds can be used in his living, in his pleasures, for his benefit, for his family or his loved ones, for adding a little more happiness in the eventide of life.

I am opposed to a "needs" clause being written into this bill. I understand that such an amendment may be offered today, but I hope that it will be voted down because when a veteran secures a pension it should be as a gratuity from a grateful Government and should be a badge of honorable service rather than an evidence of pauperism. I will oppose a needs clause; I will oppose a pauper's oath, but I am glad to support a recognition of valiant service and would be even glad to support this bill with the age limit reduced. Service connection has been hard for many Spanish War veterans to prove. Records were badly kept and lost. Incipient fever, exposure, putrid food took their toll later on. One of my earliest recollections was seeing the soldiers in the camps and hospitals. Sentiment has always made me want to assist them and their widows, and actual experience in handling hundreds of veterans' cases has caused that desire to become practical and set in my mind and heart. I hope that this bill passes, and I hope the bill reported out by the Committee on War Claims, H. R. 2904, may also pass. A rather long belated debt due for travel pay to certain participants in the War with Spain, I understand, may follow this bill. I think, frankly, that the committee has done a good deed in bringing this bill before the House. I am glad to raise my voice in behalf of this measure. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all persons who served 90 days or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the War with Spain, the Philippine Insurrection, or the China Relief Expedition between the dates of April 21, 1898, and July 4, 1902, both dates inclusive, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, or who, having served less than 90 days, were discharged for disability incurred in the service in line of duty, upon reaching the age of 65 years shall, upon making proof of such fact, be placed upon the pension roll and entitled to receive a pension of $60 a month: Provided, That all leaves of absence and furloughs under General Orders, No. 130, August 29, 1898, War Department, shall be included in determining the period of pensionable service: Provided further, That the provisions, limitations, and benefits of this section be, and hereby are, extended to and shall include any woman who served honorably as a nurse, chief nurse, or superintendent of the Nurse Corps under contract for 90 days or more between April 21, 1898, and February 2, 1901, inclusive, and to any such nurse, regardless of length of service, who was released from service before the expiration of the 90 days because of disability contracted by her while in the service in line of duty.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: Page 2, line 15, after the word "duty", change the period to a colon and insert the following: "Provided further, That no pension shall be paid under this act to any person who paid an income tax during the previous year."

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Chairman, this is the amendment to which I referred when I was speaking previously on the bill. It provides that no person shall be entitled to receive a pension under the terms of this act who would be eligible for a pension, if during the previous year he had found it necessary because of his income to pay an income tax; in other words, if he is actually receiving such an income as to warrant payment of a tax to the Government, then he would be denied the benefits of this legislation in the way of a pension.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. Would this affect the right of veterans who pay income taxes who receive their pension compensation under existing law?

Mr. COSTELLO. No; the language is "that no person who is entitled to receive a pension under this act." This would refer exclusively to this particular act and to nothing else.

Mr. MOTT. Then if a veteran over 65 years of age, who is now drawing $40 or $50 a month, for example, pays an income tax after this act is passed, he would not be denied the privilege of drawing the $40 or $50 under the present law?

Mr. COSTELLO. If in the year 1936 the veteran paid an income tax, regardless of the amount, then in 1937 he would not be entitled to receive a pension under this act. If he did not pay an income tax in 1937, then he would be entitled in 1938 to again receive the benefits of the act.

If a person has been receiving such an income as to make it necessary to pay a tax thereon, he should not be receiving a pension from the Government; and that is the purpose in offering the amendment. In other words, as the act is now written a Member of Congress who happened to be 65 years of age and a Spanish War veteran would be entitled to receive $60 a month. Under the terms of the amendment, since he would pay an income tax, he would be stopped from receiving the pension. Otherwise there is no restriction whatsoever.

Mr. MOTT. Would it prevent him from receiving any Spanish War veteran pension at all?

Mr. COSTELLO. No. The wording is such as to limit it to this act exclusively.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DOWELL. Under this act when they arrive at a certain age they come within its provisions. If this sort of an amendment is placed in the bill, will you not cut off every Spanish-American War veteran who pays an income tax, whether his income tax is $1 or $2? I am opposed to this amendment. I think they ought to be treated alike and every one ought to have the benefits under this bill who are entitled to them.

Mr. COSTELLO. Frankly, I do not believe general legislation granting pensions should be enacted for persons who may be receiving an adequate income and who may not be in need. I do not think such persons enjoying a taxable income should receive $60 a month as a pension in addition. In order to try to make it necessary that this pension be paid only to those in need I offer the amendment, which will prevent those who are paying an income tax from receiving the pension. I do not believe they are entitled to receive it.

Mr. WITHROW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. WITHROW. The gentleman spoke of paying any income tax. What does the gentleman mean by "income tax"?

Mr. COSTELLO. I mean a Federal income tax.

Mr. WITHROW. I think the gentleman should make that clear in his amendment. As I read the amendment, it would apply just as well to a State income tax.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert the word "Federal" in front of the words "income tax."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object. I do not desire to discuss the merits of the amendment but want to call attention to the fact that under a decision of the Supreme Court rendered in March of this year, it was held that a State, city, or county official or employee of a State, city, or county was not required to pay a Federal income tax on his or her salary. If the gentleman's suggestion is followed with reference to amending this amendment, then he eliminates every State official and every State employee as well as officials and employees of cities and counties. I do not believe the gentleman wants to do that. We are trying to correct that situation, caused by the Court's decision.

I have introduced a resolution providing for a constitutional amendment which will make everybody receiving sufficient income pay not only a State but a Federal income tax. Now, if the suggestion advanced prevails, you eliminate those not employed by a State or subdivision thereof but permit the employee on the public pay roll to receive the benefits of this bill. Surely you do not want such discrimination. Therefore, I object to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO].

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I appeal to the Members of the House to vote down the amendment just offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO]. The amendment would single out the Spanish War veterans as a group of veterans from all other groups of war veterans and discriminate against them as a group and a class, because they may chance to be paying a small income tax, the same as other citizens. There is now no legislation of similar nature applying to veterans of the World War, the Civil War, the Indian wars, or any other war in which our country has ever engaged. There certainly is no reason why the veterans of the great volunteer army of the Spanish-American War should be discriminated against. On the contrary, they should be treated at least as well as any other group of war veterans in this country, and all war veterans are deserving of just treatment.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] offered an amendment that is based upon the individual veteran paying an income tax. The State of California has community-property laws, and the veterans of that State would have a tremendous advantage over the veterans of all the other States of the Union which do not have community-property laws, because the income could be twice as much in California and still not subject the veteran to the payment of an income tax.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. The gentleman may be correct, and that is all the more reason why there should be no such discrimination as is contemplated by the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the Economy Act of 1933 contained a somewhat similar provision—a needs clause—relating to the Spanish War veterans; and every Member of this House will bear me out when I say that after that law went into effect the veterans of the Spanish-American War were subjected to investigation of their individual cases.

They were harassed; they were annoyed; they were persecuted. I know of my own personal knowledge of scores of cases in which it was impossible to secure any measure of justice for a veteran of the Spanish-American War on account of the so-called needs clause which was provided by the Economy Act. The result was that 2 years ago, in 1935, when this House and Congress enacted my bill repealing the Economy Act as it applied to the Spanish-American War veterans and restored in full their pensions, it struck out the so-called needs clause, and the Congress placed the veterans of the Spanish-American War on the same basis as the veterans of all other wars. I submit to the House we should do the same thing here today. There is absolutely no reason why the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] should be adopted, and I hope the Members of the House will vote it down. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BIERMANN: Page 1, line 7, after the second comma, insert "or the World War."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BIERMANN) there were—ayes 4, noes 15.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. Any soldier, sailor, or marine, or nurse with service as defined in section 1 of this act now on the pension roll or who may be hereafter entitled to a pension under existing laws, or under this act on account of his service during the War with Spain, the Philippine Insurrection, or China Relief Expedition, who is now or hereafter may become, on account of age or physical or mental disabilities, helpless or blind, or so nearly helpless or blind as to need or require the regular aid and attendance of another person, shall be given a rate of $100 a month.

SEC. 3. That the pension or increased rate of pension herein provided for shall commence from the date of filing application therefor after the approval of this act in such form as may be prescribed by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, provided they are entitled to a pension under the provisions of this act, and the issue of a check in payment of a pension for which the execution and submission of a voucher was not required shall constitute payment in the event of the death of the pensioner on or after the last day of the period covered by such check, and it shall not be canceled, but shall become an asset of the estate of the deceased pensioner.

SEC. 4. Nothing contained in this act shall be held to affect or diminish the additional pension to those on the roll designated as the Army and Navy Medal of Honor Roll, as provided by the act of April 27, 1916, but any pension or increase of pension herein provided for shall be in addition thereto: Provided, That no one while an inmate of the United States Soldiers' Home or of any National or State Soldiers' Home shall be paid more than $50 per month under this act.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: Page 3, line 21, after the word "act", strike out the period and insert the following: "Provided further, That any pension paid to any person under the provisions of this act shall be in lieu of any other pension to which he might be entitled under any other war-service pension act."

Mr. GASQUE. Mr. Chairman, this is an amendment which the committee has accepted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BOILEAU: Page 3, line 20, after the word "Home", insert the following: "and while the Government of the United States contributes toward defraying the expense incurred in providing such inmates with domiciliary care."

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I believe the chairman of the Committee on Pensions is willing to accept this amendment, which merely provides against discrimination in the States where we have State homes which care for veterans.

This provision in the bill now reads as follows:

Provided, That no one while an inmate of the United States Soldiers' Home or of any other National or State soldiers' home shall be paid more than $50 per month under this act.

This provision calls for a reduction of $10 per month even though the person be in a State soldiers' home. Only five or six States in the Union have State homes, some of which have requirements as severe as the Federal laws. In the State of Wisconsin, however, we have very liberal laws providing for domiciliary care for veterans of all wars. We have the Wisconsin veterans' home at Waupaca, Wis., which cares not only for veterans of the World War but for their wives. This is a beautiful home, with cottages where a man and wife can live together. It is a splendid home, and is maintained by the State government.

It is true that veterans in the home who would be otherwise entitled to domiciliary care in a national home receive $10 a month from the Federal Government, but we have many veterans in our State institution in Waupaca, Wis., who would not be eligible for domiciliary care in a national home. Some of these men would receive compensation in the amount of $60 a month if they were on the outside, but their compensation is reduced $10 a month by the Federal Government even though the Federal Government does not contribute anything, not one cent, to their domiciliary care. I maintain that this is a discrimination against the States which are liberal to these veterans.

My amendment would provide for a reduction in the pension from $60 to $50, provided the Federal Government was contributing anything whatsoever toward the domiciliary care, so that all the veterans in State homes who would otherwise be eligible to care in a national home would, under the provisions of my amendment, have their compensation reduced $10 a month only, provided the Federal Government made that contribution to the States, as it does in all cases where the veteran is entitled to domiciliary care.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. How would the gentleman's amendment affect the case of a helpless veteran in a Government hospital?

Mr. BOILEAU. It would not affect him at all. He would still get $50 a month. The bill now provides he shall get only $50 a month while he is in a national home. My amendment would not change this at all.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. How would the gentleman's amendment affect a man who gets only $30 a month?

Mr. BOILEAU. It would not affect him at all. Under this amendment, if a man were in a State home, they would take $10 off his compensation, although the Federal Government did not contribute one cent toward his maintenance. If anyone should get that $10 it should be the State. In some cases the Federal Government does contribute toward the domiciliary care of veterans in State homes, and in such cases the veteran would receive only $50, not $60, so there is no discrimination.

The chairman of the Committee on Pensions has accepted this amendment. I hope it will meet with the approval of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That nothing contained in the provisions of this act shall be construed to diminish or reduce any pension heretofore granted.

Mr. GASQUE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WOODRUM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5030) granting pensions and increases of pensions to certain soldiers, sailors, and nurses of the War with Spain, the Philippine Insurrection, or the China Relief Expedition, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. GASQUE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eighty-three Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

OFFICERS AND SOLDIERS WHO SERVED IN PHILIPPINE ISLANDS BEYOND PERIOD OF ENLISTMENT

The Clerk called the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on War Claims I call up the bill (H. R. 2904) for the relief of officers and soldiers of the volunteer service of the United States mustered into service in the War with Spain and who were held in service in the Philippine Islands after the ratification of the treaty of peace, April 11, 1899.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all officers and soldiers of the volunteer service of the United States mustered into service for the War with Spain who were held to service in the Philippine Islands for service in the Philippine Insurrection after April 11, 1899, and after the conclusion of peace with the Kingdom of Spain, shall be entitled to the travel pay and allowance for subsistence provided in sections 1289 and 1290, Revised Statutes, as then amended and in effect, as though discharged April 11, 1899, by reason of expiration of enlistment, and appointed or reenlisted April 12, 1899, without deduction of travel pay and subsistence paid such officers or soldiers on final muster out subsequent to April 11, 1899.

SEC. 2. Claims hereunder shall be settled in the General Accounting Office, and shall be payable to the officer or soldier, or if the person who rendered the service is dead, then to his widow, children, in equal shares (but not to their issue), father, or mother as provided by existing acts relating to the settlement of accounts of deceased officers and soldiers of the Army (34 Stat. 750), but if there is no widow, child, father, or mother at the date of settlement, then no payment on account of the claim shall be made.

Mr. DORSEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. This bill seeks to correct an injustice that was done those volunteers who enlisted for the War with Spain and served in the Philippine Islands. A bill similar to this has passed the House before and has passed the Senate on two occasions. When these men enlisted it was under the act of April 22, 1898 (30 Stat. 361), which reads in part as follows:

That the Volunteer Army shall be maintained only during the existence of the war or while war is imminent: * * * Provided, That all enlistments for the Volunteer Army shall be for a term of 2 years, unless sooner terminated, and that all officers and men composing said Army shall be discharged from the service of the United States when the purposes for which they were called into service shall have been accomplished or on the conclusion of hostilities.

The Congress sensed it would be necessary to keep a police force in the Philippine Islands after the termination of the War with Spain, and in March 1899 a law was passed granting the President authority to have these volunteers reenlisted for that purpose. When it was apparent there were going to be hostilities through the action of the insurrectionists in the islands, The Adjutant General of the Army communicated with General Otis, in charge of troops in the Philippines, asking if these men who were in the volunteer service and whose enlistment ceased with the conclusion of the War with Spain would volunteer to stay in the islands until sufficient regulars could be sent there to relieve them. This message was given to these men and in some cases the units that were together had an opportunity to vote upon it, while in other cases, where the men were scattered, the officers spoke for them. They agreed to reenlist for the required period. At that time these men were promised by the officers under General Otis that if they reenlisted or would volunteer for further service they would be given the allowance of travel pay and subsistence either in kind or cash as provided by existing law.

At the conclusion of their enlistment they were entitled to such allowances. Some of these men under their legal rights demanded their discharge. They were discharged and they received those allowances in cash, and then shortly thereafter reenlisted, not only getting travel allowances then but also receiving transportation and allowances in kind after the close of hostilities. But the great body of the volunteers, seeing the necessity of having a force in the Philippines until they could be relieved by regulars, with the insurrectionists in the very trenches they had built, with better arms and better ammunition, volunteered to stay there. Unfortunately this group of men were not mustered out and then again mustered in, because they were scattered through the islands. Technically they did not reenlist, but actually they did, and it is on that technicality that this claim has never been paid. These men served there under the most trying conditions, under the intense heat of a tropical sun, with poor clothing, bad food, and poor equipment, but their loyalty and patriotism to this country stood them in good stead at that time. Through their service, because it would have been impossible to send regulars there to replace them in a short time, they saved this country from perhaps a long-drawn-out struggle and considerably more expense than this bill involves, and put down the insurrection. If there has ever been a moral obligation on the part of this Government, it is due these men and it is long past due, because of a very direct promise that was made at the time they volunteered to serve until they could be relieved.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words. I had introduced a bill, H. R. 4704, which is similar to this one. I believe if we are interested in the welfare of any definite legislation, we should be glad to withdraw our bills and permit similar bills to take their place if it is to accomplish the same purpose. When I had the honor to serve in this House at a former time, I was deeply interested in my comrades of the Spanish War. I went into their records, and I think my colleagues would be interested to know that I found that those men who served in the Spanish War in 1898 comprised the largest volunteer army in the history of civilization, and I think all America would be interested to know that per man enlisted there were more casualties in the War with Spain than in any other war in which America participated.

The tragedy is that because of the small number involved in the Spanish-American War these soldiers have never been able to get just recognition for their services. I find that practically all of the pensions of the past have been based on the number of those who receive it. In other words, the great number of my comrades in the World War made it possible for their maximum pension to be $100 per month. Then I find that the Civil War veterans, with a lesser number involved, had a $62.50-per-month maximum. Then the Spanish-American War veterans, with a still smaller number, had up until recently only a $30-per-month maximum.

I am sure your fair-mindedness would lead you to believe that no pension should be based upon the number of those who receive it. If our Government has an obligation, it has an obligation to one man as well as to three or four million, who can exert more pressure. So I say in behalf of those men who did serve under the tropical heat of Cuba and suffered many privations in the Philippines, and, in fact, many of them have suffered throughout their lives as a result of their services, should recover this belated recognition.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWEENEY. I yield gladly.

Mr. LUCAS. How many men are involved if this becomes law?

Mr. McSWEENEY. I do not know. They struck out one provision relative to dependents, and I really do not know how many that will affect. My bill involved about 8,000 men. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER] may be able to tell you the exact number.

Mr. BEITER. The average pay is about $400 and the total number of men involved is about 8,000.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I feel as an ex-service man of the World War that I must not only aid my own comrades but also our comrades of the Spanish War who have been so long neglected and who are now advanced in years. I anxiously await an opportunity to vote for this bill.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

This is a claim due officers and enlisted men in the volunteer service of the War with Spain who served in the Philippines beyond the period of their enlistment. It calls for the payment to these men of travel-pay allowance which they did not get at the time because of a technicality. The men who were mustered out were given their travel pay, then turned around and immediately reenlisted without leaving the islands. The men whose claims are included in this bill were not mustered out at the end of the War with Spain, but at the request of their superior officers remained on the scene to be ready and available during the expected rebellion in the Philippines. They were later sent home, it is true, but they did not receive the extra travel pay which the men who were earlier mustered out and later reenlisted received. Because the technicality of mustering them out one minute and swearing them in the next was overlooked or neglected, these men have been deprived of their travel pay which so many of their fellow comrades received.

The men that received their travel pay made up the Regular Army. The men that did not get this allowance made up the volunteers. It is true that a volunteer army of these United States is mustered into service to be maintained only during the existence of a war, but the law provides also that they shall be maintained while war is imminent. The volunteers provided for in this bill remained in the Philippines while war was imminent or, if not war, a rebellion. They should receive the same benefits as the men in the Regular Army received.

Mr. Speaker, I think the attitude of the veterans can best be expressed in their own words. I have here a clipping from the National Tribune, a veterans' publication published in Washington, in which one veteran states:

> After a contract has been drawn up and signed, for one party to change the terms of the contract without the knowledge or the consent of the other party constitutes fraud a private citizen could not get away with, but that is exactly what the Government did to many of the men who served in the Philippines.
> I volunteered and fought for my country, but in a Regular regiment, as all the volunteer outfits in Greater New York were filled up, and I, being too young, could not get in, so on February 7, 1899, I enlisted in the Ninth United States Infantry, served in the Philippines, in the Boxer Rebellion, then returned again to the Philippines and reenlisted.
> I signed a contract which stated I was to receive a day's pay and a day's subsistence for every 20 miles of travel from place of discharge to place of enlistment. I should have been discharged in Manila, but was sent back to Angel Island, Calif., discharged, and paid off at the rate of 4 cents a mile to New York City. That was on March 21, 1902, and so I served in foreign service 3 years, 1 month, and 15 days. I think that all survivors of this particular group should come forward and find out what can be done.

Mr. Speaker, some reference has been made to the President's veto message. The veto message contained objections to the attorneys' fees in the bill which we passed last year and which was approved by the Senate. It objected to a provision that the heirs of the veterans would be eligible to receive this compensation. However, that has been corrected in this new bill, and the compensation will only go to the immediate survivor or his widow or his sons and daughters. It does not go to their heirs. This reduces the number of beneficiaries under this legislation and makes the number approximately 8,000.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BEITER. I yield.

Mr. DOWELL. Is it not true that if these veterans had not remained in the islands and performed their duty it would have cost the Government very much more, and much that had been gained by their services would have been lost to the Government?

Mr, BEITER. Yes. Probably 10 times as much.

Mr. DOWELL. There is no question about it. It seems to me this has already been too long delayed, and it ought to be passed by a unanimous vote today.

Mr. BEITER. It is a moral obligation on the part of the Government and should be paid.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEITER. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. What is the total amount involved?

Mr. BEITER. The exact figure cannot be determined until we determine the exact number of men who will benefit by it; but it is estimated that 8,000 men will benefit by it, and the average amount to go to each man will be approximately $400.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEITER. I yield.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Has the gentleman any assurance that the President will not veto it as he did before?

Mr. BEITER. I have no assurance, but the objections that were expressed in the veto message of last year have been corrected in the new bill.

Mr. DOWELL. Should we not perform our duty anyway and pass the bill?

Mr. BEITER. Yes.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEITER. I yield.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Is it not true that all the facts involved were contained in the War Department records to which the gentleman has access?

Mr. BEITER. Yes.

Mr. McSWEENEY. So you are taking your factual material from the War Department?

Mr. BEITER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEITER. I yield.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is this not the same bill that we passed 2 years ago?

Mr. BEITER. This is the same bill that we passed last year and was pocket-vetoed by the President. The objectionable features of the bill have been corrected in this new bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. Under the provisions of the other bill, as I recollect them, 15,000 persons would have benefited. I understood the gentleman to say that under this bill 8,000 people would benefit.

Mr. BEITER. That is because we have eliminated the heirs of the veterans as beneficiaries.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Has the Committee on War Claims any other bill?

Mr. BEITER. We have no other bill today.

The Clerk resumed the call of the committees.

ARCH HURLEY CONSERVANCY DISTRICT, NEW MEXICO

Mr. WHITE of Idaho (when the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation was called). Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, I call up the bill (H. R. 7680) to authorize the construction of a Federal reclamation project to furnish a water supply for the lands of the Arch Hurley conservancy district in New Mexico, and ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent that this bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole? Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY] to explain the bill.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that this bill is to authorize the Reclamation Service to set up a Federal irrigation district in the State of New Mexico. The bill has the unanimous consent of the committee and the recommendation of the Department. Under its terms not one cent of money will be expended from the Federal Treasury. The Reclamation Service will take certain of its funds, which are to be repaid by this district, to carry out such work as is authorized.

The reason we are asking for the establishment of this district is that we are attempting to raise some feed for cattle in that district, because in the past we have been forced to send cattle to Old Mexico at certain times during drought. It is not the intention at all to put under cultivation lands with crops that will be competitive.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How much money will come from the reclamation fund?

Mr. DEMPSEY. It depends upon the number of acres. I think it is intended to bring in 30,000 acres. The money will come from the reclamation fund, but I point out to the gentleman from Massachusetts that from the State of New Mexico certain oil moneys flow into the reclamation fund. We are simply asking permission to borrow a portion of that by mortgaging our lands to the Reclamation Service as provided by law to establish this district and for the construction of ditching, and so forth.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Does this bill come from the committee with a unanimous report?

Mr. DEMPSEY. It does.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the request of the gentleman from Idaho.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7680) to authorize the construction of a Federal reclamation project to furnish a water supply for the lands of the Arch Hurley conservancy district in New Mexico, with Mr. PETTENGILL in the Chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY].

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, this bill, H. R. 7680, provides for the construction of a reclamation district in Quay County, N. Mex. This county is situated in the Dust Bowl. We suffer there from dust very similarily to the way people along the Ohio and Mississippi at times suffer from flood, the only difference being that we suffer more frequently. This is a cattle country, one of the greatest cattle-grazing countries we have, at times. During drought years it has been necessary to send as many as 40,000 head of our cattle into Old Mexico for grazing purposes because we did not have sufficient means to irrigate the land.

This bill has the unanimous support of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield.

Mr. TABER. How many acres are involved?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I think about 30,000.

Mr. TABER. Is it now under cultivation?

Mr. DEMPSEY. It is a grazing section, but due to the drought and due to the fact that it is in this Dust Bowl area we at times are not able to graze our cattle there because the grass will not grow without water. We have impounded water, and if we can construct some irrigation ditches, we can then irrigate this land for alfalfa growing and thus feed these cattle, which otherwise we would have to send to Old Mexico.

We are not asking a cent from the Federal Government. We are asking that the Irrigation and Reclamation Service provide the money when and if they can, and if they can, we will pay back every dollar of it.

Mr. TABER. Is there anything in this bill that says it shall be paid out of the reclamation fund?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. TABER. There is?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. TABER. Where?

Mr. DEMPSEY. If the gentleman will read the report, he will find this bill was drawn at the instance of the Reclamation Service. Here is a letter addressed to CARL HATCH, Senator from New Mexico:

I have received your letter of May 28, with your amended draft of S. 2086 for the construction of a Federal reclamation project to irrigate the lands of the Arch Hurley conservancy district in New Mexico.

If the bill is to be enacted, it would seem (1) that the title should be amended so as to read as follows: "A bill to authorize the construction of a Federal reclamation project to furnish a water supply for the lands of the Arch Hurley conservancy district in New Mexico", and (2) that lines 3 to 6, on page 1 of the bill, should be amended so as to read as follows: "That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to construct a Federal reclamation project for the irrigation of the lands of the Arch Hurley conservancy district in New Mexico under the Federal."

The bill, if enacted, as now revised, would authorize the use of the reclamation fund for the construction of the project, and therefore the project will not increase the expenditures from the general funds in the Treasury, as was first proposed.

The letter states further:

The Acting Director of the Bureau of the Budget advises that the proposed bill as now amended would not be in conflict with the financial program of the President, and its enactment is recommended.

The bill before us contains provisions recommended by the Interior Department; so that it has the approval of all the departments to which it has been submitted, and, in addition, it has the approval of the members of the Irrigation Committee on both sides of the aisle.

Mr. TABER. There is absolutely nothing in the bill that indicates the construction shall be paid out of the reclamation fund that I can see. Maybe I have not had an opportunity to study it sufficiently, but if the gentleman will point it out, I will appreciate it.

Mr. DEMPSEY. There is nothing in this bill that calls for an appropriation from the Federal Treasury.

Mr. TABER. Oh, yes; it would call for an appropriation from the Treasury unless it is limited to the reclamation fund.

Mr. DEMPSEY. If the gentleman feels this bill should be further amended to safeguard his thought in that respect, I am agreeable to accepting such amendment. As a matter of fact, the fund that goes into the Reclamation Service comes in large part from the State of New Mexico. The Federal Government owns a considerable percentage of the land in New Mexico.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOUSTON. There has not been any objection made by any department to this bill?

Mr. DEMPSEY. No.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Interior Department approves it?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. GREEVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. GREEVER. Is it not true that the dam for the impounding of the waters for this land has already been constructed?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes. We simply want to construct now some irrigation ditches. Let me point out to you what is happening in our State at the present time. The oil land is owned by the Federal Government. It is true the surface is owned by some poor homesteaders, but the mineral rights are retained by the Federal Government. Certain of this money came to the irrigation fund for this particular service. We have turned into the fund this year $313,000 from the State of New Mexico. A similar sum has been turned over to the Federal Treasury for whatever purpose the Treasury may eventually use it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman tell us how much money is in the reclamation fund at the present time?

Mr. DEMPSEY. There will be about $11,000,000 this year.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Is not the question of the gentleman from New York answered in lines 3 to 6, page 1, of the bill, which reads as follows?—

> That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to construct a Federal reclamation project for the irrigation of the lands of the Arch Hurley conservancy district in New Mexico under the Federal reclamation laws.

That means the money comes out of the Federal reclamation fund?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Absolutely. It could not come from any place else.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Further referring to the question of the gentleman from New York, it is answered on page 2 of the report of the Acting Secretary, reading as follows:

> The bill, if enacted as now revised, would authorize the use of the reclamation fund for the construction of projects, and therefore the project will not increase the expenditures from the general funds in the Treasury, as was first proposed.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. THOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. THOM. I want to inquire about this particular clause which has to do with the contract to be made with each owner of more than 160 irrigable acres. Has that always been customary with irrigation projects?

Mr. DEMPSEY. That is customary with reclamation projects. In setting up a reclamation project the idea is to take care of as many people as possible, not just a few people. In other words, we do not take care of the large landowner, but rather those who own not to exceed 160 acres.

Mr. THOM. Is that done universally?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Is it not a fact this comes under the so-called Conchas Dam that is now practically completed, or soon will be? This was a flood-control project and the water should be put to some use?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Especially inasmuch as it does not cost the Federal Treasury any money.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. This would put the water that is stored in the reservoir of the Conchas Dam to use?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes. We feel it desirable and good business to use the water, especially when it does not cost the Treasury of the United States one dime.

May I say in regard to agriculture in our State that we raise less than 15 percent of what we consume in the State of New Mexico. We in the Rocky Mountain States are coming to the time when the only agriculture will be that raised under irrigation, because that is the only agriculture that can be depended upon year by year.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. How much would this proposition cost?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I imagine it would cost about $80 per acre.

Mr. TABER. It would cost a couple of million dollars?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes; I would say about that.

Mr. TABER. The land is not now under cultivation at all?

Mr. DEMPSEY. It is not under cultivation except for grazing, and it will be under cultivation only to raise foodstuffs for the cattle, alfalfa and agricultural products of that kind which we cannot ship in.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman on the other side yield some time?

Mr. GEARHART. I have no requests for time, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does anybody in opposition desire time?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition in opposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. TABER. The whole trouble with this bill is——

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. TABER. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I would like to know how much time the gentleman yielded himself.

Mr. TABER. I do not have to yield myself any particular amount of time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 1 hour and can use as much of that time as he may desire.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, the whole trouble with this bill is that we are at the present time being cautioned and being asked by the Department of Agriculture to curtail the production of agricultural products. Of course, this includes cattle as well as everything else included in that term, and it did include cattle when they had that kind of a bill up before. How anyone can justify going ahead at a time when the Department of Agriculture is asking for that kind of authority again and can justify the expenditure of a dollar for bringing under cultivation land which is not now under cultivation is beyond me. I do not believe there is anything else to the case. It is simply a case of putting a lot more land under cultivation and spending a lot of money through the Secretary of Agriculture to stop the raising of crops at other places.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the water which is to be utilized on this irrigation district is all ready to be stored as a flood-control project; and that if we do not utilize the water it will escape to the sea, after all the expense of impounding and restoring the water to the land has been incurred?

Mr. TABER. What of it? Why should we go ahead and spend $2,000,000 more to put additional land under cultivation when the Secretary of Agriculture tells us we do not need it?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Is it the idea of the gentleman that after going to the expense of storing this water and making it available we should let it escape to the sea because we would only bring more land into cultivation?

Mr. TABER. We should not have stored the water to start with. When the Secretary of Agriculture says we do not need the products of the land, why should we go ahead and spend $2,000,000 additional to bring the land under cultivation?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman realizes there are 12,000,000 people unemployed and we are taxed to support them. Does not the gentleman think they ought to have an opportunity to go on this land and become self-supporting?

Mr. TABER. That is not what is going to happen. You are going to put some other land out of cultivation if you put this land under cultivation. That is the trouble with the whole situation. You are working one hand against the other. You are not going to take any of the unemployed off the rolls.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Certainly.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman realizes the land about which he is talking is land we will use for grazing instead of sending our cattle to Old Mexico. Does not the gentleman believe it would be better to use our own land in New Mexico, in the United States, rather than send the cattle to a foreign country? The Secretary of Agriculture has nothing to do with this. No product of agriculture is raised which will be in competition with other products raised elsewhere.

Mr. TABER. You raise cattle, do you not?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes; we raise cattle, and we want to feed them. This is what we are trying to do by this bill.

Mr. TABER. In the days when the A. A. A. was in full blast the Secretary of Agriculture was reducing the production of cattle. That is exactly what would happen under the bill of the Secretary of Agriculture which is in contemplation now. Why we should consider that kind of a bill and at the same time consider this kind of a project is beyond me.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Certainly.

Mr. FERGUSON. The cattle which were killed under the A. A. A. program were killed in that district in New Mexico and in my part of Oklahoma for lack of food, lack of grass, lack of anything to keep them alive. It was not a reduction in the beef tonnage at all.

Mr. TABER. That was the program the second year but it was not the first year. The first year the program was to reduce production.

Mr. FERGUSON. Not to reduce beef.

Mr. TABER. Then he got the supply down so low that when we had the drought we had no reserve. Some cattle were killed the second year under the relief act because there was no feed for them. However, the first proposition was to cut down the supply. Of course, he overdid it, just as those fellows always do.

Mr. FERGUSON. I am in the cattle business in western Oklahoma, adjoining New Mexico. I may say to the gentleman that the years of drought we have gone through have cut the carrying capacity of the ranges in some cases so far that only 1 steer or 1 cow can run now where the land formerly would carry 10. A system of raising crops to carry our cattle in conjunction with the range is absolutely necessary for continued operation in that country. It is a question of abandoning the range and abandoning an industry or having auxiliary feed produced. Regardless of how many thousands of acres are brought into production to produce feed for cattle, the permanent injury done to that western sod is going to cut the production of that part of the country way below normal. Regardless of how many thousands of acres you put under irrigation, you cannot bring this land back to normal for a period of at least 20 years. This has been a permanent damage, and it will take all the devices of man to bring that production of beef back to normal under present conditions.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Does not the gentleman think he is carrying the argument a little too far when he refers to the former program of reduction and uses that as an argument against bringing further lands into production in the far West?

Mr. TABER. I would feel that way, if we did not have practically the same kind of a program before Congress right now for consideration, which would work out just the same way.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. My wife called my attention to the fact that even round steak is now selling in this city for nearly 60 cents a pound.

Mr. TABER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. It is between 50 and 60 cents.

Mr. TABER. This is largely the result of the operations of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I do not care to go into that; but may I call attention to the fact that there is, in my judgment, not enough food, especially meats, for human consumption produced to give our people the nourishment we need as a nation. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERGUSON] is exactly right concerning the situation on most of the western ranges.

I want to call attention to the fact that conditions have greatly changed in the grazing empire of the far West within the lifetime of one generation. Fifty years ago the livestock ranges of the West were covered with a luxurious growth of nutritious grasses which invited the cattlemen and the sheepmen to come and use them. Overgrazing has resulted, and the Dust Bowl or something like it has come to many parts of the West exactly as to the Middle West. Overgrazing and denuding the plains and the mountains of their cover of vegetation has been accompanied by the same disastrous results as the plowing under of the sod on the Great Plains. Now we are asking the livestockmen of the western ranges to cease their overgrazing and limit their herds. This is a part of our long-range soil-erosion control program and is done for the protection of our great irrigation works.

This Nation is in danger of a shortage of food supply, especially of beef and mutton. We cannot longer expect the populous cities of the East to be so nearly furnished with meat from the far West as formerly. On the other hand, we must not depend on an importation of beef from the Argentine or mutton from Australia to the detriment and despair of our most enterprising and worthy citizens in the Rocky Mountain States, who have devoted their lives to the livestock industry. It is folly to cripple the livestock business in a dozen Western States, in which 95 to 98 percent of the area is not suitable for food production other than for grazing. It is only good sense that we must supplement the natural forage by irrigation and a production of hay and other forage crops. This bill is for only one of many such projects which common sense dictates the Government should sponsor.

Mr. TABER. Then I wonder why we need this bill that is being put up to us for the control of agriculture.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I want to see more land brought into production of fruit and grains and more grazing furnished us, so we may have the meat that this country needs, and I believe this bill is required from that standpoint.

Mr. TABER. Then, should we follow the other program? Is the gentleman opposed to the bill that the Secretary of Agriculture is going to send up here, or is supposed to send up here?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I am in favor of the pending bill, which is the matter under discussion.

Mr. TABER. How does the gentleman feel about the other bill? That is a very important subject, and we ought not to be working both ends against the middle all the time. We ought to have a policy, and that is what I am trying to get at.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TABER. Certainly.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. There may be a good many acres of land in certain parts of the country that are worn out and possibly ought to lie fallow or receive treatment, and that is exactly the reason we ought to have supplementary provisions so that we may have a normal food supply in this country, and I believe that this bill is a part of the normal food-supply program.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. I take it, then, that the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK] was opposed to the philosophy or the policy that destroyed our cattle and killed our pigs, and I presume the gentleman believes in putting more acreage into use right now. I would like to have the gentleman's judgment on that.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I have nothing to say about the former policy of reduction of the food supply, but I do maintain that the health of our people and the proper nourishment of the Nation require such action as this bill calls for.

Mr. MICHENER. We do not want any more tomfoolery about killing pigs and destroying foods, I take it from the gentleman's statement.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Personally, I do not want any more of that. I think there must be other and better ways of aiding farmers to have adequate prices.

Mr. DOWELL. And should we not raise our own products so that we will not have to ship them into the United States from foreign countries?

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. Is there any language in the bill that limits the expenditure that may be made under the measure? May they not spend $15,000,000, or even $20,000,000?

Mr. TABER. There is no limitation whatever. They can spend any amount they may want to spend. The bill does not say $1,000,000 or $1,500,000 or $2,000,000 but is wide open. I wonder if the chairman would be able to give us some idea of the kind of limitation he would be willing to accept.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Of course, this is merely an authorization. Before they could get the money there would have to be application made to the Appropriations Committee, of which the gentleman from New York is one of the outstanding members.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. If that is true, and the President has asked us to grant no more authorizations unless we provide for raising the money required by the authorization, may I ask the chairman of the Rules Committee if this bill complies with the suggestion of the President and is any provision made for raising the money?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Of course, of the many subjects with which I am not familiar, reclamation is one, and I cannot answer that question.

Mr. MICHENER. I assumed that was true when the gentleman asked his question a moment ago.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. In answer to the question just raised, this is one bill that does provide where the money is coming from. When you organize an irrigation district, under the Federal reclamation law, the people mortgage their lands and are under contract to repay the money to the fund. This is not coming out of the general Treasury.

The gentleman has also asked whether or not this would put people to work or reduce unemployment. If the gentleman could live in the territory where such a project is established, he would find that people are already living there and under the present situation where they cannot raise enough winter feed to match the summer range which they have, or if they cannot raise enough feed for the periods of drought, they have to go on the relief rolls, and the gentleman is called upon to pass bills to support them while on relief. A measure like this, where you can establish a sound project for the development of the cattle industry that is already under way, is decidedly in the interest of taking people off of the relief rolls.

Mr. TABER. What is it doing when, as a result of such legislation, the Secretary of Agriculture clamps down somewhere else and takes something else out of production and they go on the relief rolls? This is just running around in a circle.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The gentleman has already pointed out that it has raised the price of farm products.

Mr. TABER. The operations of the Secretary of Agriculture have raised the price of round steak to 50 cents a pound, but they have destroyed the food supply of the people.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Does the gentleman believe you can raise alfalfa in some of these other districts and ship it down to this district more cheaply?

Mr. TABER. No; you have to raise it near the place of consumption.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. Is it not true that the funds that would be spent would be funds spent in New Mexico that would go into the reclamation fund, but in this way they divert the funds before they get there?

Mr. TABER. I hardly think the New Mexico funds would be sufficient to pay for the projects that are already under way there for quite a considerable time.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. I understood the gentleman said it would not take any money out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. TABER. I did not say that.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. Somebody said it.

Mr. TABER. They said it.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. I know it must come out of some treasury.

Mr. TABER. It comes out of the Treasury. Here is where the reclamation fund comes from largely. It comes from oil leases, the sale of public lands, and such things as that. I shall not attempt to enumerate all of the items, but that money comes out of assets that belong to the United States, and as they are disposed of the money goes into the Treasury, and has been used customarily over a period of twenty-odd years, perhaps 30 years, for the building of these reclamation projects. The fund is also replenished by the repayments of such of those projects as pay out.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I wonder how the gentleman would feel if the Federal Government owned almost half of the land in the State of New York and paid no taxes to the State? That is the situation we have in New Mexico. The mineral rights are reserved, and we have to pay for the grazing rights, and we police all of this at our own expense. The gentleman is trying to tell us that the oil money of New Mexico that goes into this fund as a matter of law should not be used in accordance with law, as provided, to do the very thing it was set up to do.

Mr. TABER. Oh, no; I am trying to establish a conservative policy in connection with the reclamation business that would provide that when we needed new land under cultivation, according to the general set-up all over the country, we should spend money for that purpose, and at other times when they did not need such things we should hold back. We should regulate our production by the regulation of the development of the land that goes under cultivation rather than by taking lands out of cultivation that are already there.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Does the gentleman not feel that when the Director of the Reclamation Service recommends this project, supported by the Director of the Budget, supported by Members of this House who have studied legislation in committee, that the measure ought to pass?

Mr. TABER. Here is the situation with reference to the Director of the Reclamation Service. The Director of the Reclamation Service, as are all persons in such a position, is a propagandist. He is very much interested in building up his own department.

Those gentlemen just thrive on bigger and better reclamation projects. I do not take the recommendation of those people at full value. There is no coordination between the operation of the Agricultural Department and the Interior Department. One pulls one way and the other pulls the other way. The result of it is that we are spending money at both ends when we might be better conserving it.

I asked a question of the chairman of the committee a little while ago and I have not had an answer as yet. I would like to know what kind of limit the chairman of the committee would be willing to accept as to the cost of this project.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The limit is already placed on the cost. It is limited by the water stored in the reservoir. There cannot be any more money spent than water used.

Mr. TABER. There is no dollar limitation as to cost in this whole bill. How about the author of the bill? Would he be willing to accept an amendment limiting the cost?

Mr. DEMPSEY. The Reclamation Service will determine the cost. The cost runs not to exceed a certain amount per acre. If the cost exceeds that the Reclamation Service will not construct the district.

Mr. TABER. What is that limit?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I do not know what limit they would put on it; but unless the cost per acre is such that these farmers who own this land can pay it back in the prescribed time the Director of Reclamation will not construct the district. It must be left in his hands.

Mr. TABER. Do not the hearings on this bill show the probable cost of the project?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I would say that it would cost between $80 and $90 an acre, and there would be approximately 30,000 acres.

Mr. TABER. That would be somewhere around $2,000,000.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Two and a half million dollars to $2,700,000.

Mr. TABER. Is there any statement from the Bureau of Reclamation to that effect?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I have no statement from the Bureau for the reason that its figures have not been entirely compiled with reference to the number of acres involved.

Mr. TABER. What would the gentleman say is the value of this particular land as it stands today?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I could not say as to that. When we have a year with plenty of rain and the grazing is good, the cost is up, but when we have a year like last year, when we sent 40,000 head of cattle to Old Mexico, you could have bought the land very reasonably.

But that is not the point at issue here. It is this: We have these people living in this Dust Bowl. We have the water there. We have their lands which they are willing to mortgage to the full extent. We have the Reclamation Service willing to do this job. Do you want to drive these people out of the business they have been in all their lives and put them some place else on relief, or do you want to give the man opportunity to earn a livelihood independently?

Mr. TABER. The trouble with that argument is that if these people had been there all their lives and made a living they did not have a reclamation project to support them. Why, with that picture, do they need it now? That is the result of the gentleman's argument, as it looks to me.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to answer the gentleman.

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Many lands in the States of Kansas and Colorado that were put in cultivation during the war when we needed more agriculture is in part responsible for some of the destruction of the lands of New Mexico by reason of these dust storms. We are not responsible for that. We are not responsible because they tried to serve the Federal Government by raising the things they wanted when they wanted them. We say to you now we are not asking for a dollar out of the Federal Treasury. All we are asking is to loan some of our money back to us, and we will repay it. That is the situation in connection with the matter. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe I should take any more time of the House on this matter. It is perfectly apparent that this is another reclamation project at just the time when we ought not to have it. I hope the House will use its judgment on this matter and will not go into another project of this kind at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to construct a Federal reclamation project for the irrigation of the lands of the Arch Hurley conservancy district in New Mexico under the Federal reclamation laws: Provided, That construction work is not to be initiated on said irrigation project until (a) the project shall have been found to be feasible under subsection B of section 4 of the act of December 5, 1924 (43 Stat. 702), and (b) a contract shall have been executed with an irrigation or conservation district embracing the land to be irrigated under said project, which contract shall obligate the contracting district to repay the cost of construction of said project in 40 equal annual installments, without interest; (c) contracts shall have been made with each owner of more than 160 irrigable acres under said project, by which he, his successors, and assigns shall be obligated to sell all of his land in excess of 160 irrigable acres at or below prices fixed by the Secretary of the Interior and within the time to be fixed by said Secretary, no water to be furnished to the land of any such large landowner refusing or failing to execute such contract; and (d) contracts shall have been made with all owners of lands to be irrigated under the project by which they will agree that if their land is sold at prices above the appraised value thereof, approved by said Secretary, one-half of such excess shall be paid to the United States to be applied in the inverse order of the due dates upon the construction charge installments coming due thereafter from the owners of said land.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the distinguished gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY] a few questions. I happened to listen with a great deal of interest to the colloquy between the gentleman from New Mexico and the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]. I was very much interested in the very able and effective manner in which the gentleman from New Mexico conveyed to the House the purposes of this bill. I would like to ask one or two questions to obtain additional information. How large is this area?

Mr. DEMPSEY. It will comprise about thirty or thirty-five thousand acres.

Mr. McCORMACK. How many people will it benefit?

Mr. DEMPSEY. About a thousand families.

Mr. McCORMACK. And this is in an area affected by the drought?

Mr. DEMPSEY. It is affected by the drought. It is in the Dust Bowl. It is a cattle-grazing country.

Mr. McCORMACK. And this will enable the people who have owned their land to continue living there?

Mr. DEMPSEY. To retain their lands, feed their stock without shipping it to foreign countries to feed.

Mr. McCORMACK. And they are people who have lived for a long period of time, some families probably for some generations?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Many of them have lived there for many years.

Mr. McCORMACK. And the water is available?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCORMACK. At no expense to the Government?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Not any. [Applause.]

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the same do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PETTENGILL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 7680, directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were ayes 61 and noes 8.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill S. 2086, now on the Speaker's table, be substituted for the House bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to construct a Federal reclamation project for the irrigation of the lands of the Arch Hurley conservancy district in New Mexico under the Federal reclamation laws: Provided, That construction work is not to be initiated on said irrigation project until (a) the project shall have been found to be feasible under subsection B of section 4 of the act of December 5, 1924 (43 Stat. 702), and (b) a contract shall have been executed with an irrigation or conservation district embracing the land to be irrigated under said project, which contract shall obligate the contracting district to repay the cost of construction of said project in 40 equal annual installments, without interest; (c) contracts shall have been made with each owner of more than 160 irrigable acres under said project, by which he, his successors, and assigns shall be obligated to sell all of his land in excess of 160 irrigable acres at or below prices fixed by the Secretary of the Interior and within the time to be fixed by said Secretary, no water to be furnished to the land of any such large landowner refusing or failing to execute such contract; and (d) contracts shall have been made with all owners of lands to be irrigated under the project by which they will agree that if their land is sold at prices above the appraised value thereof, approved by said Secretary, one-half of such excess shall be paid to the United States to be applied in the inverse order of the due dates upon the construction charge installments coming due thereafter from the owners of said land.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the procedure whereby the bill H. R. 7680 was passed will be vacated and that bill laid on the table.

There was no objection.

COMPACT OR AGREEMENT FOR DIVISION OF WATERS OF YELLOWSTONE RIVER

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, I call up the bill (S. 534) granting the consent of Congress to the States of Montana and Wyoming to negotiate and enter into a compact or agreement for division of the waters of the Yellowstone River.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That consent of Congress is hereby given to the States of Montana and Wyoming to negotiate and enter into a compact or agreement, not later than June 1, 1939, providing for an equitable division and apportionment between the States of the water supply of the Yellowstone River and of the streams tributary thereto, upon condition that one suitable person, who shall be appointed by the President of the United States, shall participate in said negotiations as the representative of the United States and shall make report to Congress of proceedings and of any compact or agreement entered into: Provided, That such compact or agreement shall not be binding or obligatory upon either of the parties thereto unless and until the same shall have been approved by the legislatures of each of said States and by the Congress of the United States: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall apply to any waters within the Yellowstone National Park or shall establish any right or interest in or to any lands within the boundaries thereof.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects. The bill is on the Union Calendar. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 534) granting the consent of Congress to the States of Montana and Wyoming to negotiate and enter into a compact or agreement for division of the waters of the Yellowstone River, with Mr. PETTENGILL in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, this bill has already passed the Senate. It grants the consent of Congress to the States of Montana and Wyoming to negotiate and enter into a compact or agreement for division of the waters of the Yellowstone River. This river, as perhaps you all know, rises in the northwestern part of the State of Wyoming, in the Yellowstone National Park. It flows in a northerly direction into the State of Montana, and from there in a northeasterly direction across the State of Montana into the Missouri River somewhere near the Dakota line. What is known as the Tongue River rises in the State of Wyoming and flows north into Montana and from there into the Yellowstone River. Likewise what is known as Clarks Fork River and Big Horn River rise in the State of Wyoming and flow north into the Yellowstone River.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I do not want to interrupt the splendid speech of the gentleman from Montana, who has done such fine work for his State, but may I inquire if this is just a simple compact between two States to divide the waters of the Yellowstone River?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. It is simply an authorization given by Congress to the States of Montana and Wyoming to enter into a compact which will have to be ratified by the legislatures of both States and then be approved by Congress.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It is just a simple matter that relates only to the two States mentioned?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Exactly; and I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. GREEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. GREEVER. As a matter of fact, it merely authorizes the States to enter into this compact, does it not?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. That is correct.

Mr. GREEVER. It merely authorizes them to negotiate the compact. Of course, after the compact is made it has to be referred to the Federal Congress for approval.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. That is correct.

Mr. GREEVER. Has the gentleman any objection to an amendment, on page 2, in line 7, after the word "within", to insert "or tributary to"?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Making that provision read:

That nothing in this act shall apply to any waters within or tributary to the Yellowstone National Park or shall establish any right or interest in or to any lands within the boundaries thereof.

Mr. GREEVER. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I have no objection. As a matter of fact, I thank the gentleman for the proposed amendment, for none of us want to interfere in any way with any of the waters or any of the streams in the park or Yellowstone Lake therein. The only necessity for the passage of this bill is because of a conflict of interest between the States of Montana and Wyoming concerning the use of waters of the Tongue River, the Big Horn River, and the Clarks Fork River.

Mr. GREEVER. As a matter of fact, if the gentleman will permit an interruption, the controversy involves the Tongue River, Big Horn River, and tributaries of the Big Horn and Tongue and one or two other small streams.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. That is correct.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. There are a good many precedents for this kind of authorization for the making of compacts by States in the matter of boundaries, rivers, harbors, and such things?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Oh, yes. As a matter of fact, it is the only way such matters can be settled. They cannot be settled in court because the expense is too great.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield.

Mr. BACON. Has this bill the approval of the National Park Service?

Mr. GREEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield.

Mr. GREEVER. Answering the gentleman from New York, I may state that the bill has a favorable report of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BACON. That answers my question.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Such approval is included in the report.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. As a lawyer and a man of extensive observation concerning our West, does not the gentleman regard it as a good policy that, not only in this case but in a great many other cases, agreements or compacts be made between States? We understand, of course, that such agreement cannot be made without the consent of Congress, treaties between two, three, or more States, but is it not necessary, in the gentleman's judgment, that many such interstate agreements be entered into before the control of rivers can be properly carried out?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Exactly. I think it is a good policy to pursue, because it saves a lot of feeling and a lot of expense to dispose of such matters in this fashion.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Would not such a course also answer the objection we hear frequently that the Federal Government is going too far in its control of these streams in which the States themselves have a vital interest but in which local interest seems to be neglected?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I think the gentleman's observation is correct.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. This policy of interstate compacts would further preserve to the States those rights which they feel are inherently theirs concerning such interstate streams?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Exactly.

Mr. GREEVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. GREEVER. There is nothing in this bill which is in any way binding on any of the States with respect to the water, with the exception of the protection of the waters of the Yellowstone.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Exactly.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I would like for the gentleman to point out for the RECORD the provision of the Constitution or some Federal statute which gives Congress jurisdiction with respect to compacts between States. It seems to me that might be pointed out at this time.

Mr. HEALEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HEALEY. I may say to the gentleman from Mississippi there is provision in the Constitution.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I asked to have it placed in the RECORD. It occurred to me that provision should be put in the RECORD.

Mr. HEALEY. The States, as a matter of fact, cannot enter into a compact without conforming to that particular provision.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I am agreeable to that view, but with reference to the former question I thought it would be well for the RECORD to show that.

Mr. HEALEY. I will be glad to put it in the RECORD.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I do not at this moment recall the particular section of the Constitution which restricts States from entering into contracts such as this without congressional authorization. However, I will include the citation in my remarks:

Revision of remarks, article I, section 10, paragraph 3.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman state why there is a limitation of time in this bill? The date of June 1, 1939, is set forth. Is that not rather a short time for your own benefit?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts this matter has been under discussion for some time by the officials of both the States of Wyoming and Montana, for the reason the waters of the Tongue River, particularly, have been in conflict between the residents of the two States. Both States recognize the right of acquiring water by appropriation. But suppose somebody appropriates water on the Wyoming side and, on the other hand, somebody appropriates water from the same stream on the Montana side and a shortage of water occurs. There is then a conflict as to whose rights are prior in time, which priority is recognized by the law so far as the appropriation of water is concerned. This being the case, in order to determine the respective rights, it is required, if a compact is not entered into, that the litigants go into court. All of the people who used water out of some stream on the Wyoming and Montana side would be parties to the action, and it would result in endless litigation and would be very expensive for all people concerned.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The fact is, this bill does not commit the Congress to any compact or any agreement which may be made?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Absolutely not.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. That is borne out by the proviso of the bill, which reads as follows:

Provided, That such compact or agreement shall not be binding or obligatory upon either of the parties hereto unless and until same shall be approved by the legislatures of each State, as well as by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. That is correct.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. So that, as a matter of fact, this is merely an authorization. It does not commit the Congress to any compact which may be entered into by the States?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. That is correct, and I want to thank the gentleman for the contribution.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. In response to the inquiry of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON], I call attention to paragraph 2, section 10, of the Constitution, wherein it is stated:

No State shall without the consent of Congress * * * enter into any agreement or compact with another State.

That is the constitutional power for compacts between States?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Yes. The States would not have the right to make the compact unless the Congress gave them the authority.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Then, as the gentleman from Massachusetts points out, the authority is article I, section 10 of the Constitution?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. For a number of years the States of Colorado, New Mexico, and Texas have had a similar authorization from the Congress, but these States have not been able to work out a division of the waters of the Rio Grande. The Congress has twice passed a bill extending the time within which these States may enter into a compact identical with that contained in the gentleman's bill which involves the States of Montana and Wyoming. I think Congress has authorized such compacts in a number of other cases.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOUSTON. How much is this going to cost?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Here is one bill, I may say to the Members of the House, and I include the Members of the Appropriations Committee, that will not cost the United States 1 cent. [Applause.]

Mr. HOUSTON. Were there any arguments against this bill?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. No arguments; no.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then what are we waiting for? Let us vote.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Would the gentleman explain to the committee what the object of this bill is?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. The object of the bill is, as I tried to explain before, and I will ask the gentleman to pay attention to this explanation. The object of the bill is to permit the States of Wyoming and Montana to settle their respective rights in the waters of the tributaries of the Yellowstone River, which flows across the State of Montana principally, in order to avoid endless litigation between private parties living in both States who have conflicting interests in the waters of those tributaries of the Yellowstone River.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The gentleman stated that the Yellowstone flows into the Missouri at or near the Dakota line. The gentleman means the North Dakota line?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Yes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Does the gentleman have in mind what effect the compact would have on the flow of the Missouri River and the right of residents along the Missouri River in North Dakota and South Dakota?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. It would not have any effect. The only waters affected by this bill would be the waters of the Clarks Fork River, that rises in Wyoming and flows through Carbon County and on through Montana, and also the Big Horn River and what is known as the Tongue River. They are three small tributaries of the Yellowstone. Those are the only waters about which there is any conflict.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Does this have any bearing upon the waters of the Fort Peck Reservoir?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. None at all.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In view of the fact that the Big Thompson project is to come up tomorrow, I believe, this is further evidence that in that section of the country the capture of water from the streams is life itself. Is not that about the situation?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Of course, in our territory land without water is not worth anything.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That truth is somewhat difficult for the easterner to comprehend.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I say this, and I say it so my friend the gentleman from New York may hear it, that we out West have very, very fine productive soil, probably the finest that was ever made. At the same time, it is absolutely worthless in that arid country unless we have water to irrigate these lands. We have the water to irrigate these lands; and if we can secure the money to impound this water so that the same may be available for use on the lands and complete our irrigation system, as we are now trying to do, we will not be coming here on bended knees asking for appropriations from Congress to take care of our people, many of whom are now on relief.

This program will serve another useful national purpose, namely, the waters that are now escaping through our major streams, being of benefit to no one, are found causing floods in the lower central parts of the United States to the tremendous damage of the occupants of the lowlands along the streams in the latter territories.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. In answer to my friend the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] I think some of us easterners can understand that it is probably necessary to have water on this land, but what we cannot understand is why you should keep bringing in new land and putting it under water in order to raise more crops when you are paying farmers not to raise crops on land on which they can produce at the present time. We cannot understand such a system, and this is why some of us oppose increasing the number of these irrigation and reclamation projects.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I may say to the distinguished gentleman from New York I am confident that if the men who oppose reclamation could see this territory and realize the garden spots which are created by the use of water, and realize the desert character of this territory before water is put on the land, they would be most active in favor of reclamation.

May I say further, in answer to the gentleman's statement about entering into competition with the Eastern States and violating the policy of the Department of Agriculture with reference to curtailing production, that, as the distinguished gentleman from New Mexico pointed out, we do not and could not raise much more than enough to take care of our livestock and take care of our people of the West if we irrigated all the available irrigable lands.

Mr. SNELL. Then, if you cannot raise such products, why should we not use the lands in the Middle West for raising them, rather than pay farmers for not using land at the present time? This is what I cannot understand.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. If the gentleman is talking to me personally, I may say I have never believed in the curtailment of production. I believe in the economy of plenty. It is my opinion that we have never had a surplus of consumable products and goods beyond human needs. We had such surpluses beyond market demands. Of course, we had a shortage of money, therefore no buying power, and many people went without the necessities of life, hence the surpluses. I also am a firm believer in the American farmer being permitted to furnish to the American consumers all the products he can raise of which the consumers are in need and can use; in other words, I believe in the protection of the American producer against the importation of farm and livestock products from foreign countries in competition with the American farmer and livestock grower.

Mr. SNELL. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I think the people of the country would get along better if we had plenty, instead of curtailing production. However, I may say that in all of these reclamation territories we do not raise much more than enough to take care of our livestock, our sheep, and cattle, because, after all, we are a sheep and cattle country.

Mr. SNELL. Oh, we get a great many products here in the East which come from these reclamation areas in the western country and are in competition with our eastern products.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Yes; and they are about the best products you eat, too.

Mr. SNELL. I am not saying anything against them, but the gentleman states they do not raise enough out there to do more than support themselves.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Very little. We may raise some, but we import more from your part of the country than we export to you.

Mr. SNELL. That may be. It is the policy, not the individual project, that I am opposing.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield.

Mr. GEARHART. Is it not a fact that the crops raised on the irrigated lands in the West are not the crops which produce the burdensome surpluses that embarrass the East?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. The gentleman is correct. They are simply forage crops or crops principally for livestock. We western meat growers supply the Chicago market, and they in turn supply your eastern markets.

Mr. SNELL. What about the potato and apple crops which come from the irrigated sections in the West?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. We do not export many potatoes out there.

Mr. SNELL. They advertise Idaho potatoes all over the country.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Yes; Idaho is a good potato-producing country.

Mr. SNELL. Western apples also come in competition with eastern apples, so do not say your western products do not come in competition with our eastern products.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. To a certain extent; but I mean that we buy from you more than we sell to you.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. I notice the bill states—

That consent of Congress is hereby given to the States of Montana and Wyoming to negotiate and enter into a compact or agreement.

These authorities, as a rule, are not worded in this way. You provide for a commission or some agency of the State to enter into the compact. This seems to be rather loosely drawn.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I may say to the gentleman that the respective States set up their own mechanics to bring this compact or agreement into existence. Then the agreement or compact must be passed upon by the legislatures of the respective States and then come back here to Congress for approval.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. I think my friend knows a great deal about these compacts and realizes that, as a matter of fact, the States could actually negotiate a compact or agreement without the consent of Congress in advance, and come in later and ask for the approval by the Congress of the compact they have entered into; but all you are doing by this measure is to grant the authorization and Congress is merely giving its stamp of approval to this procedure.

Mr. MICHENER. I do not like to let this form go through without calling attention to it and objecting to its becoming a precedent for the future. I may say the Judiciary Committee had before it this morning one of these compacts. We have quite a number of them, and I believe these matters should be very carefully drawn. You provide here further that one suitable person who shall be appointed by the President of the United States shall participate in such negotiations. Unless you provide some machinery or unless you provide for a commission, it may be possible for one State to set up its legislature to do the acting and another State to act through a commission and another State to act through a representative or a State agency like the secretary of state's office, and then provide that the Federal Government have one man cooperating with all these people. I am not going to oppose this, but I do say before your committee brings in another authorization for compacts they should give a little consideration to the precedents and the matters that have been disposed of in the past, so there will be some intelligent action. I do not know how the man named by the President is going to act. He has not anybody with which to cooperate. He is going to cooperate with the States if and when the States determine what they are going to do and how they are going to do it.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yielded to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. MICHENER. And I have made a pretty good speech. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any Member opposed to the bill who desires time? If not, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That consent of Congress is hereby given to the States of Montana and Wyoming to negotiate and enter into a compact, or agreement, not later than June 1, 1939, providing for an equitable division and apportionment between the States of the water supply of the Yellowstone River and of the streams tributary thereto, upon condition that one suitable person, who shall be appointed by the President of the United States, shall participate in said negotiations as the representative of the United States and shall make report to Congress of proceedings and of any compact or agreement entered into: Provided, That such compact or agreement shall not be binding or obligatory upon either of the parties thereto unless and until the same shall have been approved by the legislatures of each of said States and by the Congress of the United States: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall apply to any waters within the Yellowstone National Park or shall establish any right or interest in or to any lands within the boundaries thereof.

Mr. GREEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GREEVER: On page 2, line 7, after the word "within", insert "or tributary to."

Mr. GREEVER. Mr. Chairman, the only purpose of this amendment is to more fully protect the waters of the Yellowstone Park and except them in any way from this compact; also by excepting any streams which are tributary to those streams and waters and which, by any division of any kind, might in some way affect the waters within the Yellowstone.

Mr. MICHENER. Suppose those tributary streams had their headwaters outside of the States authorized to enter into the compact?

Mr. GREEVER. They could not be affected by a compact of this nature, and, in fact, do not exist insofar as this amendment is concerned.

Mr. MICHENER. What I am getting at is if we authorize two States, naming them, to enter into a compact, and it develops that a third or a fourth State is affected by the water that eventually gets into the streams of the two States mentioned, would there be authority under the act for the other States, having property rights in this water, to enter into a compact? We had the same thing up exactly with respect to Boulder Dam. I have forgotten the details, but Colorado, Nevada, and Arizona were affected, and two or three other States where the waters eventually got into States affected by the compact, and, of course, our law in the East as to appropriation of water is entirely different from the law in the West, and there was a lot of trouble with respect to the ratification of those compacts.

Mr. GREEVER. Obviously the States of Montana and Wyoming could not enter into a compact which would affect the waters of any other State or any rights acquired under the laws of any other State in and to those waters, but I am speaking only of streams that are tributary to the streams or bodies of water within the Yellowstone Park; in other words, no one wants to diminish the amount of water that flows into the Yellowstone or to diminish those streams in any way, and this amendment is for their further protection. The Yellowstone Park is one of the finest recreational centers in the world, and no citizen of Wyoming and, I hope, of Montana would ever wish to do the slightest act to detract from the beauty of this great primitive area.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PETTENGILL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill S. 534, and had directed him to report the same back with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendment to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the amended bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MEEKS, for 1 week, on account of important business.

To Mr. BOEHNE, for 10 days, on account of business.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. There seems to be only about 50 Members present.

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold a public hearing in room 219, House Office Building, Washington, D. C., Wednesday, July 28, 1937, at 10 a. m., eastern standard time, on H. R. 7486, known as the bill to increase the efficiency of the Coast Guard.

Persons desiring to testify are requested to notify the clerk of the committee. Parties who do not intend to testify but who wish to submit a statement for the record are requested to file such statement with the clerk of the committee not later than the date of the hearing.

For the information of those persons who intend to testify, it is the desire of the committee that amendments to be proposed during the hearing be submitted in writing to the clerk of the committee prior to the date of the hearing.

It is very important that notice of intention to testify—even though doubtful of fulfillment—be communicated to the clerk of the committee at least 1 day in advance of the hearing. Otherwise unnecessary confusion and delay might arise, resulting in a reduction of the time available for presentation of testimony by witnesses.

SENATE

THURSDAY, JULY 22, 1937

The Reverend Richard A. Cartmell, D. D., assistant rector, Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O God, the Father of us all, whose love passeth human understanding, whose presence is nearer than the breath of life: Grant to us, we beseech Thee, the nourishment of Thy grace that daily we may grow unto the image of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Even as He, may we, also, seek above all else Thy honor and glory; Thy kingdom of righteousness and peace. Bestow upon us such a measure of His spirit that we may make no compromise with wrong, yet see a vision of Thee in every living soul, so that when we gain our victory, O Lord, it may be Christ's victory of justice and truth, wrought not on the anvil of hate but in the fire of love. And in the end grant that every one of us may come to love Thee with the fullness of our being and our neighbor as ourself. Through the same, Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous request, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, July 20, 1937, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a privileged matter, being a veto message from the President of the United States, which the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the message from the President of the United States, returning without approval, H. R. 6763, entitled "An act to extend for 1 additional year the 3½-percent interest rate on certain Federal land-bank loans, to provide a 4-percent interest rate on such loans for the period of July 1, 1938, to June 30, 1939, and to provide for a 4-percent interest rate on land-bank commissioner's loans for a period of 2 years."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I dislike to interfere with the reading of the veto message, but it was plainly understood when the Senate adjourned day before yesterday that first we would have today the regular routine morning business, which would be followed by the consideration of the veto message, after which unobjected bills on the calendar would be considered, and then the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] would be recognized. I insist that we go through with that understanding.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon is correct. I did not know that the veto message would be laid down for consideration until the morning business had been concluded. If it is necessary to ask unanimous consent that the reading of the veto message be discontinued, I will do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will cease reading the message. The presentation of petitions and memorials is in order.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if I am now entitled to the floor, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield until routine morning business shall have been disposed of, and then take my place upon the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is the morning hour, and it is the impression of the Chair that the Senator from New York could take the floor now only by unanimous consent until routine morning business shall have been disposed of.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senator from New York does not need to make such a request. The routine morning business takes precedence. After that shall have been concluded, and after the unanimous-consent agreement shall have been carried out, then the Senator from New York will be entitled automatically to the floor. That is the rule of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the understanding of the Chair.

Mr. COPELAND. That being the ruling of the Chair, I will take my seat.

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the morning business shall have been concluded, and the other matters under the agreement disposed of, the Senator from New York will be entitled to the floor.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Chair.

Mr. BARKLEY. In that connection let me say that it was the understanding when the Senate adjourned day before yesterday that the morning business would be transacted today; that then the veto message of the President would be taken up as a privileged matter; and, following that, I would ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar. I think it would be more orderly to pursue that course, and I now make that request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The presentation of petitions and memorials is in order.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, I present numerous petitions signed by some 50,000 Californians in behalf of the President's proposal for court reform. I ask that they may lie on the table where everyone may see them, and also that the body of one of the petitions be printed in the RECORD.

MONSTER ROLL CALL OF 1,000,000 CALIFORNIA VOTERS BACKING PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT IN HIS PROPOSAL TO REORGANIZE THE SUPREME COURT AND URGING THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES TO SUPPORT HIM—VOLUNTEER COMMITTEE OF 10,000 LOYAL, MILITANT DEMOCRATS TO "CALL THE ROLL"

FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT,
President of the United States, Washington, D. C.:

In 1932 the people of the United States gave you a mandate to lead them out of economic misery, chaos, and collapse. We did not know you then as we do now. But we looked to you to initiate laws for our economic deliverance.

You did not fail us. And again in 1936, by the most overwhelming majority in our history, we renewed that mandate, trusting to your wise leadership to "make our American democracy succeed" by progressive and constructive legislation adequate to meet the grave social and economic problems confronting us.

You are now leading the battle of democracy up to the next trenches, in your proposal to "reorganize the Supreme Court." Therefore,

We, the undersigned voters of the State of California, herewith answer the "roll call", pledging to you our loyal and wholehearted support. And we herewith urge upon Congress the early passage of the President's proposal, as the only immediate available method to make possible progressive legislation now imperative if democracy is not to fail. "We also," Mr. President, "have just begun to fight."

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 145) submitted by Mr. HATCH on June 15, 1937. The amendment of the committee was, on page 1, at the end of line 6, to insert a comma and the words "and the committee is authorized to call upon the executive departments for clerical and other assistants", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the membership of the special committee of the Senate to study, survey, and investigate the problems of unemployment and relief, created under Senate Resolution No. 36, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, agreed to June 10, 1937, is hereby increased by two Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and the committee is authorized to call upon the executive departments for clerical and other assistants.

STABILIZATION OF SUGAR PRODUCTION AND PRICES

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, during the last few weeks there has been negotiated what is known as the International Sugar Treaty. There has also been reported to the other House a bill practically the same as the original Jones-Costigan Act. The matter has not been acted upon as yet, but there is considerable propaganda to the effect that the treaty should be permitted to take the place of legislation. Upon that subject I ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter from Clarence R. Bitting, of New York, and my reply to Mr. Bitting's letter. I ask that these may be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., July 17, 1937.

Hon. WILLIAM E. BORAH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR BORAH: The sugar-producing industry of the world, for many years in an almost chronic state of distress, should, through the terms of the International Sugar Agreement, now before the Senate for ratification, to be placed upon a sound economic base. Much of the credit for this accomplishment is undeniably due to President Roosevelt and Secretaries Hull and Wallace.

The causes underlying the failure of the Chadbourne plan, which preceded, and because of its failure made necessary, at least in part, the Jones-Costigan Act, have been rectified in this new agreement and should, therefore, result in sugar prices, throughout the world, fair to both producer and consumer. Fair sugar prices elsewhere in the world will automatically establish fair prices in the United States.

It would seem only fair to give the International Sugar Agreement an opportunity to function free of supplemental legislation in this country and it is therefore respectfully suggested that no sugar legislation be enacted by Congress until the international agreement has been in operation for at least 1 full year and thus its effect on the American market fully disclosed.

Respectfully,

CLARENCE R. BITTING.

[Telegram]

JULY 20, 1937.

CLARENCE R. BITTING,
New York City:

I am in receipt of your letter urging that there be no sugar legislation at this session and that we await the ratification and the results thereunder of the International Sugar Agreement.

May I be permitted to say that this discloses either a great want of information as to the interests of the beet-sugar growers or a great indifference to their welfare.

In the first place, the treaty can never take the place of local legislation, and to postpone legislation to watch the results of the treaty would be to destroy in a large measure the beet-sugar industry. There is nothing in the treaty and never can be anything in the treaty providing for the disposition of the proceeds between the processors, the growers, and the laborers, one of the most vital things in connection with the sugar-beet industry. Furthermore, the treaty itself should have some changes, and it will take at least 2 years or 3 years to know its results.

The beet-sugar growers have not behind them a vast corporation to carry them over such 3 years.

The beet growers frankly want and need the legislation. If the quotas are abandoned and the tariff of 1.5 percent again become effective, they see nothing but distress and disaster ahead.

The President, in his message of March 1, 1937, declared "The Jones-Costigan Act has been useful and effective and it is my belief that its priciples should again be made effective. I therefore recommend to the Congress the enactment of the sugar-quota system and its necessary complements which will restore the operation of the principles on which the Jones-Costigan Act was based." Eighty thousand beet farmers of the Nation who took the Presidential message at its face value, planted beets in the expectation that the quota system would be continued. They must not be sacrificed to the conflicting claims of industrial groups. This year the cost of producing beets will be higher than in many years past because the growers have generally granted substantially higher wages to their workers who number more than 100,000. Wage rates in factories affecting tens of thousands of men have also been increased.

Enactment of pending legislation would merely recognize the principle of protection which is extended to industry as a whole. It would not increase the price of sugar and it would not give any unusual margin of profit. It would continue the insular areas in their present position and permit Cuba to maintain the preferred and prosperous status which she now enjoys. The bill should be enacted and its enactment should not be blocked by the demands of the insular producers that legislation be passed which gives them the opportunity for tremendous expansion of their refining capacity and for further enrichment of their large corporate farming enterprises.

Farmers of the irrigated West who know from 40 years' experience the value of the beet in a particular kind of agriculture want to continue in the production of that crop. Eighty thousand farmers growing beets depend on the crop for a large portion of their cash income—in some cases their entire income. For the small farmer it is the best and most dependable crop that can be grown.

The quota system of the Jones-Costigan Act proposed and sponsored by the administration comes to an end December 31, 1937. Recently the House Committee on Agriculture unanimously reported a bill which in every significant detail follows the Presidential wishes. Beet growers of the United States asked nothing in the legislation that was not given to them in the Jones-Costigan Act—as a matter of fact, they were given a substantially smaller quota.

The only point in controversy is an issue not raised by the beet growers. It deals with the right of the insular producers benefiting from low labor costs and corporate agriculture to refine their entire quotas in the insular areas. To grant that privilege (which is not granted in the Jones-Costigan Act) would mean a tremendous reduction in the volume of continental cane refiners with losses in employment and forced liquidation of capital as a consequence.

WILLIAM E. BORAH.

EXTENSION OF REDUCED INTEREST RATE ON FEDERAL LAND-BANK LOANS

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed. Under the agreement the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of the veto message.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma and Mr. MCNARY addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] to state that the Senate would complete morning business; that the veto message of the President should then be laid before the Senate, and after its disposal the Senate would proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair asked if there was objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky for unanimous consent to such an agreement, and, there being no objection, the Chair stated the unanimous-consent agreement was entered into.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The veto message will be read.

The legislative clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the veto message, which entire is as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 6763, entitled "An act to extend for 1 additional year the 3½-percent interest rate on certain Federal land-bank loans, to provide a 4-percent interest rate on such loans for the period July 1, 1938, to June 30, 1939, and to provide for a 4-percent interest rate on Land Bank Commissioner's loans for a period of 2 years."

Section 1 of the bill extends for 2 additional years the policy originally adopted as an emergency measure in 1933 under which borrowers from the Federal land banks are allowed to pay interest on their loans at rates lower than those provided in their mortgage contracts.

Section 2 of the bill broadens the field of loans on which interest reductions are granted by providing that for a period of 2 years interest may be paid at the reduced rate of 4 percent on loans made by the Land Bank Commissioner.

SECTION 1. FEDERAL LAND-BANK LOANS

At present, through the sale of bonds to the investing public, new loans are being made by Federal land banks at the lowest rate that has ever been made available to farmers generally in this country, namely, 4 percent per annum. A decrease in farm-mortgage interest rates has been brought about through the refinancing operations of the Federal land banks and the Land Bank Commissioner. The average rate of interest on the private loans refinanced by the Federal land banks in 1933 and subsequent years has been 6.3 percent. Consequently those farmers who refinanced their private loans in 1933 and 1934 by converting them into 5-percent Federal land-bank loans cut their annual interest charges more than 20 percent, while those who have refinanced at the present 4-percent rate have obtained a permanent reduction in excess of 40 percent. I believe, therefore, that there is no justification for continued Government subsidy of Federal land-bank interest rates below the unprecedentedly low rate these banks are now offering farmer-borrowers on a business basis.

Furthermore, the ability of farmers to pay interest at the rates provided for in their mortgages with the Federal land banks has been very substantially improved, due to an increase of more than 100 percent in the level of farm prices since the emergency period of 1932–33. In December 1936 the index of farm prices as reported by the Department of Agriculture stood at 126, as compared with 55 for the month of March 1933 and an average of 100 for the pre-war period August 1909 to July 1914. The gross farm income as estimated by the Department of Agriculture also rose from $5,337,000,000 in 1932 to $9,530,000,000 in 1936.

As an illustration of the lightening of the interest burden during the past 4 years through improvements in farm prices and the refinancing of farm debt, the following instance may be cited: The quantity of farm products required to meet the annual interest charge on a 6.3-percent private loan refinanced as a 5-percent Federal land-bank loan in 1933 is now only 63 percent of the quantity required during the 5 pre-war years 1910 to 1914. The greatly increased debt-paying capacity indicated in the foregoing figures is borne out by the record of actual payments on Federal land-bank loans. Approximately 85 percent of all loans of the Federal land banks were in good standing at the end of 1936, as opposed to approximately 50 percent delinquency when the emergency legislation was first passed.

The reduction of the rates of interest on Federal land-bank loans to 3½ percent for the fiscal year 1938, and to 4 percent for the fiscal year 1939, as required by the bill for loans made through national farm loan associations would, it is estimated, necessitate payments from the Treasury in the amount of approximately $31,700,000 for the former year and $21,200,000 for the latter, a total of $52,900,000. The effect of such an arrangement is that part of the individual borrower's interest is paid for him by the United States. In other words, it constitutes a gift to individual borrowers from the Federal Treasury.

As indicated by me in my letter of June 8, 1937, addressed to the committees of Congress then considering this legislation, the whole question involves the rate of interest charged by Government agencies and relates not only to farm loans, but also to moneys lent by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Public Works Administration, and other agencies.

The foregoing considerations have led me to the conclusion that further reductions in the interest rates payable on Federal land-bank loans are not justified.

SECTION 2. LAND BANK COMMISSIONER LOANS

The farm loans made by the Land Bank Commissioner on behalf of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation bear an interest rate of 5 percent per annum. In view of the circumstances under which these loans are made, it cannot reasonably be said that a 5-percent rate of interest is excessive. Comparison with Federal land-bank loans may serve to illustrate this point. A majority of the loans made by the Land Bank Commissioner are secured by second mortgages. Federal land-bank loans may only be granted on first-mortgage security. A Land Bank Commissioner loan may be made for an amount which, taking into account any prior liens, equals 75 percent of the value of the property, including both land and buildings. A Federal land-bank loan is restricted by law to a sum not exceeding 50 percent of the value of the land and 20 percent of the value of the improvements. Land Bank Commissioner loans are frequently granted upon farms which because of some physical or economic hazard would not qualify as security for a Federal land-bank loan. Finally, Land Bank Commissioner loans lack the element of cooperative responsibility through stock ownership by borrowers of their national farm-loan associations upon which the Federal land-bank system is built. In view of the added factors of risk present in the average Land Bank Commissioner loan, I feel that the 5-percent interest rate charged on these loans compares favorably with the present 4-percent rate of the Federal land banks. I have been unable to find any system in which second-mortgage loans have been made available to farmers generally on a basis as low as the present 5-percent Land Bank Commissioner loan rate.

The contemplated reduction in interest rates on Commissioner loans from 5 to 4 percent under the bill would reduce the annual income of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation, which owns those loans, by an amount of approximately $8,350,000. No provision is made for a corresponding reimbursement of this sum by the Treasury to the Corporation. Losses suffered by the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation ultimately fall upon the United States as the sole holder of the Corporation's capital stock. More than this, the payment of principal and interest on all bonds issued by the Corporation is guaranteed by the United States.

Any reduction in the interest rate on Commissioner loans will place the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation in such a position that there is a definite possibility that it may not be able to meet its obligations from its own income.

The passage of this bill was not contemplated in the preparation of the Budget for the fiscal year 1938. As the Congress is well aware, I am definitely seeking the balancing of that Budget. To this end I have called upon the heads of all Government departments, establishments, and agencies to set up reserves of not less than 10 percent of all funds available for the fiscal year 1938, except such funds as are not susceptible to such treatment. Approval by me of the bill under consideration, involving as it does an additional draft upon the Treasury in excess of $30,000,000 during the fiscal year 1938, would be totally inconsistent with my purpose to bring about a balancing of the Budget for that year.

For all these reasons I am constrained to withhold my approval of the bill H. R. 6763.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 9, 1937.

[H. R. 6763—Seventy-fifth Congress of the United States of America; at the first session, begun and held at the city of Washington on Tuesday, the 5th day of January 1937]

An act to extend for 1 additional year the 3½-percent interest rate on certain Federal land-bank loans, to provide a 4-percent interest rate on such loans for the period July 1, 1938, to June 30, 1939, and to provide for a 4-percent interest rate on Land Bank Commissioner's loans for a period of 2 years

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) effective July 1, 1935, the first sentence of paragraph "Twelfth" of section 12 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (relating to reduction in interest rates on certain Federal land-bank loans), is amended by striking out the following: "occurring within a period of 2 years commencing July 1, 1935" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "occurring within a period of 3 years commencing July 1, 1935, and shall not exceed 4 percent per annum for all interest payable on installment dates occurring within a period of 1 year commencing July 1, 1938."

(b) The fourth sentence of such paragraph "Twelfth" (relating to the time limit on payments made by the United States to land banks on account of such interest reduction) is amended to read as follows: "No payments shall be made to a bank with respect to any period after June 30, 1939."

SEC. 2. Section 32 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act, as amended (relating to loans by the Land Bank Commissioner), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this section, the rate of interest on loans made under this section outstanding when this amendatory paragraph takes effect or made on or after such date shall not exceed 4 percent per annum for all interest payable on installment dates occurring within a period of 2 years commencing on the date when this amendatory paragraph takes effect."

W. B. BANKHEAD,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

KEY PITTMAN,
President of the Senate pro tempore.

[Endorsement on back of bill:] I certify that this act originated in the House of Representatives.

SOUTH TRIMBLE, Clerk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the veto message, which will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
July 13, 1937.

The House of Representatives having proceeded to reconsider the bill (H. R. 6763) entitled "An act to extend for 1 additional year the 3½-percent interest rate on certain Federal land-bank loans, to provide a 4-percent interest rate on such loans for the period July 1, 1938, to June 30, 1939, and to provide for a 4-percent interest rate on land-bank commissioner's loans for a period of 2 years", returned by the President of the United States, with his objections, to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, it was Resolved, That the said bill pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to make a very brief statement with reference to this matter, not at all argumentative, but simply stating the situation as I understand it.

When this bill was originally before the Senate, being in charge of it as chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Banking and Currency, I stated that the passage of the bill extending for 1 year the 3½-percent rate on land-bank loans and extending for an additional year the rate at 4 percent, and the inclusion of commissioner's loans in a 2-year 4-percent rate, involved an annual expenditure of approximately $40,000,000 from the Treasury. That was the statement made by the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration. It was the statement made in the President's letter to the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency and the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of the House. In that letter and in the President's message also he has reiterated what we may well consider in determining our votes upon this veto message.

Of course, no one can predict whether at the end of the 2-year period efforts will be made to obtain a further extension. If we could feel some assurance that no further effort would be made to extend this rate, which is costing the Treasury $40,000,000 annually, it might be easier to reconcile ourselves to it; but, as the President has stated, if this is to continue as the policy of the Government with respect to farm loans made either through the land banks or through the land-bank commissioner, it will be difficult to resist the same request when the borrowers through the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and other agencies of the Government come and ask that the same treatment be accorded to them.

If we should yield to that request when it comes, if it should come, it would undoubtedly involve an annual burden on the Treasury by reason of the reimbursement of these agencies for the difference between the rates collected from the borrower and the rate borne by the land-bank bonds or other bonds through which the Treasury obtains the money. I think it not unreasonable to predict that the amount of this reimbursement would ultimately be somewhere in the neighborhood of two or three hundred million dollars a year. So, Mr. President, without attempting to influence the vote of any Member of the Senate, and having myself, when the bill passed the Senate originally, voted in favor of it, in view of the additional reasons given by the President in his message and the situation which we know may arise, I feel that, notwithstanding my former attitude and position on the matter, I am justified in voting to sustain the veto of the President.

This, in substance, is the situation which confronts us; and I think it offers sufficient ground for us to give serious consideration to the matter, regardless of our attitude on the previous vote.

PROTEST AGAINST DECREE VIOLATING THE BALFOUR DECLARATION AS TO AMERICAN JEWS

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I beseech the Senate to indulge me for one or two moments on a subject that is apart from the one which is at present under consideration. I bring to the attention of the Senate what I feel has been a neglect of American citizens and something of a wrong done the property of these who are citizens of this Republic.

We are informed, sir, by international communication, that at Palestine there has come forth a decree by a friendly government in which it is sought to make an allotment of the property of the Jews who are assembled to establish themselves in their ancient and ancestral home at Jerusalem.

Mr. President, my relations to this subject justify me in imposing on the Senate. I remind them that I, as Senator for Illinois, was in a small way one of the voices of the Wilson administration in the matter of conference and consultation with Sir Herbert Samuels and Sir Alfred Mond—the latter now known as Lord Melchett. This proceeding was as to what we speak of as the Balfour declaration. I see some reference being made to certain "American protests" by one of those who sat on that Commission. I am that one. I protested against the declaration, as I construed it, embodying the American Jews as subjects of Great Britain. I contended that those who were citizens of the United States and from America should be allowed to choose for themselves to what country they desired allegiance. I urged that, until the American Jew chose British citizenship by his declaration, he must be treated as an American citizen.

Sir, I do not know whether or not my protest was the one which availed. I must inform the Senate merely of the proceeding; but, by virtue of that relationship, I am not unacquainted with the situation as coming forth in what we speak of as the Balfour declaration.

This declaration more particularly interests us in that it provided the privilege of occupation of these lands on the part of those who have gone to them and settled under the privileges of the declaration. The agreement that was then existing gave to the American Jew the equal privileges accorded all other Jews settling in that domain of Jerusalem or Holy Land.

Now, Mr. President, it is asserted, and generally published as the admited fact, that a general division of these properties has been made, and that these people who are called Jews settling in Palestine and the Holy Land have been distributed by the new decree to different sections than formerly obtaining. What I beg to call to the attention of the Senate is the situation of the American Jew who has settled in portions of that country in compliance with the charitable and generous opportunity given by his own people. In that connection, recall that our American Jews have expended millions of American money in the Holy Land for the settlers. The settler has taken his place in that country of the Holy Land in some form or other. This American has cultivated his lands and developed his property. I deny the right of any land or any nation to have removed this American without consideration of America or representatives of the American Jew. If such be done by consent of American Jews, that, of course, becomes justified. Yet, to transfer these people from Palestine and remove them to Trans-Jordania or to any other portion of the country that takes them from the land upon which they settled, and to which we have contributed large sums of money to establish them—using the word "we" as meaning America—I regard as an unfair act, though it be not so intended by the English authorities, nor in anywise an intended injustice. Here I respectfully bring to the attention of this honorable body that now, since it has been printed that there is to be some revision or some reconsideration of this subject by England and the Arab government, I suggest that as to the American Jew there should be an American representation in the new commission of adjustment on behalf of these American Jews. These should serve in conjunction with the others who may serve on this body.

We have heard in the open from this honorable body the declaration that two distinguished Senators—the able senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], who is eminent not only as a physician but as a humanitarian, and the able constitutional lawyer from Vermont, the senior Senator [Mr. AUSTIN]—as Senators have both lately had occasion to visit the scenes to which we allude. These Senators examined the subject and became acquainted with its details. I take the liberty to suggest that these two, among others, particularly these two, could most fittingly sit as American representatives on the commission.

I rose at this time to make protest against the American Jews as Americans and their property being disposed of without opportunity of American representation. I respectfully insist that we recognize the sacred history and the sacred established fact that as to Jerusalem the Jews have had so long a claim and so long a rightful privilege that we recognize it as sacred. Today we may turn to the sacred law and repeat the claim of the children of Abraham that this home should belong to Jews, as should the well, because their father had digged the well and set the landmarks of the sacred habitation.

I respectfully give notice that at an appropriate time I shall ask the Committee on Foreign Relations and this honorable body to give this matter consideration, upon the first occasion when appropriate in conjunction with what is now proceeding under the orders of the British Government.

I thank the Senate for indulging me to intrude this subject at this time.

EXTENSION OF REDUCED INTEREST RATE ON FEDERAL LAND-BANK LOANS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the veto message on the bill (H. R. 6763) to extend for 1 year the interest rates on certain Federal land-bank notes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CONNALLY in the chair). The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I do not think any Member of this body is more anxious than am I to have economy put into practical operation, and, if possible, at some time in the future to have our expenditures provided for by our income. But I admit I was utterly astounded, in view of all the protestations about the lowly condition of the man on the farm, that the President of the United States should veto a bill which extended to the farmer only a partial remittance of the interest due on his land mortgage. I was astounded that our efforts at economy should start by denying to that class of our society some relief from the intolerable burdens they have to bear.

I was very much gratified that in the body at the other end of the Capitol the action was so spontaneous and overwhelming, showing that in the terrible condition which confronts the country, if the reports of the humanitarians and economists are correct, we should not only reduce the interest rate but, if necessary, eliminate the payment of interest for a period.

How many of us realize the condition in which and under which those who feed us and produce the raw material out of which we are shod and clothed have to work? Only last year the potato crop, which is one of our standard crops, brought a splendid price. There is what is known as the Surplus Commodities Corporation, an organization supposed to absorb and distribute any surplus that affects the price of a given commodity. This year there has been a total failure so far as the price of potatoes is concerned. In addition to that, telegrams were received only this morning from the South stating that the market for the watermelon crop has absolutely collapsed. That is due partially to the abundance of the crop and partially to the inability of the people to absorb it. The same condition exists with respect to the whole citrus-fruit industry.

Mr. President, it is not necessary for me to stand before this body and compare the conditions under which farmers have to get what income they receive with the condition of those who fabricate manufactured goods. At what rate of interest are they enabled to borrow money, and at what rate of interest does our Government borrow money? We hear talk about 4 and 5 percent under modern conditions. No business of ordinary earning capacity can stand any rate above 3½ or 4 percent.

We must take into consideration the fact that the farmer pays every expense incident to getting his commodity ready for market. In the case of cotton there is deducted 30 percent of the weight for tare. In the case of his truck the price of all hampers is deducted from the price paid him for the contents thereof. The price is fixed by the buyer. Not a farmer in all America has ever sold at his own price a bushel of wheat or a pound of cotton or a steer. He takes his commodities to market and asks the other man what he will give for them. Every expense incident to the sale is deducted.

But when the farmer buys a shirt or a woolen jacket he pays for the cotton and the wrapping which go around it and the freight on the raw wool to the market and back. Of course, the farmers are not organized, and therefore the farmer is the Chinese of American society. He is the mark for the exploitation of every man who sees fit to exploit him. Even under our present administration he is not extended a reduction in interest rate in this hour of his need.

Mr. President, I understand there are those who are so anxious to keep faith with bond buyers, so anxious to see that nothing shall happen to curtail the rate of interest the bondholders enjoy, that they at once start to increase the burden where all the burden is borne—namely, with the unorganized farmers of this country.

The mere fact that land-bank bonds run into the billions of dollars is prima-facie evidence that the owner of the land could not meet the current expense, and had to involve his investment in order to live. He is eating his principal now. Thousands of farmers throughout the country, hundreds in my State, have had to yield up their land, although their debts were to be amortized over a period of years, which, to an ordinary, thrifty business, would have made it easy to meet the debts, 4 and 5 percent covering amortization and interest. Even under those conditions the farmer could not meet the payments.

The economy practiced by the American farmer is the most cruel economy in all of our organized society. Go into the average farm home, and how many frigidaires do you see, how many bathtubs of modern pattern, how many electric lights? How many of the things that you and I consider necessities are to him unattainable luxuries? We get exceedingly fond of him at about election time and make all kinds of promises to him, and then we come here, and the first lick along the line of economy is made at his devoted head.

Mr. President, how can we be so inconsistent? We shed crocodile tears and vote $1,500,000,000 for the unemployed, and farmers in my section now cannot get hands to work their crops. A farmer in one of the lower counties in my State, having had his farm drained by one of the relief agencies under a project operated by W. P. A. or P. W. A., and so forth, went, as I understand, to the manager of the relief organization and said, "I stand to lose my crop. I simply cannot get it worked." The manager said, "Well, what do you want?" The farmer said, "I want some hands." The manager asked him, "How many?" The farmer told him how many he needed. The manager said, "All right; you can get them; but before you take them away you must agree to work them under the same conditions as we are working them." The farmer asked, "What are those conditions?" The manager said, "Eight hours a day and 40 cents an hour and guarantee to give them the same living conditions." I shall not quote what the farmer said, but he very emphatically refused and wrote me about it. I wrote and told him that under the circumstances I doubted his sanity. Rather than go and get those hands, why did he not get a job at 40 cents an hour for working 8 hours a day, I asked him. And then I said, "That is a blame sight more than you would make on your farm."

Mr. President, on the one hand we take the public money and pay it out to men for working a certain number of hours, when any practical farmer in America would be bankrupted if he were limited to working that number of hours on his farm. If the farmer were limited to 8 hours a day, he would find that crabgrass and weeds would be the crop with which to settle his bills if he could find a market for them.

Mr. President, we are laboring under natural laws. The manufacturer labors under artificial laws. He produces under laws which he makes and which he controls. Neither winter, summer, spring, nor fall interrupts his operations. The man out in the field must subscribe to the exigencies of natural laws. He can neither produce in quantity nor in quality according to his own will. Yet now we are asked to put the farmer in the category of an industrialist.

Mr. President, I am utterly amazed at this veto message under the circumstances. Here is the record of the bill as it passed: The RECORD shows that the new leader of this body was one of the foremost protagonists of this relief to the beleaguered agriculturists; and, Mr. President, I have been of the opinion that it would take more than $30,000,000 to balance the Budget.

I hope that every friend of the farmer—the man in the field, the man who has had to mortgage his property in order to hold onto a semblance of his old farm—I hope every man in this body will grant him at least this surcease from the obligations he must meet. Taxes are exorbitant. Living expenses are mounting. If I could sell a steer at the same price per pound that I would have to pay for a steak here, I wonder how much a real, good, fat steer would bring? Thirty-five dollars per hundred pounds is what I could get if I were paid at the rate of 35 cents a pound. That would be $350 a thousand pounds. I see my friend the Senator from Kansas [Mr. McGILL] in his chair. He comes from the cattle-raising section. How many steers did he sell for approximately $350 per head in his part of the country? The cost of living is mounting, yet the price of farm products remains static.

Mr. President, I hope we shall override this veto in the interest of those who are voiceless here, and yet upon whom we all depend. I hope this veto will be overridden by as great a percentage as that by which the bill was passed in the first place.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, before the Senator from South Carolina takes his seat I wish to ask him to yield in order that I may ask him a question.

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to invite the attention of the Senator from South Carolina to the fact that the Congress has just passed, and the President has just approved, the farm-tenancy bill, which proposes to make 40-year loans on the basis of 3-percent interest, I believe; and yet the interest rate on Federal land-bank loans for 1 year is reduced to 3½ percent and for a second year to 4 percent, and the rate of interest on commissioner's loans is reduced to 4 percent. All the loans under the Farm Tenancy Act, however, will be carried for a long period of time—40 to 45 years—at an interest rate of about 3 percent.

Mr. SMITH. I indicated while I was speaking that I did not understand the inconsistencies which are so glaring in this respect. Here are those who own the land begging for some means of holding on to it, and we pass a bill under the terms of which we invite others to come in and buy land and offer them a lower rate of interest than it is proposed in this bill shall be paid by farmers who already own their land.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That may be for the purpose of giving those who have lost their land an opportunity to buy the farms of those who are now paying high rates and who will be obliged to go bankrupt.

Mr. SMITH. Yes; that may be so. It may be that those who now own the lands should be dispossessed of them and that those who do not own them should come into possession of them by the extraordinary method of this new loan.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. At 3 percent.

Mr. SMITH. At 3 percent.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If the Senator will yield further, I should like to call attention to the refinancing which has occurred with respect to railroad corporations. The Great Northern Railroad, with a mortgage of $100,000,000, was refinanced by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation at an interest rate of 3½ percent.

I think there is a great deal in what the Senator from South Carolina has said. It seems to me the loan policy is inconsistent, and that the natural result will be that when the interest rate is restored to the high figure which, according to the contract, has been paid by those who now own the land, they will lose the land and others will come in and buy it with money borrowed at an interest rate of 3½ percent.

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

I cannot understand why there is such a weeping and wailing and so much brotherly love expressed for the man who does not own the land, while when the man who owns it, and who has been doing his everlasting best to make a living, finally is obliged to throw up his hands in despair, we step in and say to one who has never shown the thrift and enterprise necessary to acquire a farm, "We will make you a present of what this other poor devil lost."

Mr. President, the position is so obviously inconsistent, in the face of our protestation of love and devotion to the farmer, that I hope there will hardly be a dissenting vote in overriding the President's veto.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, a statement was made by our distinguished leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], which brings me to my feet. He spoke about the relationship of the pending matter to the possibility of similar relief in the case of loans made by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. It is because I believe that should be the effect of our action on the veto, if it shall be overridden, that I say what I do.

Mr. President, it is a terrible thing to think that in this country at the present time 31,000 homes have already been lost through foreclosure under loans made by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation up to the 1st of April this year. That is the latest date for which I have reliable figures. Besides that, on the same date, 84,385 homes were authorized for foreclosure. In an Ohio newspaper of recent date I saw the statement that in the city of Youngstown alone, between 600 and 700 properties are being foreclosed.

Then, besides all that, there is the estimate of a high official of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation that for 1938 more than 200,000 of the million-odd homes in that one State on which these mortgages have been placed, will be lost to the present owners by foreclosure.

It does not stop there, Mr. President. Many of these homes are taken over under foreclosure at a ridiculously low figure, and then deficiency judgments are asked for and obtained. Thus the people who have lost their homes may also be under the further obligation, if they have anything else in the world to lose, to confront the application of deficiency judgments. So the statement of my leader as to conditions under the Home Owners' Loan Corporation excites me to say what I have.

I never go along a country road and see a row of maples or elms at the roadside in front of an old homstead without experiencing a thrill of emotion. To me those trees tell the story of a homesick bride, a young couple, coming into a pioneer country, taking up land, and attempting to carve out a home and a living. The bride is homesick, and the husband says, "Keep a stiff upper lip, my dear; I will go out in the swamps and dig up some soft maples to plant in our dooryard. We will make this place bloom like the rose." That place has been a home, perhaps, for two or three generations; babies have been born there; they have grown up to adult life; and now, because of economic stress, these homes are to be lost.

Ah, Mr. President, I do not want everybody to think that he can come to Washington and get money. We are giving away money, billions of dollars of money; the national debt is increasing day by day; but, Mr. President, it is not expected that by this generous treatment we shall lose the money of the Government. There is ample security for these loans, both in the case of farms and in the case of homes in the villages and in the cities. The Government will be no worse off, if foreclosure comes ultimately, whether that foreclosure takes place now or next year.

So, Mr. President, because of my interest in the Home Owners' Loan Corporation victims, I have a like feeling of sympathy for the farmers who are likely to lose their homes. Therefore I think it is only an act of justice on the part of the Senate of the United States that it shall make possible the reduction of the interest rate on the loans, and, if possible, to have retained in present ownership those places which have been called home—than which there is no dearer place on earth.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I listened to the statement of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] in answer to the question of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] as to the different interest rates charged borrowers under the credit system of the Federal land banks and tenant farmers under the tenant bill. That was dwelt upon as a discrimination that could not be justified under our policy. But, of course, we make such discriminations in the loan of other Government funds. Under the Disaster Loan Corporation, set up by Congress to meet the flood situation, if one were a victim of the flood and his property were washed away and he had not the wherewithal to meet the situation and could not put up the collateral, he might borrow from the Disaster Loan Corporation at 3 percent; but if he could put up the collateral, if he had the security to give, he had to go to a bank and pay the usual rate. So we have discrimination in the lending of Federal funds in other agencies. But it is not a discrimination, it seems to me, that we should loan money at 3 percent to the submerged group, farm tenants, whom we are trying to reach under the farm tenant bill, and who, as everybody knows, constitute the lowest strata in this country. If we should loan them money at 3 percent, when they have not a thing to give except what they may buy with the money in the way of security, it seems to me that we are only reaching down our hand to help people who cannot help themselves at all; and if we ask the man who has a farm, who has some of this world's goods, who has some of the wherewithal to help himself, to pay a little more, we are not doing anything that we have not been doing in the case of other agencies of the Government engaged in the lending of funds.

So, as the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] has pointed out, if we are going to make this adjustment for these men on the farm and give them some Federal money to the tune of $50,000,000 a year or $150,000,000 a year, or whatever it may be, I know of no reason why we should not turn around and give $150,000,000 or $200,000,000 a year to the home owners in this country who mortgaged their little homes to the Government and pay 5-percent interest on their notes. If we do that, then where are the Budget balancers going to be who did not want to spend any money in this session of Congress to take care of people who do not have enough to keep the wolf from their door?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. KING. Is it not a fact, too, that the Government, extending relief in 1933 or 1934 to home owners who were paying, many of them, from 6 to 8 percent, assumed their burdens and responsibilities at 5 percent?

Mr. MINTON. Exactly so.

Mr. KING. So they were the beneficiaries of the generosity of the Government?

Mr. MINTON. Exactly so, and so were the farmers. The farmers were paying sometimes, just as were the home owners, 6 and 7 and even 8 percent, and, in some cases, 10 and 12 percent. The Government came to their aid and loaned them money at a lower rate of interest. Now it is desired again to reduce the interest rate to the farmer, but not to reduce it to the home owner who finds himself in identically the same situation. So if we are going to give $150,000,000 to the farmers by way of a reduction of interest, let us do the same thing for the home owners; and if we cannot afford it for the home owners, we cannot afford it for the farmers.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. Does the Senator approve charging an interest rate to the railroads less than is charged to the farmers?

Mr. MINTON. No; I do not. I think that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has loaned money on a basis that nobody who is not a banker or engaged in high finance in some way or other can quite understand.

Mr. BYRD. Is the Senator aware of the fact that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has loaned hundreds of millions of dollars to the railroads at 4-percent interest; that it has loaned hundreds of millions of dollars to the banks at 3 percent; that it has loaned further hundreds of millions of dollars to mortgage loan corporations at 3½-percent interest, and to insurance companies at 3½-percent interest?

Mr. MINTON. I never heard the Senator from Virginia object to any such loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. He has always been in favor of them, so far as I have heard.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator is entirely mistaken. Upon what authority does he make that statement?

Mr. MINTON. I have never heard the Senator object to any loan made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator knows that on the floor of the Senate I charged that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was deliberately misleading the people of this country with respect to its statement as to the assets of the Corporation.

Mr. MINTON. That may be true, but still the Senator never objected to lending money to the railroads at 4 percent.

Mr. BYRD. I voted against the appropriations made for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. MINTON. That may be true, but still the Senator never objected to making 4 percent loans to the railroads.

Mr. BYRD. I think the Senator is trying to evade my question. Does he favor lending money to the farmers at a higher rate of interest than to the railroads?

Mr. MINTON. The answer to that is no. So the Senator cannot get away from the proposition that, if we want to balance the Budget, we cannot do it by giving $50,000,000 or $150,000,000 to some class which it is desired to favor and denying it to another class which is just as worthy.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I had not intended to speak on the veto message, and am challenged to do so by the statement of the Senator from Indiana as to balancing the Budget. That seems to be the theory upon which the President bases his veto. I am not in accord with the Senator from Indiana that the President ought to try to balance the Budget by taking it out of the farmer who has a mortgage on his farm. I have not previously heard the Senator from Indiana talk about balancing the Budget. He seems to be inspired in that direction now because the effort is aimed against the poor man who cannot meet his mortgage rate of interest. I think it is rather unusual that the President of the United States——

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. McNARY. I will yield in just a moment when I finish the sentence. I think it is rather unusual that the President of the United States, without ever making any substantial effort to balance the Budget, should wait until this unfortunate time to take $40,000,000 out of the pockets of the farmers who cannot pay the interest on their mortgages. I now yield.

Mr. MINTON. Will the Senator from Oregon support a measure to reduce the interest rate to the home owners of this country?

Mr. McNARY. O Mr. President, I would reconstruct the whole credit system as applied to mortgages to home owners and to those who have mortgages on their farms. I made myself rather definite a few days ago when the able Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] had the tenancy bill before the Senate. I said at that time that I thought it was unfair tc loan money for the acquisition of farms to tenants who heretofore had never shown a disposition to assume responsibility or a desire to own a farm, and at the same time charge nearly twice that rate of interest to farmers who had made a success as farmers and had built up the agriculture of our country.

I stand in that position today. It is not alone my desire to help the needy farmer, as I have heretofore pointed out, but it is a desire to help particularly the farmer who has made an effort to acquire property. In that direction we should give at least a low rate of interest to the farmer who has made an effort to hold his farm, maintain his home, educate his children, and become a prominent citizen, the kind of citizen who has made the Commonwealths of this country great, including that of Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I did not get the answer to my question.

Mr. McNARY. In direct answer, I will say, yes. I will go further and take up the whole scheme of loaning money to the farmers and home owners to aid them without any profit to any private individual firm or corporation.

Mr. President, I recall most graphically that in 1920 the Senate had under consideration a bill which, I believe, was called the Shipping Act of 1920, permitting the lending of money to shipowners who wanted to build new ships. We agreed to loan them 75 percent of the cost of building the ships, and to loan them that money at the rate which the Government borrowed the money in the respective Federal districts, which was not often more than 3 percent. Years went by. Fortunately or unfortunately, it fell to my fate to handle the Farm Marketing Act when Mr. Hoover was President of the United States. At that time I attached the same amendment to the act creating the Federal Farm Board. Money was loaned to farm cooperatives on that basis.

I think the $40,000,000 this program would cost the Government is a small item compared with the great expenditures and waste incurred by this administration in the last 4 years. Therefore I shall take the opportunity to express myself by voting to override the President's veto.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the bill which the President has vetoed simply proposes to reduce to 3½ percent the interest rate on the mortgages held by the Federal land banks for the year beginning July 1, 1936, and for the subsequent year to 4 percent, and proposes also to reduce the interest rate on the land commissioner's loans to 4 percent for 2 years.

In the President's veto message it is stated, and it is a fact, that on the volume of farm mortgages carried by the Federal land banks the loss to the Treasury will amount to $31,700,000 for the first year; for the second year, of course, less than that because the interest rate is advanced to 4 percent. The loss on the land commissioner's loans is estimated by the Treasury to approximate a little more than $8,000,000 for each of the 2 years. The land commissioner's loans are made, of course, to a corporation, all the stock of which is owned by the Treasury, so there is a loss of profits or prospective profits to the Treasury so far as the land commissioner's loans are concerned.

In the veto message it is pointed out that the land commissioner's loans are made generally upon what we know as second mortgages, where the margin of security is not as great. I desire to invite attention to an important fact, a very important fact to the farm owners of America who have been compelled to borrow upon their land. Through all the years we have paid high interest rates, and we have paid unnecessarily high interest rates because the lender always figured a percentage of loss and made the thrifty farmer make up the loss on the loans that could not be collected.

It is pointed out in the veto message that the land commissioner's loans are made upon second mortgages, and the security is not very ample, or at least the margin is not very great and therefore the possibility of loss is greater; hence the interest rate should remain at 5 percent.

Mr. President, I favored this proposal when it was before the Senate——

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. HUGHES. Did the Senator state the commissioner's loans are on second mortgages?

Mr. GEORGE. The commissioner's loans are generally on second mortgages.

Mr. HUGHES. Is it not a fact that a great many of the commissioner's loans are not on second mortgages?

Mr. GEORGE. That is true.

Mr. HUGHES. A great many of them are on first mortgages, are they not?

Mr. GEORGE. It is true that a great many loans are on first mortgages, but a great many are on second mortgages. The first mortgage generally is held by the Federal land bank.

I favored the bill because I favor a reduction to 3-percent interest rate on the fixed indebtedness against American farms. I am ready to vote for any measure that will give us a rate not exceeding 3 percent upon the fixed mortgage farm indebtedness in this country.

Through the Federal land-bank system and the commissioner's loans, approximately 37½ percent, I believe, of the farm mortgages of the country are now carried. In other words, the Federal land bank and the land commissioner have absorbed almost 37½ percent of the outstanding mortgages upon American farms. The greatest relief that can be given to the American farmer is to give him a rate of interest which his business will sustain.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. Are the percentages stated by the Senator in number of mortgages or in the aggregate amount of the mortgages?

Mr. GEORGE. In the volume of fixed farm indebtedness. I may not have the figures accurately, but I think I have stated them substantially.

Mr. BARKLEY. The information given the committee when this measure was before it was to the effect that out of more than 6,000,000 farmers in the United States, about one-half of whom own farms free from mortgage of any sort, approximately 800,000 were borrowers through the land bank or land commissioner; that of the 6,500,000 farmers approximately a little more than 600,000 are borrowers through the land bank, which is about one-tenth in number; that the number of land commissioner's loans amount to a little more than $500,000, but there are many duplications which would make the net number of individual borrowers through the two sources a little more than 800,000. Of course, that has no relationship to the amount. I am speaking of the proportion of farmers who are borrowers through the land bank or land commissioner. The Senator may be correct as to the aggregate amount. I am not in a position to dispute that statement.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator, of course, is familiar with the fact that at this session of Congress $440,000,000 was appropriated under the Soil Conservation Act. While it carried the title of "soil conservation" the underlying purpose was to provide some cash benefits to the farmer who did certain things.

It seems to me from the standpoint of economy that a lower rate of interest would put the farmer in a position where he would require less, if he required anything, in the way of a direct grant from the Federal Treasury. In other words, the higher the interest rate the more need there is for Federal help in other forms. The lower the interest rate the less need there is on the part of the farmer for direct grants.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is undoubtedly correct.

Mr. President, what I was undertaking to say is that, taken on the average, the farms in the South will not and cannot sustain an interest rate on farm mortgages of more than 3 percent; and that accounts for the fact that we have a great many farm tenants in the South. Not all the farm tenants of the South have been tenants throughout their lives or from choice. Many of them formerly were home owners. Many of them have been foreclosed out of their homes; and the carrying charge upon the fixed indebtedness against the farm in the form of a farm mortgage has been one of the primary causes of farm tenancy in the South. It not only prevented the thrifty and industrious young man who desired to own a farm from becoming a purchaser of a farm, but during the past few years it actually foreclosed out of farm homes thousands and even hundreds of thousands of former landowners who could not pay the excessive interest charges.

Mr. President, I presume that in fixing the rates of loans to the railroads the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has been governed by what it believed to be sound economy. That is, the officers of that agency undertook to fix rates of interest which the business could bear, and which would permit it to remain solvent as a going part of our transportation system. I suppose that is the reason why we have made loans to foster and to build or rebuild our merchant marine at lower rates of interest than 3 percent, and I suppose that is why we now have authorized the making of loans to tenants to enable them to become farm home owners at 3 percent over a long period of 40 or 45 years. I am not complaining about that, Mr. President, because I repeat that there will be no genuine, permanent, lasting, dependable farm aid until the Government has seen to it that an interest rate of not exceeding 3 percent is possible to all the farm owners in this country.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator the rate of interest which farmers now are required to pay when they seek loans from banks, or from loan agencies, or from some of the farm organizations which are not under the patronage of the Federal Government. Is it not a fact that they have to pay 5 and 6 and 7 percent?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, it is a fact; but I do not see the relevancy of the question, nor the relevancy of the fact. The fact is that the average farm will not bear and cannot pay an interest rate of 6 or 7 or 8 or 10 percent, and that is why so many American farmers have become impoverished. I repeat, if we want to give real farm relief, let us reduce this interest rate to not exceeding 3 percent.

The objection is raised that the home owners will want the same reduction. Suppose they do. That is another question. It has no relevancy at all to this question. But suppose they do, Mr. President. It is a very natural thing for them to do when we have already embarked on a housing program, and we are already building homes for the American people which they are permitted to occupy at less than 3-percent interest upon the investment. We are subsidizing tenants in many of our housing projects at this moment, and we are proposing to expand the housing program. The home owners have nothing to do with this matter. They ought to be judged on their own merits.

Mr. President, there can be no logic in making farm tenants by permitting the foreclosure of honest farmers who, through all the lean years, have stood up under the burden of debt and have gone on trying to make good, and then turning around and saying, "When we make a tenant out of you we are going to enable you to buy back perhaps your own farm or the farm that you formerly owned and pay not exceeding 3-percent interest over a long period of time."

The distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] reminded us that some of us were "Budget balancers", as he described us. One of the few times when the Senator from Indiana has become a Budget balancer is today, when he does not want the farmer to have money for the next 2 years at 3½ percent for 1 year, and 4 percent for the next year. The only other time was when the President vetoed the simple bill enabling the American soldier to carry his insurance for another period of 5 years. No, Mr. President; I am not that kind of a Budget balancer. I have no desire to balance the Budget by taking the necessary amount out of either the soldier or the farmer; but I am defending my vote on this veto upon the proposition I have already stated, that if we expect to relieve the American farmer and give him dependable, steady, constant, real relief, we shall have to do it through reducing the interest rate on farm mortgages in this country, and that rate ought not to be as high as 3½ percent. It ought not to exceed 3 percent.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. GEORGE. I was about to yield the floor, Mr. President; but I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. HUGHES. Does not the Senator from Georgia think that the question which we have been considering here for some little while is largely governed, so far as our views are concerned, by our local knowledge, or the needs of particular localities?

Let me illustrate. In the State of Delaware, which I have the honor in part to represent, a large number but not an unusually large number of loans were made by the Federal land bank and also by the Federal land-bank commissioner. It may be that our conditions are different from those of the State which the Senator in part represents; but those loans have been very materially reduced. It is a rare thing that a mortgage held by either the Federal land bank or the land-bank commissioner has been foreclosed. There are very few cases in which that has been done. The payments have been met because, perhaps, our farmers have been able to meet them.

Looking at this question from the standpoint of the information which I have been able to obtain in my State, and the views which the farmers of my State hold as I understand them, we have no need for a reduction of the rate of interest. We are probably more interested in having the indebtedness of the Government reduced, and not taking a loss of thirty or forty million dollars a year.

I was a member of the committee when this matter came up, and I heard Governor Myers discuss it before the committee; and the impression I received was that at this time farm conditions have so greatly improved that there is not need for a reduced rate of interest.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, of course, conditions may be better in some sections than in others, and the farm indebtedness may not be so heavy in the State of Delaware as it is elsewhere, and I hope it is not. I repeat, however, that on the average the American farmer who now has a fixed mortgage indebtedness against his farm can never liquidate it if he has to pay more than 3-percent interest, and I think the Senator will find that the same thing is true in Delaware. The farmer may liquidate by selling; he may have other, outside resources; but the cotton farmer, the farmer of the Southeast, cannot possibly liquidate his farm debt if he is required to pay more than 3-percent interest. The Senator from South Carolina and other Senators around me who have spent their days on the farm, and are familiar with farm conditions, know that precisely what I am stating is true.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, to me for the legislative branch to vote on the question of passing a measure notwithstanding a veto of the executive branch is a serious matter. I think the majority leader, in calling attention to the need for study and deep concern, did a very proper thing.

When the legislative authority was vested in the Congress, this limitation of requiring Executive approval was put on it, and the Constitution provided that if the Executive approval were not forthcoming there must be certain definite procedure and certain definite action to pass the legislation. To my mind that puts every one of us on notice, in considering a matter like this, to consider it on a little different basis from that on which we considered the measure originally. I know that is my feeling.

For some years I have had a small part in helping enact the type of legislation that is now before us, but when there is a Presidential veto I believe there should be careful reconsideration and review of reasons which might have been compelling at the time of the original presentation of the bill. I have tried to give that reconsideration to the pending measure, and I have reached the conclusion that there is every reason why there should not be a vote cast in this Chamber to sustain the veto of the President.

Because some of my associates here in private discussion have called attention to some matters which I believe are erroneous conclusions, I think it would not be a waste of time to refer briefly to the proposed legislation and its purpose. It is legislation proposed to assist the farmer. Those who have been Members of this body for many years will recall that the Farm Loan Act of 1916 was enacted for the purpose of bringing the farm borrower in touch with the sources of credit. It was for the purpose of setting up a farmer-controlled and a farmer-owned organization, and of continuing a reservoir of credit which the farmer could tap without paying unreasonable rates of interest.

The Government subscribed practically all the original capital stock. There was provision for borrowers to take 5 percent of the stock in local associations, and by 1924 the original capital which the Government contributed was all paid off under the provision requiring that 25 percent of the payments should be set aside for that purpose. In 1924 the farmers owned and controlled the organization, but because of the increased business, because of the change of conditions, it became necessary again for the Government to authorize a subscription to the capital stock and a contribution toward surplus. In January 1932 Congress passed an act authorizing the subscription of $125,000,000 to the stock, and, with a very small reduction, we still have that amount of stock at the present time.

However, that was found not to be sufficient. Because of the conditions during the depression years, the land banks could not secure the funds with which to make the necessary loans; it was absolutely impossible. Private sources of credit had disappeared. As was called to our attention in the debate today by one of the speakers, many of the farmers had incurred mortgage indebtedness on the basis of an income-producing power that did not exist, and they were compelled to pay fixed charges in taxes and interest on the fictitious-value loans. They could not refinance their loans locally; commercial credit, as I have said, was completely dried up. It became evident to the Members of Congress that it was necessary to provide the only credit that was available in this country at that time, namely, Government credit.

There was some discussion as to the best way to go about that. Some suggested that we set up an entirely new governmental organization and lend Government money to these needy people in the various lines, especially to farm borrowers. Others counseled that we could best lend aid to the Federal land banks in the way of making it possible for them to get funds with which to carry on. As an argument for that position, it was said they had the organization ready to go without additional expense. At that time, namely, May 1, 1933, 60 percent of the Federal land-bank borrowers were in default in principal and interest.

We passed the Farm Credit Act of 1933, and it did three particular things it was designed to do. The first was to bring about a reduction in interest. Bear this in mind, that the land-bank mortgages which had been negotiated were carried on a contractual basis. The interest rates ran all the way from 4½ percent to 6½ percent. Over 50 percent of the loans bore greater than 5 percent, and the borrowers are paying that today, and have been since the 1st day of July of this year. That is what we have to bear in mind in considering this question; they are paying that percentage. It is not a matter of only half a percent. It reverted to the contractual rate.

The Farm Credit Act of 1935 first provided for a reduction to 4½ percent, and later, through the efforts of some on the other side and some on this side of the Congress, the rate was reduced for 1 year to 3½ percent, and then again reduced to 3½ percent; but that extension expired on the 1st day of July of this year. We provided that the Government should pay from the Treasury into the Federal land bank the difference between what they were losing under the contract rate of the mortgage and the interest rate we were providing. We provided that this loss should be paid from the Treasury.

I am constrained to believe, from some of the statements made in the veto message, that the President has been misled.

I do not believe there is any possibility of a charge this year on the Treasury of up to $40,000,000 in the way of a bonus—call it a bonus if you care to—as contemplated and suggested either in the testimony of Governor Myers before the subcommittee on the veto message of the President.

I have here the consolidated report of the Federal land bank dated January 1 last year, and it shows that the entire charge paid by the Treasury because of interest reduction in 4 years was $61,000,000. I have here their report, in which they listed as necessary to be paid for reductions last year $12,000,000. We are not asking merely for the extension of one-half percent interest rate. If that is all the gentlemen have in mind, I might say that there are about $2,000,000,000 in Federal land-bank mortgages. One-half of 1 percent would amount to $10,000,000. There are $800,000,000 in commissioner's loans. One percent on that is $8,000,000. The total would be $18,000,000 instead of $40,000,000.

Let me digress just a moment on that. When we made provision that we would pay this reduction of the interest, the Federal land bank, because of the limitations, could not refinance any of the farmers who were losing their farms. Because of the limitation of 50-percent appraisal on the land value, plus 20 percent of the insurable building valuation, they could not reach this mortage indebtedness which has been created on a fictitious valuation. We made available from the Treasury a new fund, $200,000,000, United States Treasury money, and we provided that if under the limitation as to appraisal they could not refinance a farm, there would be available up to $7,500 to a man, of this commissioner's money, this Federal Treasury money, at the rate of 5 percent, up to 75 percent of the appraisal, and that it could be loaned secured by second mortgage on real-estate or on chattel security, and by supplementing in that way we might enable a large number of the men to refinance their mortgages, which could not be refinanced under the limitation.

To take care of additional losses, we provided that they should pay into the land banks contributions to surplus and additional contributions for taxes and delinquencies. We set up a Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation, which is dealing in the bonds right now. It is the market for the greater share of the Federal land-bank bonds.

Incidentally, I have their report up to January 1 of this year. Last year the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation had a profit of over $20,000,000 before they had set aside anything in reserves, and after setting the reserves aside they show a profit of $11,000,000 for 1936.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GILLETTE. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator from Iowa has made a study of the Federal land bank. I wish to ask a question for information. This afternoon the Senator from Georgia stated that every share of stock of the Federal land bank belonged to the Federal Governemnt. My understanding was that there was some private ownership in the Federal land-bank stock, and I merely ask the Senator from Iowa if he will state the actual situation.

Mr. GILLETTE. I think the Senator from Colorado is correct in his statement. As I attempted to state a moment ago, in 1924 the original stock had all been retired by the contributions of 5 percent by the borrower, but because of the necessity for contributions we bought $125,000,000 worth of stock later as authorized in January 1932. We owned on January 1 last—that is, the Government owned—$124,000,000 of the stock, but the Federal land bank is not a governmental institution, nor are we guaranteeing their bonds. We are guaranteeing the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation bonds.

Mr. President, I do not wish to take time on this matter, but there are two things which are uppermost in my mind. First, I do not believe there is the necessity for a subsidy, judging from the conclusions drawn in the debate. I may say that last year the President of the United States was one of the finest allies the farmer had in the consideration of this question. In the interest of reducing the rate last year we went to the President. Governor Myers was there, and the President took the lead in asking for this reduction for the 1 year, the reduction which expired the 1st day of July.

I believe the facts will justify me in the statement that there will not be the charge on the Treasury which is feared. Eventually, of course, if the United States reimburses the Federal land bank for losses, there may be some charge. But granted, Mr. President, that there is such a charge, it seems to me there is every justification for it, as was so forcefully presented by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and other Senators this afternoon. We thought nothing of contributing $160,000,000 by way of bonus to build up the merchant marine. I have no fault to find with our action in that respect. We thought nothing of appropriating $61,000,000 to build a battleship, and I voted for that appropriation. I have no fault to find with that action. But why in the name of all that is fair, when farmers are in such a bad situation as they now find themselves, should we not grant them relief?

A friend asked me why one-half of 1 percent could make any difference to our farmers. One-half a percent is the difference between profit and loss; it is the difference between financial life and financial death. It is the difference between the continuance of a home and a producing agency at a profit, and its destruction.

Mr. President, we do not have a fixed income on the farm. The Senator did me honor over much when he said a moment ago that I had made a study of this matter. My study was largely made as a debtor. I am a farmer. The farmer's income is so very small. Do Senators know there are thousands of farmers in the State of Iowa who in the last years in actual cash income did not receive over $150 to $200 per annum? And with that they had to meet fixed charges, interest charges, insurance charges, and taxes. They had enough to eat. They could go out and kill a chicken, and there was a vegetable garden, so they had enough to eat, and they had some clothing, but when they have to get the dollars they cannot get them.

Mr. President, we have been helping the farmers. They cannot understand why we now are asked to take the action resulting from this veto with respect to them. And here is another thing they cannot understand. In the district which I formerly had the opportunity to represent, within the last 2 months one of the ctiies issued municipal bonds, bearing interest at the rate of 2½ percent, which were oversubscribed. The farmer cannot see why he should be required to return to a contractual rate of from 5 to 6½ percent. He was not responsible for his condition. Seven hundred and thirty-five thousand farmers lost their farms within the last 4 years. The National Grange is my authority for that statement. Why should we compel them to pay as high as 5½ to 6½ percent? That is how the farmer argues when he sees and knows that subscriptions to municipal bond issues are available at lower rates than he has to pay on what he borrows. The farmer cannot understand that procedure, and he ought not to be expected to have to understand any such thing.

Mr. President, I apologize to the Senate for using so much of its time. As I said, it is a serious matter for me to vote to override the action of a coordinate branch of this Government. I would not take such a position unless I were thoroughly convinced in my own mind that it is justified, and I did not take that position today until I had reviewed the facts as I saw them and the conditions as carefully as I was able to do so. I do not believe there ought to be a vote cast to sustain that veto.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] that some of the statements which came from the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration were at least misleading, and I think the President did not quite understand the situation when he wrote his veto message.

As the Senator from Iowa said, the farmers who are making loans through the land banks are paying a contract rate; and he is correct in his statement that the interest rate runs from 4 percent to 6½ percent. The land-bank law provides that no rate shall be above 6 percent; but there are, according to the figures of the Farm Credit Administration, 157 loans now outstanding on which there is paid a contract rate of 6½ percent. Those are some special loans, as I understand, in the case of which the borrowers do not have farm-loan associations set up, and it costs the land bank a little more to make the loans. Some of the loans are in some of our island possessions. At any rate, on some of the loans the borrowers are paying 6½ percent. Eighty-six percent of the contract loans are made at the rate of 5 percent or over.

The average rate of interest on the land-bank bonds that are outstanding is a little better than 3½ percent—to be exact, 3.5659 percent. The average contract rate of interest on the land-bank loans is 5.0529 percent, a difference of 1.487 percent. There is a provision in the land-bank law that the land bank shall not charge more than 1 percent above the rate of interest carried by the last issue of bonds sold; but the fact remains that there is a difference of 1.487 percent, almost 1½ percent difference

Mr. President, besides that, a large amount of the old outstanding bonds have been refunded by the land banks at the rate of 3 percent, cutting down the expense of the land bank in paying that interest; but the farmers have not received the benefit of that reduction. They are still paying their contract rate. This bill would give the farmers another year of 3½-percent rate of interest on their regular farm land-bank loans and 4 percent on the commissioner's loans.

Mr. President, the bill originated in the House of Representatives. It was considered by the Committee on Agriculture in the House and was passed by the House. It came to the Senate and was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency. A subcommittee was appointed, of which the eminent leader of the majority side was the chairman. A hearing was held. Governor Myers and some others came before the subcommittee, and after hearing the evidence the subcommittee voted to report favorably to the full committee the bill as passed by the House. When the bill came before the full Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate an amendment was offered to strike out the provision which provided for 4-percent interest on the Commissioner's loans, and the majority of the committee present at the meeting voted for the amendment. The bill was reported to the calendar and came to the Senate with the committee amendment. After a little discussion on the floor of the Senate the committee amendment was rejected by a majority on the floor of the Senate, and the bill was passed as it passed the House.

I was sorry indeed to see the President veto the bill; but as the Senator from Iowa has so well said, the Constitution provides how bills which are vetoed by the President shall be acted upon.

Mr. President, it seems to me there is need for this legislation. Governor Myers stated that conditions among the farmers are now better; that their ability to pay is better. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the farmers are still being foreclosed upon.

The Senator from Iowa gave the figure of 735,000 farmers being foreclosed upon during the past 4 years in respect to all loans. According to the figures of the Farm Credit Administration, however, on farm loans made through the land banks from June 1933 to June 1937, during the past 4 years 37,396 loans made by the Federal land banks were foreclosed upon by those banks. So, even though conditions are getting a little better, farmers are still continuing to lose their farms by foreclosure because they cannot pay the interest.

On June 30 of this year there were pending before the land banks of the Nation 4,189 foreclosure cases, making for the period of 4 years a total of 41,585 loans foreclosed and those cases which were pending at the end of the 4-year period. So, Mr. President, the fact that these loans are being foreclosed by the land banks at the rate of better than 10,000 per year for the past 4 years indicates that the rate of interest still is higher than the farmers can pay, and they are losing out.

The land banks have been of great benefit to the farmer. There is no doubt that they have had the effect of reducing the rate of interest. Not only have they caused reduction in rate to the farmers who borrowed through the land banks, but they have also caused reduction in the rates to the farmers who borrowed from insurance companies, or local banks, or from other private interests. The average rate of interest on farm loans has been reduced because of the land-bank law.

By reason of the figures which I have stated here and those which have been given by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] and others, we feel that the rate is still too high, and that at least for another year we should keep the rate on land-bank loans down to 3½ percent, and keep down the rate on commissioner's loans to 4 percent.

The money for the commissioner's loans, as has been stated, is raised out of the Treasury of the United States by the sale of low-rate interest bonds. So there is really no loss in money on the commissioner's loans even at the reduced rate of 4 percent. Of course there is a loss between the amount the Government would get if the rate were 5 percent and what it would get if the rate were only 4 percent. There is that difference, of course; but it comes out of the farmer, and there is no actual loss on the commissioner's loans so far as the Government is concerned by the reduction of 1 percent.

So far as Federal land-bank loans of 3½ percent are concerned, as the Senator from Iowa has so well stated, there is no question that the figures of the land bank's report have proven beyond a doubt that there will not be a $31,000,000 loss if the 3½-percent rate is continued for another year.

So I hope, Mr. President, that the farmers may be given this little recognition and assistance in paying off their debt and continuing to own their property.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to speak briefly on the pending question. The understanding generally is that all that is involved in this matter is merely the difference in interest between 3½ percent and 4 percent. My understanding is—and, of course, there can be no doubt about it, because it is in accordance with the facts—that if the bill should not pass, the farmer would be under obligation to pay 5 percent or 5½ percent and, in some instances, 6 percent. It is that very great inequity, it seems to me, that has not been properly considered either by Governor Myers or the President in his message; in fact, I think one reading the President's message must come to the conclusion that he was guided with reference to his facts and figures entirely by the statements that have been made by the Governor of the Federal land bank. It is not a question of calling upon the farmers to pay 4 percent; it is a question of whether we desire to call upon them to pay 5 percent or 5½ percent or 6 percent.

There is no trouble in this country about securing money for almost any kind of business at 3 percent, 3½ percent, or 4 percent. I have the figures here, for instance, of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. That institution is making many loans to banks and trust companies at 3 percent, to insurance companies at 3½ percent, to railroads at 4 percent, to mortgage-loan companies at 3½ percent, and preferred-stock loans at an interest rate of 3 percent. There can be no justification in calling upon the farmer, under present conditions, to pay as high as he will be compelled to pay if this bill does not pass. When money is plentiful for 2½ percent, 3 percent, and 4 percent, does the Senate want to go on record to the effect that the farmer shall pay 4 percent, 5 percent, 5½ percent, or some 6 percent?

One cannot properly appreciate the situation with reference to agricultural conditions without going back over the years during which time the accumulation of indebtedness and other burdens has been going on. The chart of the Agricultural Department shows that from 1915 to 1921 the farm was making money; but there has never been a year since 1921 when the farm has paid in the United States. So the important question is not that the farmer is in a better condition than he was last year, but is he in a situation financially, in view of the accumulated burdens of 10 years, to carry on and pay a rate of 5, 5½, or 6 percent?

Something has been said here about the fact that the passage of the bill will establish a precedent which we cannot ignore when we come to consider the question of home owners' loans. I think that is correct; in all probability we will have to consider it; but I do not hesitate to say that there are two things which the Government must do in this emergency: It must keep the farmer on the farm and it must keep the family in the home, if it is possible to do so. I am quite favorable to any program which will reasonably tend to accomplish those two ends. I do not believe that there is any kind of farm relief that can be so immediate, direct, and beneficial in its effects as giving the farmer a rate of interest which he can actually meet and remain on the farm. We will deal with the home owners' loan matter when it reaches us.

My contention is that, as a matter of fact, 3 percent or 3½ percent is all the farmer can possibly pay in the way of interest. It is not in the business to pay more at any time. And it is worth something to keep him on the farm, even at the expense of the Treasury, until unfavorable conditions shall have passed.

I do not minimize what is involved when it comes to overriding a Presidential veto, but I am sure that the passage of this bill will be of tremendous benefit to a great many farmers, and that, if they are not to remain on their farms, the amount which the Government will ultimately pay in trying to get them back on the farm will be very much greater than the amount which we are supposed to contribute for the purpose of keeping them on the farm. There may be more glamor in pushing a man off the farm and then devising some ambitious scheme to take him from tenancy and put him back on the farm, but the real beneficial effect of any program is, in the first instance, to keep him there, if it is possible to do so. In my opinion, the passage of the bill will serve the cause of farm relief as immediately, effectively, and substantially as any possible legislation which may be passed at the present session.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I should like to make a brief statement on the question now pending before the Senate. I intend to vote to override the veto of the President, and I should like to offer a few reasons why I think it is wise to afford to the farmers the lowest interest rate on loans made by the land banks and land-bank commissioner.

Mr. President, there is one thing that is indispensable to the farmer—that is credit. Unlike all other things which are produced, it takes many, many months to produce a farm crop.

Take wheat, for example, which is planted in the fall and usually reaped 8 or 9 months later. In order to plant a wheat crop the farmer has to buy the fertilizer nearly a year ahead; he has to buy the seed a year ahead; and then put his crop of wheat in the ground a year ahead. So that, after he has made all these expenditures, it is necessary for him to wait 9 months in order to harvest his crop. He cannot produce something, like a manufacturer can, in a day. It takes him 9 months to produce a crop of wheat. In addition to that, he is subject to all the hazards of the weather, to disease, to drought, and so on. He needs his extra labor at the very time the crop is ready for harvest.

Quite often to plant his crop he has to go to a local bank and borrow money to finance him over the 9 months' period for fertilizer, seed, and so forth, and when he does reap his crop the bank knows it. He usually borrows from a local institution and the bank wants the note paid off at the time he reaps his harvest. Often many farmers are in the same situation; the need for paying off these obligations is pressing at harvest time, so that such farmers dump their products upon the market at almost the identical time, which causes the price to fall to a very low figure. The only way the farmer can hold his products and "feed" them out in a more orderly way in the market and realize the maximum amount of return from his 9 months of waiting is to have sufficient credit to enable him to do it. If the credit is at 6 percent, the increase in the price he secures by holding the product several months after harvesting is partly or entirely offset by the high interest the farmer has to pay to get his loan. Therefore, in the interest of orderly marketing and a fairer price return, it is the farmer's need to have sufficient credit at a low interest rate to permit him to "feed" his commodities into the market at such time as he can get an adequate return from them.

There is a second reason I wish to offer in support of the low interest rate. What is the logic of saying that the farmer needs help and of giving the farmer benefits in the form of soil conservation, on the one hand, and charging him a high interest rate for the money he borrows from the Government on the other hand? Certainly, if he needs help out of the Federal Treasury in the form of a gratuity, as under the Soil Conservation Act, it is maintained he does need help, then I think it is likewise of greater importance that we reduce the interest rate, give him easier credit, and thereby make the need for other help less pressing. Certainly, as between the two, it would pay us to finance the farmer through loans at a low interest rate where his own work and his own property give security for the loan, and where it will be eventually returned to the Treasury at a low rate, say, of 3 or 3½ percent interest, than it would be to charge him, say, 6 percent and make it necessary for the Congress to appropriate a huge sum of money in other forms of assistance.

I cannot see any logic in the policy of saying agriculture needs help, and taking money out of the Federal Treasury and giving it to the farmer on the one hand, and in the next breath insisting that he pay 5 percent to the land banks or land-bank commissioner for money that is only loaned to him to assist him in running his farm and that loan on good security. What the farmer needs is credit. He needs it because in his particular business he cannot stop the operation of producing crops once he has planted them in the soil. If there is a surplus or a shortage of the crop, he needs credit, because his industry is a long-time industry, taking many months to bring it to harvest; and when he does bring it to the point of harvest, every other farmer has done the same thing, and all the produce is placed upon the market at the same time unless credit is at hand enabling the farmer to hold out for better prices.

Therefore if it is possible—and it is possible—for the Government to make a loan to the farmer at an interest rate which in reality costs the Government nothing, because it is borrowing money at a lower interest rate than it is now lending it to the farmer, it seems to me that it is good business to continue a larger and more equitable policy of credit than it is to enter the field of increased gratuities.

For that reason I shall vote to override the President's veto, believing that it is in the interest of agriculture as well as the Treasury of the United States to give the farmer low interest rates—ample credit, if you please. And if he has this at a small cost in interest, he will not need the other assistance so much. But without credit at low interest we may look for agricultural relief measures which would not come before us if the farmer could borrow without high interest eating into his returns.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, if any note is taken here of the individual record of Senators, I may fairly assume that most of my colleagues know very well that I have consistently opposed the entrance of the Federal Government into the business affairs of the country. I have always contended that the differences in equities between the agricultural interests and the industrial interests of the country should be adjusted by abating the enormous privileges of the industrial interests in behalf of the agricultural interests, so that the farmer might buy at a reasonable rate what he is compelled to buy rather than at the privileged rate of the industrialist.

That until recently has always been the attitude of the party to which I belong. It has always demanded that that be done. But when the party had an opportunity to do it, it has never written a sentence into a statute to accomplish that purpose.

It will also be recalled that effort after effort has been made here toward economy, toward balancing the Budget. Almost the last extended speech of the late lamented leader of the majority was made in behalf of that issue of economy.

However, in every single instance and upon every item every effort at economy has been successfully resisted.

Today I am not willing to support this effort to begin with the farmer in the matter of economy. It does not directly affect my State. I imagine—in fact, I know—that the farm-mortgage record of Virginia is a particularly happy one. It does not affect me politically, because the probability is that I shall be dead when my term shall have expired here in the Senate. But as a matter of fairness to the farmers in contrast with what has been done here, I intend to vote to override the President's veto.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am glad to associate myself with our beloved friend, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], in the views expressed in the early part of his remarks. I am sure we were benefited and profited by the same. I do not, however, agree with the concluding statements of the Senator with respect to the veto message of the President. I intend to support the position of the President as presented in the veto message which has just been read.

In my opinion, the veto message should be sustained, and I regret that it is not receiving the support to which it is entitled in view of its merit and the sound basis upon which it rests.

The Senator from Virginia indicated that there have been departures from the basic principles upon which the Democratic Party was founded, and I inferred from his remarks that unwise policies had been adopted by the Federal Government which tended to weaken the authority of the States and to concentrate in the Federal Government power in excess of that which had been delegated to it. In my opinion there have been tragic and dangerous departures from the faith of the fathers and from the principles upon which genuine democratic government rests. Throughout the world forces are operating calculated to weaken, if not to destroy, local self-government and restrict the rights and liberties of individuals. Governments are usurping authority and impinging upon the rights of individuals. The Democratic Party has demanded equal rights for all and has denounced special privileges, contributions, and subsidies in favor of groups and various industries. It attempted to preserve the Republic, not only its form but its spirit, and to maintain constitutional government and the rights of the States.

There is unmistakable evidence that many of our citizens are forgetting or ignoring the principles upon which constitutional government rests, and particularly the duties and responsibilities which rest upon them as individuals and upon the States and local communities. There has been a growing insistence that the Federal Government take over the duties and responsibilities of the States, and also a subsidence of that fine spirit of individualism so essential to the maintenance of genuine democratic government. This is apparent in the demands which are made for grants and subsidies and special privileges from the Federal Government. The Democratic Party for years opposed bounties, and special privileges, and grants, and subsidies, and movements, and policies looking toward the creation of an omnipotent Federal Government. Democrats protested against a powerful central government—against what they denominated as the philosophy of Hamilton; but, unfortunately, for the best interests of our country, not only now but in the future, there is unmistakable evidence of a desire upon the part of many of our citizens to have the Federal Government enlarge its authority and engage in activities beyond its constitutional power.

I fear that these centripetal forces are drawing within their powerful grasp not only individuals but local communities and States, and are developing a false philosophy, which will, if unchecked, culminate in the aggrandizement of the Federal Government and the devitalization of the States.

I fear that many Democrats have forgotten the teachings of the founders of the party and the platforms which have been promulgated during many decades. I wonder if we have forgotten the teachings of Jefferson, Madison, and Jackson, and those great apostles of democracy who made important contributions to the development of this Republic. Apparently there are many Democrats who seem as eager for subsidies and bounties and special privileges at the hands of the Federal Government as have been persons belonging to other political parties, and whose policies nd conduct Democrats severely criticized.

During the depression policies were adopted which it was thought were justified by the situation, but which under normal conditions could find no justification. It is quite likely that improvident appropriations were made, and many communities and individuals conceived the view that the Federal Government should continue its Nation-wide activities and enormous expenditures. The time has now come when there must be material reductions in Federal expenditures and the withdrawal of the Government from activities which appertain exclusively to individuals and to local communities.

The veto message now before us should receive our support. It is justified by economic conditions and by the condition of the Federal Treasury. Moreover, it is an admonition that the Federal Government cannot continue indefinitely to carry the heavy burdens placed upon it and meet the increasing demands made by the people.

In passing may I say that I have supported, as I recall, every veto submitted by the President upon which a vote in the Senate has been taken. I sustained the President in his veto of the bonus bill. In my opinion, the first bonus veto message was a strong and impressive state paper. I was glad to support the President's position. I likewise supported his second veto of the so-called bonus bill. It gave me pleasure to support the President in his recommendation that the United States should become a member of the World Court; and, for that matter, I have supported most of the measures brought to the attention of the Senate during the past 4½ years. I have acted upon the conviction that the functions of the Executive and the legislative branch of the Government were different, and that it was the duty of Senators to oppose measures which they did not believe to be constitutional or just or for the best interests of the country.

My recollection is that a number of distinguished Democratic Senators, who have been very critical of some of their Democratic colleagues because they felt constrained to oppose the so-called court bill—which has been before the Senate for a number of months—failed to support the President in the veto messages to which I have referred and in his patriotic and statesmanlike position with respect to the World Court. I assume from the unmistakable attitude of Senators upon the floor that some of the Democratic Senators who have been, as I say, critical of myself and others who have opposed the so-called court bill, will, within a few moments, when the vote is taken, refuse to follow the President, and will vote to override his veto. I hope that I shall be pardoned for saying that tolerance is a virtue not only in matters of public concern but in all the relations of life.

It is fortunate that we cannot all agree; indeed, progress has often been measured by differences of opinion. We do not want standardization in the realm of thought or in the policies pursued by individuals, communities, and nations. Herbert Spencer speaks of heterogeneity and the differentiation that contributes to material, moral, and spiritual development.

I am glad now to support my President in the position which he has taken with respect to the measure under consideration. I believe the President to be right, and though I may be with a very small minority, I shall have the approval of my conscience. I shall, therefore, vote against the motion to override the veto. I believe the President's message presents valid reasons justifying his position. One not acquainted with the conditions of the Treasury, or of the fact that the Government has no funds except those obtained from taxation or by borrowings, would assume from some of the observations made during the debate that the Government should gladly reduce the interest rates, if not cancel obligations due it. The fact is that the Government is required to borrow not millions but hundreds of millions of dollars to meet its expenditures.

Through the sale of bonds to the investing public loans are being made by the Federal land banks at the lowest rate that has ever been made available to farmers generally in the United States.

The fact is that as a result of the efforts of the Government, through the Federal loan banks and the loan-bank commissioner, the farmers have saved in interest charges from 20 to 40 percent of the amount previously paid for interest on their loans. That there has been an improved condition in agriculture during the past 2 or 3 years is conceded by all, and in view of the benefits which have been derived by the farmers as a result of credit extended by the Government, it would seem that there ought not to be a demand that the Government borrow $30,000,000 more in order to reduce the interest charges upon loans made to farmers. My understanding is that the cost to the Treasury of the United States for the next 2 years, if the President's position shall not be sustained, will amount to approximately $53,000,000; and, of course, it will follow that other debtors of the Government will demand that their obligations shall be reduced.

When the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] was speaking a moment ago, I asked him if it were not true that farmers obtaining loans from banks or loan companies were not now paying interest in excess of that which they are paying to the Government. His answer, of course, was in the affirmative. It is conceded that the farmers who obtained loans from the Government discharged their obligations secured by liens upon their farms, and that such obligations bore a much higher rate of interest than they are now paying to the Government.

In my opinion, Mr. President, the veto message of the President has not been successfully met. I regard it as sound and justified under all the circumstances. I shall, therefore, as I have stated, vote to sustain his message.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I think we should have a quorum. Therefore I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I wish to read an extract from a short article I wrote for the New York Times on July 9, 1936:

If it be true that Congress loves the people or their votes, it is likewise true that Congress loves President Roosevelt for his vetoes.

President Roosevelt has vetoed more bills than any other Chief Executive except Mr. Cleveland. In Congress bravery is not required to vote for a bill, but when a Member of Congress votes against a bill he exhibits fortitude.

I have just completed a thorough examination of the various bills vetoed by President Roosevelt, and although I do not agree with his veto on the bonus bill or with his veto of the bill which proposed to restore the expense allowance of district and circuit judges to the sum of $10 per diem when holding court away from the place of their official residence, candid men must declare that the Franklin Roosevelt vetoes are courageous and in the interest of economy and retrenchment.

Regarding many, if not most, of the vetoed bills, had President Roosevelt approved them, he would have laid incalculable burdens upon the people; and in not a few instances he would have injected vitality into stale claims of doubtful merit against the Government; indeed, in some cases the bills as to which he withheld approval were not only wholly lacking in merit but called for enormous and wrongful drains upon the Treasury.

President Roosevelt should receive praise and approbation for the superb service to the people he has quietly rendered in protecting the public revenues by his vetoes.

HENRY F. ASHURST,
Senator from Arizona.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding? On a question of this kind the Constitution requires that the vote be taken by yeas and nays. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, which resulted—yeas 71, nays 19, as follows:

INTERSTATE COMPACT TO CONSERVE OIL AND GAS

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I am advised that there is on the Vice President's desk a message from the President. I ask unanimous consent that it may be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that under the previous unanimous-consent agreement, the Senate at this time is to proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar; but, of course, that unanimous-consent agreement may be superseded by another.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, if the matter is to take any time, of course I shall withdraw the request; but I think it is of sufficient importance to justify its consideration for a moment at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Chair will lay before the Senate the message from the President relating to an oil compact between certain States. The message will be read.

The legislative clerk read the message, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report of the Secretary of State enclosing a certified copy of the Interstate Compact to Conserve Oil and Gas, executed on May 10, 1937, by the Governors of the States of Oklahoma, Texas, Kansas, New Mexico, and Colorado, which has been deposited in the Department of State of the United States in accordance with the provision contained therein. The compact refers to the Interstate Compact to Conserve Oil and Gas executed at Dallas, Tex., on February 16, 1935, which received the consent of the Congress in Public Resolution No. 64, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 27, 1935. As the above-mentioned compact will expire on September 1, 1937, the present compact provides that the original compact shall continue in force for 2 years from that date. In a letter from the Secretary of the Interior dated July 8, 1937, enclosed with the report of the Secretary of State, the opinion is expressed that some good may be accomplished by this compact.

Accordingly, I hope that Congress will enact appropriate legislation giving its consent to this interstate compact as required by Article I, Section 10, of the Constitution of the United States.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 19, 1937.

[Enclosure: Report of the Secretary of State, dated July 14, 1937, with enclosures.]

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, under the Constitution two or more States have the right to make a compact, and when they enter into a compact the document must be sent to the office of the Secretary of State and thereafter transmitted to the Congress by the President for the consideration of the Congress, because the compact has no validity until approved by the Congress.

Some 2 years ago, I think, five States entered into a compact for the conservation and protection of oil. The compact was transmitted to the Congress in the regular channels and the Congress promptly approved it. The States concerned have been operating under the compact for 2 years.

Early last spring the same States, through their representatives, met at New Orleans and voted to extend the compact under which they have been operating for 2 years. The compart was not changed. Now, there is a request that the Congress consent to a continuation of the same compact for 2 years more from the date of the termination of the present compact. There is no change proposed in the compact. The States merely desire to have it extended for 2 more years, beginning September 1, 1937.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, it appears that the States among and between which the compact was negotiated and now exists were Oklahoma, Texas, Kansas, New Mexico, and Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is correct. Five States altogether have joined in the compact.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask the able Senator are the two Senators from each of the States agreeable to the extension?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I have not checked with the Senators, but the Governors and the legislatures of the five States are agreeable to the extension.

Mr. ASHURST. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. All that is asked is an extension or a continuation of the compact which is now in operation for another 2 years beginning at the date of the termination of the present compact, which will be September 1, 1937.

Out of order I ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution proposing to give the consent of the Congress to an extension of the existing compact for 2 years from September 1, 1937.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator does not request action at this time, does he?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. No.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, of course the request is out of order at this time, but I do not intend to raise that question. I will ask that the joint resolution be referred to the appropriate committee of the Senate in order that Senators may have an opportunity to become conversant with the purposes of the measure.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I have not asked unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution. I have merely asked unanimous consent to be permitted to introduce it.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection to that. I should object to immediate consideration.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Just one further word, if permission is granted for the introduction of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senator is permitted to introduce a joint resolution, and it will be properly referred.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, 2 years ago a message came to the respective Houses of Congress, and in the other body of the Congress a joint resolution was introduced promptly granting the consent of that body, as a part of the Congress, to the ratification of the proposed compact. A joint resolution was introduced in this body very shortly after the message was received, and at that time there was no objection. But in view of the statement made by the Senator from Oregon, I have no intention of pressing for immediate consideration.

I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 183) consenting to an interstate oil compact to conserve oil and gas; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 1392) to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I rise to ask unanimous consent to make a motion to recommit to the Committee on the Judiciary Senate bill 1392, to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, with all amendments thereto.

I might say by way of explanation that, after a very full and free hearing this morning, the Committee on the Judiciary directed me to make this request, with the understanding that it would be instructed to report a bill for the reform of the judiciary within 10 days, if the motion should prevail. I ask unanimous consent that I may be authorized to make the motion at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the pending business before the Senate, Senate bill 1392, to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions to report within 10 days. Is there objection?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the request of the Senator from Kentucky was that he be permitted now to make the motion. It was not, as I understood it, a motion to recommit with instructions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was merely attempting to facilitate the matter by getting unanimous consent.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think probably the request for permission to make the motion should be submitted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator desires to ask unanimous consent that the bill be recommitted with instructions, the Chair could not see why that could not be done.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I usually try to follow the Chair, but that cannot be done now. I am willing to grant unanimous consent that the motion may be made, but not that the bill may go back to the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky that he may make a motion to recommit the pending business to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions to return the bill within 10 days? The Chair hears none.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, pursuant to the instructions of the Committee on the Judiciary, as it imposed the duty upon me this morning, I move that Senate bill 1392, to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, with all amendments thereto, be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions to that committee to report a bill for the reform of the judiciary within 10 days from this date.

Mr. President, some days ago I prepared a speech to deliver on the bill itself in an effort to make my position clear. I have never had an opportunity to deliver it. I now ask unanimous consent that that speech be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. MCNARY. Just a moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky to have his contemplated speech printed in the RECORD as a part of his remarks? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The speech prepared by Mr. LOGAN is as follows:

It is true, as has been stated in the Senate during this debate, that a place of justice is a hallowed place. No one can well take issue with that statement. A court is a place where justice should be administered, and it is, therefore, not inappropriate to refer to a court as a holy place. I disagree with neither the statement nor the conclusions which have been reached during the course of this debate as to the respect which should be shown to the courts of our country or as to the honor which should be accorded them, but a court should not be worshiped as a fetish.

Courts are made up of men, and the men constituting any court do not lose their ideas of the problems of life or their theories of government, because they happen to become members of a court. When interpretations are to be made of constitutional or statutory provisions, it is impossible for a judge to wholly rid himself of the ideas which have become a part of him, and where there is latitude for reasonable grounds of disagreement as to a proper interpretation, he will naturally follow his own ideas. We know this is true, and because of this truth we have varying interpretations by the same court at different periods of the same constitutional and statutory provisions.

There is no book that has caused as much controversy in the world as the Holy Bible; there has been great diversity among learned men over the proper interpretation of nearly every important statement in that book. The good faith of those who disagree should not be questioned. It is human to err, and oftentimes the truth is found midway between the extremes.

If for any reason a court becomes the citadel of the privileged and not a reservoir for the good of all, he is unfaithful to his trust, who has the power to correct the evil and fails to exercise that power. If it is found that a court of justice, though it should be a holy place, is more partial in its decisions to the protection of the few than to the promotion of the happiness and general welfare of the many, the fountain of justice has become polluted, and he who has the power to purify the fountain and fails to do so, is not faithful to the trust which has been placed in him.

It is not necessary to question the integrity of any member of a court in order to reach the conclusion thus expressed. Many of the ancient philosophers surprised the world with their wisdom; they became so great among men that their names live even to this day. It is known now that much of their philosophy was shallow or untrue, but no one questions their honesty or the integrity of their purpose.

If it be true that through a mistaken interpretation of our Constitution or a tortured construction of its provisions, millions of toiling men and women on farm and in factory have been denied the good things of life, it is not the part of wisdom to advance the idea that nothing should be done, because the court sits in a holy place. It is entirely beside the question to say that the members of the court are men of wisdom and integrity. That may well be conceded, but if they bring to the world through their decisions sorrow and tears, when they should have brought joy and happiness, no one can well say, so it seems to me, that the court should be allowed to persist in an erroneous interpretation of our fundamental law.

In heated extemporaneous debates we make statements that were better left unsaid. In my opinion, it is unwise to charge that any court willfully misinterprets the Constitution. It is unwise for one to question the good faith and integrity of those who may hold different views in the Congress.

While I have severely criticised the report of the Judiciary Committee on the pending legislation, and I still believe that much criticism is justified because the report plainly shows the emotional side of the members who wrote it, even to the extent of the use of exclamation points to emphasize some of their expressions. I regard it as a paper calculated to arouse prejudice and hate, and as the same end could have been accomplished without doing so, with the same result accomplished, I think the violence of the language is without justification.

I believe in the political party to which I belong, and I know that the report of the committee has aided those who oppose the party, and for that reason, it aroused my resentment. It is generally regarded throughout the country as an attack upon the President and his policies, and, in my opinion, there is no justification for that belief, but I accept the word of those who write it that they did not so intend it.

We sometimes speak without mature deliberation, and often when we do so, we make statements that are unfair. Much feeling has been aroused over the discussion of the important proposal before us, and when we pause to consider that this feeling has often been aroused in the history of our Nation, there are no just grounds for criticising those who are on one side or the other.

It is my earnest and sincere wish that the Members of the United States Senate will calmly and judicially consider the matter in the light of the best reasoning which can be advanced on both sides, so that when the debate has developed every point that may be developed, there may be a vote. If I should be on the losing side when that vote is cast, I will be satisfied to know that I have done the best I could, seeking the light to the best of my ability. On the other hand, if my vote should be cast on the winning side, I will feel no cause for gloating. I do not believe there will be a filibuster, as I recognize the intelligence, the patriotism, and the good faith of those who hold views opposite to the views which I entertain. I shall regard those who vote opposite to my views on this side of the Chamber as my friends and fellow Democrats, the same as I regard them now. I believe there is no one who takes an opposite view to mine who has not played an important part in forming the great legislation that has been enacted during the past few years. Instead of believing that the Democratic Party should seek reprisals, it is my personal view that we will need the help of all of them in the solution of many other great questions, so I express the hope that I may have the privilege of serving many years with them in the Senate of the United States.

It has been said often that there is something wrong with the decisions of the Supreme Court. If that statement should have been made only by those friendly to the proposed legislation, there might be reasons to doubt the statement, but let us look to the leaders of the opposition and see what we find. The distinguished senior Senator from Montana believes that the decisions of the Supreme Court at times have been against the best interest of the great body of the people of the Nation, and I am quite sure that he believes that there are many things wrong with the decisions of the Supreme Court on many important questions. He believes that the Constitution should be so amended as to require a form of indirect recall of judicial opinions on constitutional questions. He believes in a modified form of the doctrine advocated by Theodore Roosevelt when he was last a candidate for President. He makes no concealment of his views, because he has proposed an amendment to the Constitution, carrying into effect his ideas.

The distinguished junior Senator from Nebraska must hold the opinion that the Supreme Court needs attention, as he has proposed a constitutional amendment providing that the Justices of the Supreme Court shall be retired automatically at the age of 75.

The distinguished junior Senator from Nevada proposed an amendment to the original bill increasing the number of Justices of the Supreme Court by two; and there is the able senior Senator from Wyoming, who believes that it should require more than a majority of the Supreme Court to declare an act of the Congress unconstitutional, and he has expressed that belief through a proposed constitutional amendment.

I believe that the distinguished senior Senator from Idaho has in the past held similar views, as shown by amendments proposed by him. Both the senior Senator from Montana and the senior Senator from California have been candidates for Vice President on platforms advocating the recall of judicial decisions by the people.

I listened with pleasure to learned men and women who appeared at the hearings held by the Judiciary Committee, and in the majority they stated readily that there was something wrong with the decisions of the Supreme Court. I doubt whether there are more than 3 members of the Judiciary Committee out of the 18 who fully believe that the Supreme Court should be left alone exactly as it is without any limitation upon its powers or any regulation as to its actions.

With such a diversity of views, is it any wonder that thinking men disagree, and is it not well that someone point out, if he can, what is wrong with the Supreme Court or its decisions? In the history of the Court and the Nation there should be found evidence which would lead one to an intelligent conclusion as to what is wrong with the Court. I propose to express my views and to point out, if I can, what has brought to us all of our difficulties.

As clearly indicated in a statement recently given to the press by former Justice Van Devanter, the Supreme Court has had many storms in its history. Some of them have been very violent and have threatened the very existence of the Court. Others have been less violent, but in the most stormy periods of our national life the Supreme Court has usually been the very center of the storm. Why is it that the troubled waters cannot be calmed? Why is it that for nearly 150 years passions and prejudices have been aroused by the action of the Supreme Court? There must be a reason.

The shades of Marshall and Madison still fight on. At one time one of these shades rides the whirlwind and beckons the Court to follow, and the Court does follow. At other times the other shade is found in the midst of the whirlwind, beckoning the Court to follow, and the Court does follow. Thus the warfare of the shades of Marshall and Madison, aided at times by the shades of Jefferson and Hamilton, trouble the waters and bring uncertainty to the Nation.

I used to think of the Constitution as the same in the past, the present, and the future; that the same language should mean the same thing, regardless of the membership of the Court or the conditions that prevail throughout the country. I have been willing always to recognize implied powers, but I thought the provisions should not, by implication, mean one thing in one age and another thing in another age. I have liked to think of a constitution in which a court found the same meaning at all times and under all circumstances. I once thought that when a question was once settled by a court, and that the principles announced were adhered to until they became fixed rules, that the doctrine of stare decisis should apply. I say that if I had been at liberty to interpret the Constitution as a court in the beginning, I perhaps should have thought about it differently from what I think today. It may have been my conclusion that if any change in the interpretation of the Constitution was to be brought about, it must be done through amendments to the Constitution. I believe there is at least one member of the Judiciary Committee, a valuable member, who actually adheres to these views now. If such had been the interpretation of the Constitution in the beginning and down to now, the controversy raging today would be as mild as a perfumed zephyr at early dawn from a garden of roses in the month of June. So, as this controversy, carried on with more heat than light, is one that divides men and arouses passions, the cause must be looked for, and perchance it will be found in the bosom of the Court itself.

There is no disrespect to the Court in my saying this. I expect to prove it. I want my children and my children's children for many generations to know that I had reasons for the position taken by me, and that I had right on my side in this controversy, and I am willing to play for the judgment of the future. I know how difficult it is amid the passions and the prejudices that have been aroused to make myself heard. I know that the whirlwind rages, and that the turmoil is great, but, once and for all, I want to show, if I can, that it is not the Congress, that it is not the Constitution, and that it is not the people of the Nation, great or small, that have unloosed the whirlwind. It is the Supreme Court. I do not mean the present members alone. I refer, of course, to the Court from its establishment by the Congress, pursuant to the Constitution, down to and including the present members of the Court.

Before pursuing that thought allow me to again repeat that I respect the judgment of those who disagree with me. I ask only that he who disagrees shall answer the argument which I hope to advance. "Mouse tracking" will be no answer. Bombast will constitute no argument. Impassioned eloquence will not do the trick. I want an answer, a calm, deliberate answer, pointing out the error in my premise, if there be error, disproving my reasoning, if it can be disproved, and showing the fallacy of my conclusion, if such may be done.

The one strange thing that strikes me is that while there is disagreement among the Democratic Members of the Senate, there is no disagreement among Republican Members. They are all on one side. It is strange that a subject dividing men the one from another in their reasoning processes has no effect upon our Republican brethren in the Senate. They will be here to be counted when the vote shall be taken, and they will constitute a solid block in opposition to the enactment of the legislation. My invitation to answer such argument as I may advance extends to them, however. If I am wrong, I want to know it before the vote is cast. If I have been unconsciously influenced in any way, I want some Member of the Senate to point out in what respect. Of course, I know that I have reached my conclusions through processes of my own reasoning. I know I have no desire to further my own ambition, as I have no further ambition. I know that benefits coming to my State have had no influence on me. I am conscious only that I am desirous of doing that which is right under the guidance of God, in whom I believe, and I am not ashamed of it.

Allowing to other men that which I claim for myself, I have given, and shall give, the reasons that impel me to the position which I have taken. I am deeply grieved because many of my lifelong friends in my own State are disappointed in me. They cannot understand my position, yet they are my friends, and I respect their opinions. I believe that nearly everyone of them, placed in my position, who should forget everything except his desire to do that which is right, and who had the same information that I have, would act as I expect to act. It is no pleasure, therefore, for one to have charges hurled at him day after day when he knows the charges are untrue. It is not pleasant to be the recipient of threats of death and destruction or to have the President of the United States held up as the greatest criminal of the age. These things grieve us all, and I for one, shall do the best I can to satisfy myself, and I hope that I may satisfy at least some of my friends as to my honesty of purpose and my desire to serve my country.

To find out what is wrong with the Supreme Court it is necessary to travel backward through the years and to find the very origin of the trouble. It is necessary to find out, if we can, why it is in this great Nation that we have a supreme judicial tribunal that apparently wanders in a wilderness without blazed trails when it comes to decisions on many important questions. I do not believe it is hard to find the cause of our troubles. I believe they are found in the records of the Court itself. It is necessary, therefore, as briefly as the matter may be encompassed, to point out the origin of that course of conduct which has led our Court into a wilderness, from which there is apparently no outlet.

Before Marshall the Supreme Court was of minor importance in the affairs of Government. It had not been called upon often, if at all, to interpret any provision of the Constitution. Few cases had come before it. A position on the Supreme Court was not esteemed very highly. It was not supposed to interfere seriously with the vocation or avocation of justice. Whether our Government was made up of a compact of States or whether it was an indestructible union was of no great consequence at the time. With the ascent of Marshall to the Chief Justiceship a great change took place. Political parties took form. The Constitution was the subject of more careful scrutiny. National power was sought, not only for the immediate future, but for the long years to come. The Court was confronted with the important question of whether the Constitution should be subject to interpretation that would meet changing conditions, or whether it should be subject to an interpretation which would remain the same throughout the years. Was it to be an elastic instrument, pulled this way and that, so it would cover new political and economical conditions as they should arise, or should it be defined as an instrument that meant what it said and no more? Marshall was called upon to answer that question, and he answered contrary I think to the way in which I may have answered it if I had been in Marshall's place but he answered it nevertheless, and what was his answer?

In McCulloch against Maryland, Marshall thus expressed his views the broad interpretation of the Constitution:

"This provision is made in a Constitution intended to endure for ages to come, and, consequently, to be adapted to the various crises of human affairs. To have prescribed the means by which government should in all future times execute its powers would have been to change entirely the character of the instrument and to give it the properties of a legal code. It would have been an unwise attempt to provide by immutable rules for exigencies, which, if foreseen at all, must have been seen dimly and can best be provided for as they occur."

Marshall undoubtedly had in view the English Constitution, which was not written at the time he wrote that famous paragraph. The Constitution, so he said, was to be adapted to the various crises of human affairs. He expressed as his opinion that it would have been unwise to attempt to provide by unchangeable rules for every crisis which might arise in the future. That was the latitudinarian construction.

The Constitution of England has been a matter of growth and development. The Parliament may modify it so that it may meet the exigencies of every condition which may arise. I need cite but a few paragraphs from expressions from the Supreme Court to show how completely the ideas of Marshall developed national power through the interpretation of the Constitution. The Court, speaking through Justice Story in 1816, used this language:

"The instrument was not intended to provide merely for the exigencies of a few years but was to endure through a long lapse of ages, the events of which were locked up in the inscrutable purposes of Providence. It could not be foreseen that new changes and modifications of power might be indispensable to effectuate the general objects of the charter; the restrictions and specifications which, at the present, might seem salutary, might in the end prove the overthrow of the system itself. Hence its powers are expressed in general terms, leaving to the Legislature from time to time to adopt its own means to effectuate legitimate objects and to mold and model the exercise of its powers as its own wisdom and the public interests should require."

Having molded the Constitution into an instrument of national power, a consideration of the opinions of Marshall and those who agreed with him establishes that he developed these particular important powers: The right of the Supreme Court to review both State and Federal legislation, as well as decisions of State courts; broadened the jurisdiction of the Federal Government by expanding, as far as possible, the interpretation of the powers vested in it, and by calling into existence the doctrine of implied powers; and whittled away the reserved powers of the States. We find the same ideas expressed in many opinions of the Supreme Court. In recent years they have generally been expressed in the dissenting opinions of the Court on important questions where national power had been invoked.

Let me say that the statement that the Nation has grown great without its having been necessary to interfere with the Supreme Court in any manner is not true without explanation. When the doctrines of Marshall have prevailed, with a broad construction of the Constitution as written, or the development of the doctrine of implied powers, the Nation has prospered, but, almost without an exception, calamity has followed the attempt to depart from the Marshallian construction. At the time of his death in 1835 Marshall, the expounder of the Constitution, had by interpretation so enlarged national power that every crisis had been met up to that time, and the authority was firmly established for meeting crises in the future.

Let us fix firmly in our minds that Marshall well established the principle that the Constitution should grow and expand as national problems should arise; that the interpretation should be broadened as occasions might arise. This, as I have said, was the approval of the common-law doctrine which we brought from England. If the Supreme Court had consistently adhered to the theories of Marshall, as it has generally done, we would be in no difficulties today, but trouble came in each instance when the Court departed from the principles of Marshall, who was looking toward the future and believing that the Constitution was an elastic instrument. It was because of Marshall's interpretation that the doctrine of stare decisis has been given little consideration by the Supreme Court. Its own opinions are not binding on it. The opinions of one age that meant a solution of new problems have never been adhered to in another age when different problems have arisen.

In the establishment of this doctrine Marshall was careful never to claim that the Supreme Court should bear the same relationship to the Constitution of the United States that the Parliament bears to the Constitution of England. The usurpation of legislative powers by the Supreme Court was a process of growth, and it was not until recent years that the Court assumed the functions that the Parliament of England has over the English Constitution. Insofar as the Supreme Court has assumed that power over the Constitution—that is, to expand and develop it without legislative sanction—it has usurped the powers of the Congress. I shall return to this point later.

If there is any Member of the Senate that desires to challenge this statement, I will overwhelm him with the proof taken from the opinions of the Court itself.

In the very essence of parliamentary sovereignty it does not differentiate between the law-making and the Constitution-making process, and ordinary legislation and the Constitution meet with equal sanction. Strictly speaking, therefore, there is no English Constitution, but when it had been established by the Supreme Court that the Constitution of the United States is a growing instrument, it largely destroyed the distinction between the Constitution and legislative pronouncements when such legislative pronouncements were made by the Supreme Court itself. In other words, if the Constitution is what the judges say it is, the judges have the power, as the Parliament of England has the power, to change the Constitution at will.

It is true there are very few provisions of the Constitution where there is latitude left to the Supreme Court to exercise its legislative functions, but it so happens that these few provisions are important in the life of the Nation. To mention only two of them—the commerce clause and the due-process clause—it may be well said that we have no written Constitution as to these two clauses. The meaning of these clauses depends upon the opinions of the Supreme Court, and that may mean one thing for a time and something entirely different at another time. What is known as the Bill of Rights in the Constitution may not be subject to modification, because the Court has no latitude to modify any of the provisions. Such is true of nearly all of the provisions.

Dean Alfange has recently had published a great book, the Supreme Court and the National Will. It won the Theodore Roosevelt memorial award. The judges making the award were Dr. Harold Willis Dodds, president of Princeton University; Dr. Harold Glenn Moulton, president of the Brookings Institution; Dr. Henry Seidel Canby, of the Saturday Review of Literature; Prof. Roscoe Pound, dean emeritus of Harvard Law School; and Col. Theodore Roosevelt, Jr. The action of this committee of judges insures one that he will be well repaid for his time if he reads this book. I quote from this work, beginning on page 25, as follows:

"Had the Constitution depended for its development only on formal amendments, the contention would be warranted that its framers drew up a rigid, almost a static instrument for the governance of the most dynamic society of modern times. Such a charge, however, cannot be justifiably made. It is true that the American Constitution is both written and 'rigid'; that it emanates 'from an authority superior to that of the legislature'; and that, therefore, it cannot be 'bent or twisted by the action of the legislature but stands stiff and solid, opposing a stubborn resistance to any majority who may desire to transgress or evade its provisions.' It is also true that revision by formal amendment has been surprisingly infrequent. But this is not entirely due to the cumbersomeness and complexity of the amending process; for, as the repeal of the eighteenth amendment has shown, that process can be greatly accelerated by strong popular sentiment. As a matter of fact, despite the relative infrequency of formal revision, the Constitution has proved an exceptionally flexible instrument of government due to a continue process of amendment by political usage and judicial interpretation."

Again I quote, from page 28, as follows:

"Moreover, the American Constitution has not developed only by means of formal amendments, or the accretions and modifications wrought by usage. More potent than either of these processes has been the method of amendment by judicial interpretation which is peculiar to the American system and implicit in the Constitution itself. The negative aspect of this method is the power of the courts to declare statutes void on grounds of unconstitutionality. Yet despite the importance it rapidly assumed, the question of judicial review was barely touched upon by the Philadelphia Convention, and this power, which has often been hotly contested and is today perhaps the most explosive issue before the American people, is nowhere expressly granted in the Constitution."

It was no lesser person than Abraham Lincoln who warned the people that when questions were irrevocably solved by the Supreme Court, "the people will have ceased to be their own rulers, having to that extent resigned their Government into the hands of that eminent tribunal."

At one time Justice Sutherland seemed to have great respect for Marshall's interpretation of the Constitution, when in his opinion of the Adkins case he held that the liberty of individuals must frequently yield to the common good and said that "any attempt to fix a rigid boundary would be unwise, as well as futile."

Endless quotations could be made from the opinions of the Court throughout its history, establishing more firmly the views of interpretation first announced by Marshall. Those who agree with Marshall's interpretation rest their position on a solid rock. The present Democratic administration, as I understand it, stands firmly on the interpretation of the Constitution as established by Marshall, that is, the expansion of national power as the exigencies of the occasion may arise, so that every crisis may be fully met. It is the position taken by those who favor the legislation now before us, it is my position, arrived at after the most serious consideration, that I have ever given any question.

I have prided myself that I was a Jeffersonian Democrat, without giving much consideration to the divergent views running through many of the opinions of the Supreme Court on the proper interpretation of the Constitution. But for Marshall and those who have agreed with him in the interpretation of the Supreme Court, I am well convinced that our Nation would have perished long ago.

In answer to those who say we are trying to destroy the Constitution, we say that we are trying to save the Constitution. In answer to those who say that the present legislation would have the effect of invading the jurisdiction of the judiciary by the executive and legislative branches of the Government, we answer that we have no such purpose. We seek only to make the Constitution the supreme law of the land and to return to that interpretation which has allowed our Nation to expand, until it is now perhaps the greatest nation on earth.

So let those who oppose us answer, if they can. We have just cause to complain when it is heralded over the country that we are seeking to destroy the Constitution.

Our distinguished opponents cannot and will not dispute that the position taken by the President of the United States as to the proper interpretation of the Constitution is that which has generally prevailed throughout the history of the Nation, and that the glorious past was made glorious, because the great statesmen who manned the ship of state in the dangerous waters of the beginning contended for the same interpretation of the Constitution for which we now contend. The present Supreme Court departed from the Constitution and the settled construction which made it a living, expanding instrument which afforded protection to the rights of the humblest, as well as the greatest. This, in brief, is one side of the question dividing the Congress today. What is the other side?

It has been expressed often to the effect that the Constitution means exactly what it says and nothing more, that it may not be expanded by interpretation, that if there are any implied powers at all, they are very few, that the rules written into it are immutable, that the Constitution is a strait jacket, and that all laws enacted by the Congress must be found in harmony with the strict language of the Constitution itself.

While Jefferson and Madison adopted this narrow view of the interpretation of the Constitution, and their followers were known as strict constructionists at that time, everyone familiar with the history of that era must well understand that national power continued to expand under Jefferson and his immediate successors in office. It has been suggested in the debate on the floor of the Senate that Jefferson made no effort to control the Court through the enlargement of its membership or otherwise. Jefferson had no cause to quarrel with the decisions of the Supreme Court, as his views were undergoing a change, and the Court was with him in the expansion of national power. Jefferson was troubled about it but finally he agreed to the expansions of power as did Madison, Monroe, and John Quincy Adams. They were not so much concerned with the expansion of national power as they were in protecting the reserved powers of the States. Marshall did not have an easy time in expanding national power. At times he almost wrecked the Union, but he persisted, and he did not quit, as some of the Members of the Congress insist that we should do. He fought on for the establishment of a great Nation under a Constitution, as we should fight, and within the Constitution, as we are fighting within the Constitution. Those, however, who hold to the views of Jefferson are not deserving of censure. They have 150 years of history behind them where outstanding men, great statesmen of their time, took the position which they are now assuming, along with some of the members of the Supreme Court, who refuse to adhere to the doctrines of the expansion of national power.

The Federalists had control of the Supreme Court from its organization until the death of Marshall in 1835. After 1800, there was no President of the same political faith as the Supreme Court until the death of Marshall, but through increasing the number of Justices, deaths, and resignations, Jackson and Van Buren had an opportunity to make over the Court. The Chief Justice and five new Justices were appointed, and such men as Daniel Webster and other great statesmen said when Taney became Chief Justice that the Constitution was "gone." They used the same language that our opponents are using today, but nothing in particular happened.

Some of the opinions previously rendered by Marshall were modified, but national power was not seriously interfered with until the Dred Scott decision. We find at that time that the Court went over to the opposite side and attempted to limit national power, exactly as some of the Justices of the Supreme Court desire to limit it today. Our opponents, therefore, have the Dred Scott decision on their side, and they may make the most of it. The narrow constructionist won a great victory, but the Nation paid dearly for it. The Dred Scott case almost destroyed the Nation, and I am one who believes that if increasing the number of Justices of the Supreme Court at that time to prevent the decision had been resorted to it may have been justified, because it would have prevented the most disastrous internecine strife that the world has ever seen. We in this day can hardly picture the horrors that covered our Nation as a result of the Dred Scott decision, caused by departure from the interpretation of the Constitution in a liberal manner so as to enlarge national power.

All of you who are familiar with history will know that the sainted Abraham Lincoln took the position that the Justices to be appointed during that dark period in our history should be such as would uphold what had been done to carry on the war; but, strange as it may seem, the Court departed from the Marshallian interpretation of the Constitution and went over to the strict constructionists. Grant tried to prevent it, but the Court was too speedy for him. He had two vacancies to fill, one caused by the enlargement of the Court by Congress and the other to fill a vacancy otherwise created. He sent the names in to the Senate. One was rejected, and the other died within less than a week after confirmation. Before he could get two more names to the Senate, or, rather, on the same day that he did so, the Supreme Court declared that the Legal Tender Acts were unconstitutional; and the consequences of that decision, if it had stood, would have been the utter bankruptcy of the Nation.

Departing from the broad construction of the Constitution brought on the War between the States, and departing from it a few years later in the Legal Tender case would have destroyed the Nation, but for the fact that President Grant succeeded in securing the confirmation of two Justices who held political and economical views such as his own. The first decision, therefore, strictly construing the Constitution was withdrawn, and in the second opinion the Court went back to the doctrine of Marshall, holding that enough could be found in the Constitution to meet any crisis which might arise.

As I have said, I used to think that emergencies should have no influence on the interpretation of the Constitution, but that was before I understood fully the history of the Supreme Court and its decisions. I quote from the case of Knox against Lee, in which the Legal Tender Acts were upheld, as follows:

"It would be difficult to overestimate the consequences which must follow our decision. They will affect the entire business of the country and take hold of the possible continued existence of the Government. If it be held by this Court that Congress has no constitutional power, under any circumstances, or in any emergency, to make Treasury notes a legal tender for the payment of all debts (a power confessedly possessed by every independent sovereignty other than the United States), the Government is without those means of self-preservation which, all must admit, may in certain contingencies become indispensable, even if they were not when the acts of Congress now called in question were enacted. It is also clear that if we hold the acts invalid as applicable to debts incurred, or transactions which have taken place since their enactment, our decision must cause throughout the country great business derangement, widespread distress, and the rankest injustice. * * * Men have bought and sold, borrowed and lent, and assumed every variety of obligations contemplating that payment might be made with such notes. Indeed, legal-tender Treasury notes have become the universal measure of values. If now, by our decision, it be established that these debts and obligations can be discharged only by gold coin; if contrary to the expectation of all parties to these contracts, legal-tender notes are rendered unavailable, the Government has become an instrument of the grossest injustice; all debtors are loaded with an obligation it was never contemplated they should assume; a large percentage is added to every debt, and such must become the demand for gold to satisfy contracts that ruinous sacrifices, general distress, and bankruptcy may be expected. These consequences are too obvious to admit of question."

The Supreme Court and its opinions for several years followed rather haltingly a liberal interpretation of the Constitution. It had during this period fairly well gone back to the interpretation of Marshall, but its opinions were not uniform. In the early seventies the question arose as to whether the Supreme Court should, by its own interpretation, expand the Constitution without legislative enactment, or whether Congress should be the judge of the facts and of what was necessary for the common good.

It may not be the first case, but it will do as well as any to illustrate my point. The State of Illinois had enacted a statute in 1871 for the regulation of grain elevators and had attempted to fix monopoly prices by legislation. The legislature had determined that the particular business was impressed with a public interest, and upon that theory proceeded to fix the rates which an elevator could charge.

When the matter reached the Supreme Court it had three important questions before it. One was whether the State legislature may fix prices to be charged by business in the nature of a monopoly. Another was whether such prices must be reasonable; and if so, whether the legislature or the Court should be the judge of their reasonableness. It was held specifically by the Supreme Court that the statutes simply extended the law to meet any developments of commercial progress, that it was within the power of the legislature to determine rates and prices, and that the Court was without such power. It was said in the course of the opinion, "For protection against abuses by legislatures, the people must resort to the polls, not to the courts."

Again, in the case of Mugler v. Kansas, the Court was called upon to determine whether it was a legislative or a judicial question when the State of Kansas had failed to compensate liquor manufacturers for the depreciation in the value of their property. The Court upheld the statute upon the ground that it was a matter within the power of the legislature. The Court said:

"If, therefore, a State deems absolute prohibition * * * to be necessary to the peace and security of society, the courts cannot, without usurping legislative functions, override the will of the people as thus expressed by their chosen representatives. They have nothing to do with the mere policy or legislation * * * it is not for the courts, upon their views as to what is best and safest for the community, to disregard the legislative determination of that question * * *. This conclusion is unavoidable, unless the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution takes from the States of the Union those powers of police that were reserved at the time the original Constitution was adopted. But this Court has declared, upon full consideration, that the fourteenth amendment had no such effect * * *. A prohibition simply upon the use of property for purposes that are declared by valid legislation to be injurious to the health, morals, or safety of the community cannot in any just sense be deemed a taking or an appropriation of property for the public benefit."

Economical forces brought about a change later in the opinions of the Court. The Minnesota rate case came on a few years later, when the Supreme Court departed from previous opinions, and, in effect, held that the Court itself and not the legislature must determine whether regulations were reasonable. That doctrine has been enlarged, until the Court does not leave it to the Congress to determine facts upon which legislation may be based, or what is for the general welfare, or what is interstate commerce. The Court without evidence has assumed that it has the power to determine as a court what is just or right in rate making, taxation, regulation of utilities, transportation, interstate commerce, and many other things.

The Supreme Court, in questions relating to certain important provisions of the Constitution, had finally come to the point where it agreed with Marshall that the Constitution could be expanded by judicial interpretation, and that the expansion required no assistance from legislative bodies; that the Court had become the parliament to determine when the common law should be changed.

The Court returned again to strict construction in the income-tax legislation. When the statute was invalidated, it brought confusion, and for many years the Government was greatly handicapped in adopting a fair system of taxation.

Instance after instance could be cited to show that the Supreme Court has brought upon the country many ills through its frequent departures from a broad interpretation of the Constitution, resulting in the enlargement of national power. The disagreement among the members of the Court as to whether the Marshallian or Madisonian interpretation is correct has become so acute that neither legislatures nor the Congress can intelligently make laws necessary to meet crises as they arise. Within the last few years at least four of the members of the Supreme Court have been implacable in their opinions against a broad and liberal interpretation of the Constitution for the expansion of national power. Sometimes a Justice may be convinced that a particular case fits on one side or the other of the line of interpretation. He is the fair-minded, unbiased judge, but when the Supreme Court reaches the point where, because of age or predilection, or for any other reason, some of the members refuse to be unbiased and national power suffers thereby to the common detriment of all of the people, something should be done, if any branch of the Government has the power to do it.

We cannot stand still. Society must move forward. National power must be expanded to meet the exigencies of all occasions, and if the Nation has a Supreme Court that will not allow this, then the Nation must begin to wither and die. We who favor this legislation have no purpose other than to preserve the Nation and to maintain the happiness of its people. We want to see justice flow down as the waters, and justice cannot flow from a court when some of the members deliberately refuse to be unbiased. They cannot be impeached, and although they may have passed the retirement age, they were appointed for life, and no one may compel them to retire.

So in such a crisis, what does the Constitution provide may be done? What was the meaning of the provisions of the Constitution relating to the Supreme Court? These things we will now examine.

I believe that no one is so simple as to believe that the Constitutional Convention intended when it provided for the establishment of a Supreme Court that it should be superior to the Congress and the Chief Executive. I do not believe that the Convention took such great pains to throw restrictions and limitations around the legislative and executive branches of the Government and left the Supreme Court without any check upon it at all except its own self-restraint. It is contrary to the spirit of the time, and it would require evidence which I am quite sure cannot be produced to convince me that the members of the Convention intended to vest absolute power in either branch of the Government. One will look in vain to the Constitution for even an intimation that the Supreme Court should have absolute control over Congress and the Chief Executive.

One will be impressed when he reads the Constitution with the particularity of the language used in defining the powers and duties of the legislative branch as well as the executive branch of the Government. It was decided by the Convention that the executive head should be one person, who should be denominated the President of the United States. He was required to be a native-born citizen, and his age and residence were defined and his duties named with particularity.

All these things are true as to the legislative branch. The number of Senators from each State was fixed and the number of Members of the House of Representatives was determined and the rule established whereby Congresses in the future should determine the membership of that body. The President was required to keep the Congress informed as to the state of the Nation and the Congress was expected to meet the problems which should arise through legislative enactment. When Congress should agree upon the form of legislation it had to be sent to the President, and he was given the power to veto it. His veto, however, need not be final, as two-thirds of the membership of each House of Congress was given the authority to pass the legislation over his veto. One was a check upon the other. The great check, however, against the acts of the Executive was that he could only hold his office for 4 years, and at the end of his term the voters were given the opportunity to refuse to continue him in office or to refuse to continue his policies.

The Members of the House of Representatives had to go to the people every 2 years and the Members of the Senate every 6 years. A barricade against absolute power was erected so far as the executive and legislative branches are concerned. They were not only answerable to each other but they were answerable to the people.

Perhaps the Convention did not believe that the Supreme Court had the power to declare acts of the Congress unconstitutional. Whether that be true or not, it is now conceded that the Court has such power, and that is proper, but when we concede that it is proper, we further concede that the Constitution may be distorted or its meaning perverted by the Court, and there is no check upon its acts by the people or by either of the other branches of the Government, if the contention of those who oppose us is true. If that contention be true, the Czar of Russia in the old days had no more power than the Supreme Court. If there is no remedy, it may completely change our form of Government through the interpretation of the Constitution, and the people are helpless, as the Supreme Court cannot be reached by the people.

It is unthinkable to me that such power may be vested in any branch of a government in a republic. If that be true, the Council of Ten in Venice had no more power than the nine who compose the membership of our Supreme Court. It is foolish to say that members of the Court may be impeached because of decisions rendered. No one can explore the mind of any Justice to determine whether his actions were sincere or otherwise. It is fortunate that many of the provisions of the Constitution are so clear that the provisions cannot be distorted, but tyrants in the lust for power have broken rules as clearly stated as those found in the Constitution for the protection of the liberties of the people.

We may as well assume, if we accept that truth, that we have no written Constitution, or if we have one, it is what the judges say it is. If it is what the judges say it is, then the Congress and the Chief Executive have a tribunal with absolute power, able to destroy anything which may be done by either of these branches of government. These statements do not come from a vivid imagination. They are based on solid and substantial facts. Any body having supreme and absolute power in a republic, uncontrolled by the people or their representatives, is something that cannot be imagined by anyone unless he believes that for the protection of property and property rights it is necessary to have such a tribunal with supreme power over the life, liberties, and property of all the people.

It simply is not true that the fathers of this Republic, who won our freedom and independence after a long and bloody war, sought to place the people of the Nation under the absolute control of a small group of men. There can be no remedy by impeachment, there can be no remedy by removal, there can be no changing of the opinions of the Court after they have been rendered, and we have a body then erected by the Constitution at liberty to do as it pleases, whether it be composed of honest and upright men or whether it be composed of tyrants; whether it be composed of men in possession of all their faculties, or whether it be composed of men with their faces turned to the sunset with their light of reason growing dim.

Absolute power does not exist in a republic. Since, in my judgment, it has been clearly shown that there is something wrong with the opinions of the Supreme Court, and that by reason of conflicting views within the body itself there is something wrong with the Court, and as the Constitution was made for the purpose of preserving the life of the Nation, it must have been believed by those who framed it that it possessed every necessary power to meet every crisis, so that the life of the Nation might go on. If it fails to function from any cause, what is the duty of those who have sworn to uphold the Constitution and defend it? The answer is obvious. It is their duty to find a remedy within the Constitution, if it can be found there.

Those who say that we ought to take a chance by amending the Constitution are but reiterating arguments of the forgotten past. Where the Constitution vests in the Congress full and complete power to do a particular thing it is the height of folly for anyone to suggest that the Constitution should be now amended so that Congress would have conferred upon it the power to do that which it has always had the power to do. When we go to the source of the power of the Congress we find that the Supreme Court, as to the number of members, is a creature of Congress and has always been so treated. Congress may do what it pleases with the membership so far as numbers are concerned. The Congress may do what it pleases as to the appellate jurisdiction of the Court. The Congress may do what it pleases as to the salaries which shall be paid and the appropriations which shall be made for the maintenance of the Court. The Court, therefore, largely is a creature of Congress, set up as an advisor and not as a dictator.

There is a great cry going up against dictators and dictatorships. We who support this legislation are fighting for the maintenance of the freedom of the people of the Nation and against dictatorship. The Supreme Court now admittedly is a dictator, so far as economical and political principles are concerned, as they relate to the most vital questions in the Nation. This being true, then, what is the duty of Congress to avoid such dictatorship or to destroy it, if it exists?

The Justices may not be impeached, they may not be removed, they may not be recalled by the people, but the number of Justices which shall constitute this great body is subject to the will of Congress, and there is no other means which may be constitutionally employed to avoid the usurpation of power by the Supreme Court or to destroy a dictatorship which may be the Court itself. Louis XIV of France said, "I am the state." The Supreme Court of the United States has said, "We are the Constitution. We will make it or unmake it, controlled only by our self-restraint."

Some of the members of the Court have lost their self-restraint and seem bent upon the restrictions of national power. I agree with some of the great statesmen of the Nation, as well as some of the great Justices of the Court, that the life of the Nation is something even higher than the Constitution, and that there must be found in the Constitution that which is necessary to perpetuate the Nation and to maintain the integrity of our institutions. But it is said that the independence of the Court will be destroyed by legislation such as this. That is but a snare to catch rabbits. No one seeks to destroy the independence of the Court, unless by independence it is meant absolute power. The independence of the Court means no more than the Justices shall be free from any outside influence in reaching conclusions on the questions presented to them.

It is strange that after our long history a President has arisen who some Members of the Senate believe should not be allowed to appoint Justices of the Supreme Court because it would destroy the independence of the Court. The number of Justices is a matter for Congress to determine, and I cannot see why an appointment by Franklin D. Roosevelt would destroy the independent thinking of the Justices appointed any more than the independence of Justices appointed by other Presidents has been destroyed.

The letter of Theodore Roosevelt while he was President to Henry Cabot Lodge, written in 1902, expresses the views of every person who has ever appointed a Justice. The then President Roosevelt did not think that the man whose appointment was under consideration should be appointed unless he was a party man, constantly keeping in mind his adherence to the principles and policies under which his Nation has been built, and that he should also keep in mind his relations with his fellow statesmen, who in other branches of the Government were striving, in cooperation with him, to advance the ends of government. That was the opinion of President Lincoln, and that was the opinion of President Taft, and that has been the opinion of every President who has ever named Justices to the Supreme Court.

It appears that Mr. Lodge made a notation on this letter to the effect that a Justice should be a constitutional lawyer who believed in great party principles. So when the attempt is made to convince the public that President Roosevelt now proposes to pack the Court, it may be well denominated as a snare and a delusion. That he would seek to select Justices who are in sympathy with those principles of government which will promote happiness to the greatest number goes without saying. He would be false to his oath of office if he did less.

What are the provisions of the bill under consideration, stripped of all surplusage and freed from the wrappings of false arguments advanced by those who oppose it? The bill provides for the long suffering of the Nation in the hands of Justices who may be obsessed with the idea that the Court is greater than other branches of the Government. It is not proposed that they be disturbed even until they have reached that age when, according to the laws of nature, nine out of every ten men are incapacitated for such service. Nothing can be done until a Justice reaches the age of 75 years. At that time he has had 5 years in which he may have voluntarily retired. Even when he has reached that age, he is not compelled to retire under the provision of the proposed legislation. No one is appointed to take his place, and no one is appointed to be a wet nurse to him. The membership of the Court is automatically increased when a Justice reaches the age of 75 years, but as a further protection against even the temptation to pack the Court, it is provided that no more than one increase shall be made in any one calendar year. No one will be appointed for a particular Judge, but he is appointed in his own right, because the number of Justices has been increased.

No one can misunderstand that simple language, and that is all that the bill does to the Supreme Court. It is a plan for the future, and when the occasion arises, if ever, a new Justice may be appointed under such circumstances, because the membership of the Court has been increased, but when the circumstances have passed, and there are no Justices who have reached that ripe old age, the Court is automatically reduced to the permanent membership of nine.

All the tumult and the shouting brought about by the Liberty League is over this simple provision, which, but for the efforts of entrenched power, at some other time would perhaps pass the Senate even without the formality of a roll call.

The Liberty League lost the election last November, but it appears that it is in a fair way to win it in the Congress. We cannot close our eyes to the fact that the defeat of this legislation means the defeat of all that we have fought for since Roosevelt became President. It means the destruction of the legislation that has been wrought out by those who believe in progressive measures who have been selected as the servants of the people.

Let us look a little into the provisions of the inferior Federal courts. There appears to be little objection to the appointment of an additional judge for each judge who has reached the age of 70. That means an increase of a few judges throughout the Nation, but the total number may not exceed 20, for the bill so provides. The objection which has been offered, and which affords some amusement to those who are familiar with the question, is that the bill would concentrate Federal power at Washington. The bill does provide that district and circuit judges may be assigned by the Chief Justice—not by the President—to the place or places in the Nation where their services are most needed. There are districts greatly congested, and there are other districts where the judge has little to do. Is it unfair to confer upon the Chief Justice the power to transfer a judge from one district to another, so that justice may more speedily prevail? That is all the provisions as to the inferior Federal courts.

And then great fear has been expressed about a proctor, not to be appointed by the President but by the Supreme Court. His duties are to check up on the dockets of the circuit and district courts and give detailed information to the Chief Justice, so that he may intelligently assign district and circuit judges. That is all there is to that provision.

The other provision in the bill relates to procedure in injunction suits and has no purpose other than to speed justice where it is now slow.

I have said, and I repeat, that the defeat of this legislation by the Congress means the defeat of the New Deal. The people believe in the New Deal, and they expect us to carry out such principles as will put it into effect, if we may do so within the limits of the Constitution. In this proposal we are within the limits of the Constitution. We are seeking to write into the statutes the will of the people in a perfectly constitutional way. I am not particular as to how the ends may be accomplished. I have at all times been ready to agree, so far as I am concerned, on any compromise that would tend to achieve the end sought. I am still willing to be convinced that some reasonable compromise is better than the provisions of the bill. Perhaps the Members of the Senate and the House might reach an agreement of some kind, but the New Deal cannot compromise with the Liberty League.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN].

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Kentucky whether the agreement should not be stated somewhat differently from the way it has been stated, namely, that the report hereafter to be made, which is contemplated by reference in his statement, is not to be a report on a bill to reform the judiciary, but a bill for reform of judicial procedure.

Mr. LOGAN. I wrote down the suggestion this morning and submitted it to the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] to know whether that was the proper form, and the writing which I submitted to him was that Senate bill 1392, with all amendments, should be re-referred to the Judiciary Committee with instructions to report a bill relating to judicial reform.

Mr. AUSTIN. Exactly.

Mr. LOGAN. Within 10 days. That is the exact language that was agreed upon, and that is the motion which I undertook to make.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I desire to know what the judicial reform refers to. Does it refer to the Supreme Court or to the inferior courts?

Mr. LOGAN. I may say to the Senator from California that the Committee on the Judiciary this morning had an understanding that we did not think it was proper to embrace in the motion what it should refer to. The senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] wrote out what we had before us in the Committee on the Judiciary. It was a statement of what had been said, I believe, by the leader and some others, and that did not refer to the Supreme Court. That was not to be considered at all, I may say.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The Supreme Court is out of the way?

Mr. LOGAN. The Supreme Court is out of the way.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Glory be to God! [Applause.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN].

Mr. McNARY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GILLETTE (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE (when Mr. NORRIS' name was called). The senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is absent from the Senate on account of illness. If present and at liberty to vote, he would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce the absence of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] because of illness in his family.

Mr. ASHURST. I rise to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. HAYDEN] on account of illness. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. BARKLEY. I announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I make no announcement as to his position.

The result was announced—yeas 70, nays 20, as follows:

So Mr. LOGAN's motion to recommit to the Committee on the Judiciary the bill (S. 1392) to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government was agreed to.

NOTICE OF MEETING OF COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if I am in order, I wish to make an observation.

The Committee on the Judiciary this morning instructed the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], who is in charge of Senate bill 1392, to make the motion he made. The Senate, as it had a right to do, has just ordered the bill returned to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructons to report within 10 days.

I cannot escape the conviction that I ought to give the Senate and the country the assurance that the Committee on the Judiciary will be assembled on Monday morning at 10:30 a. m., and will with zeal and fidelity attempt to follow the wishes of the Senate and bring in within 10 days such a bill as the Senate desires.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, has it been agreed that we are not to meet until Monday?

Mr. ASHURST. If any Senator is of opinion that we should meet before Monday, the chairman will call a meeting for tomorrow.

Mr. BORAH. The work we have ahead of us which must be accomplished within 10 days will require that we get to work immediately.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is, as usual, correct. Therefore I now give notice that the Committee on the Judiciary will meet tomorrow at 10:30 a. m., at its regular meeting place in the Capitol Building, to try to carry out the order of the Senate.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Am I to understand from the statement of the Senator from Arizona, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, that in the deliberations which the committee is to hold beginning tomorrow morning no consideration is to be given to adding judges to the Supreme Court or to any court on any other basis than that of need in order to perform the functions of the court?

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Nebraska is correct in his understanding of the situation.

THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am sure it will be a matter of great relief to the Senate if I say that I surrender whatever right I had to the floor. The action taken this afternoon makes it quite unnecessary to produce any further argument. The Court has been saved. Therefore, with the consent of the Chair, I yield all my parliamentary rights.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York has yielded the floor. The clerk will state the first bill in order on the calendar.

LIMITATION OF DEBATE ON APPROPRIATION BILLS

The first business on the calendar was the resolution (S. Res. 8) limiting debate on general appropriation bills.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask that the resolution be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

Mr. GLASS subsequently said: Mr. President, by reason of my inattention, I did not note when the first order of business on the calendar was reached and passed over. It is a resolution proposing a limitation of debate on appropriation bills. The resolution was presented by me and unanimously reported by the Committee on Rules. I think, however, there is no possibility of securing its consideration at this session, and I therefore ask to have the resolution recommitted to the Committee on Rules.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

OATH ON INCOME-TAX RETURNS

The bill (S. 2473) to provide that individual income-tax returns may be made without the formality of an oath, and for other purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. I also ask that that bill go over.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Tennessee if he has investigated that bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I have investigated the bill. It is to repeal a bill the passage of which, as I recall, was secured by me.

Mr. WALSH. The bill is simply for the purpose of removing the necessity of an oath being attached by a taxpayer to his income-tax return. The bill is recommended by the Treasury Department. I wish the Senator would withdraw his objection.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the bill go over for the present, and I will examine into it further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. WALSH subsequently said: Mr. President, when Calendar No. 747, being Senate bill 2473, relating to individual income-tax returns, was called, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] objected. Since that time I have conferred with the Senator from Tennessee, and I think he is now disposed to withhold his objection. I ask that the bill be considered at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2473) to provide that individual income-tax returns may be made without the formality of an oath, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments, on page 1, line 3, after the words "Revenue Act of", to strike out "1934" and insert "1936"; on page 2, line 15, after the words "correct as to", to strike out the word "any" and insert the word "every"; on page 2, line 17, to strike out "1934 ed.", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 51 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1936 is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 51. Individual returns.

"(a) Requirement: The following individuals shall each make a return, which shall contain or be verified by a written declaration that it is made under the penalties of perjury, stating specifically the items of his gross income and the deductions and credits allowed under this title and such other information for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this title as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may by regulations prescribe—

"(1) Every individual having a net income for the taxable year of $1,000 or over, if single, or if married and not living with husband or wife;

"(2) Every individual having a net income for the taxable year of $2,500 or over, if married and living with husband or wife; and

"(3) Every individual having a gross income for the taxable year of $5,000 or over, regardless of the amount of his net income.

"Whoever under such written declaration shall willfully and contrary to such declaration make and subscribe a return under this section which he does not believe to be true and correct as to every material matter, shall be subject to the penalties prescribed for perjury as provided in section 125 of the Criminal Code (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 18, sec. 231).

"The fact that an individual's name is signed to a filed return shall be prima-facie evidence for all purposes that the return was actually signed by such person."

SEC. 2. The provisions of this act shall be effective and apply only to returns filed for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1937.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. I ask that the clerk be authorized to renumber the sections.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in connection with the bill just passed I ask that there be printed in the RECORD a short editorial.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WALSH'S TAX PLAN SOUND

The bill introduced by Senator WALSH, of Massachusetts, to permit the filing of individual Federal income-tax returns without the formality of an oath is a move in the right direction.

Such a change in both Federal and State laws would be a convenience, as well as a money saver, to literally millions of taxpayers.

According to Senator WALSH, the Treasury Department is contemplating presentation to Congress of a similar bill covering returns filed by employers and employees under the social-security law.

The Walsh bill provides that the individual taxpayer who knowingly makes a false statement in his return will be guilty of perjury and may be prosecuted for perjury.

The system he proposes has been used in connection with individual tax returns in Massachusetts for a number of years. It is just as effective as requiring each taxpayer to take an oath to the correctness of his return. And it saves him the trouble and expense of having his signature witnessed by a notary public.

It should make no difference to the Government whether an individual swears that his tax return is correct as long as he can be prosecuted if he knowingly makes a false statement. All the Government is interested in is getting a correct return or being able to prosecute those who file false returns.

Perjury is a sort of manufactured crime, anyway. A false statement made knowingly, even though it is not sworn to, can be made perjury just as much as such a statement that is given under oath.

In view of the enormous increase in tax returns, etc., which are being required from citizens, government should make the filing of these returns as easy and as inexpensive as possible.

ASSIGNMENT OF NAVAL OFFICERS TO DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

The bill (S. 2482) to provide for the assignment of officers of the Navy for duty under the Department of Commerce and appointment to positions therein, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BYRD. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to make a brief statement in regard to Senate bill 2482. There is a vacancy in the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation of the Department of Commerce. The administration finds that it is impracticable to secure for that position a competent and able person who has not heretofore been employed by an owner or operator of an American vessel. It is important that the position be held by someone unobligated and free from any pressure of any kind by any steamship company. The importance of this position can be understood from what the Department of Commerce say about this position. The committee was informed that the Director of the Bureau had resigned and that after a careful canvass of available eligibles it has been decided that for the time being, at least, the position should be filled by a man who had the education, training, and broad experience of a naval officer.

The first bill that came before our committee sought to give to the President unrestricted authority to appoint active and retired naval and Army officers to any position in the Federal Government. The committee rejected that suggestion unanimously.

The next proposal was that the President be given authority to name active or retired naval officers to any position in the Department of Commerce. The committee rejected that proposal. The committee was of the opinion, and it is now of the opinion, that the President should be permitted to name a naval officer to this most important position in the Department of Commerce, but that general authority for the President to name military offices to civilian positions should not be approved. It is a position that has been made important because of an unprecedented amount of legislation that has recently been enacted with regard to the functions of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation. The Bureau's authority and responsibilities have been extended requiring the examination and approval by the Bureau of plans for all construction, remodeling, and mechanically equipping of vessels, with the definite objective of reducing the hazards to life and property at sea. The next few years will be a crucial period in the Bureau, for it must put these new laws into effect, coordinate their provisions, and reorganize the entire personnel in the light of the increased duties and new procedure.

In view of the importance of this position, it seems to me that Congress ought to permit the President, if he considers a naval officer to be best suited and best fitted to hold this position, to select such officer. I hope there will be no objection made to the consideration of the bill and to the request of the administration.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I am very sorry, but I will have to object for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

CONSTRUCTION OF MARINE HOSPITAL IN FLORIDA

The bill (H. R. 4716) authorizing the construction and equipment of a marine hospital in the State of Florida, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I notice this bill proposes to authorize a large appropriation, amounting to $1,500,000. I inquire if the project has been recommended by the Department, and what is the necessity for such a large appropriation?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the bill was recommended by the Department, and, of course, has passed the House of Representatives.

Mr. KING. Is an appropriation of $1,500,000 for the purchase of ground?

Mr. PEPPER. It is for the construction of a marine hospital, such an institution being urgently needed in the State of Florida. The hospital proposed to be constructed is to be located at such place as the Federal Board of Hospitalization may select in that State. As I have said, the bill has been favorably recommended by the Department and has already passed the other House.

Mr. KING. Is there to be a marine hospital in every State bordering upon the Atlantic and the Gulf and the Pacific?

Mr. PEPPER. I suppose marine hospitals will be located at such places as they may be needed. It has been determined that at the present time there should be such a hospital located in Florida. In view of the consideration given to the matter by the other House and by the Senate Commerce Committee, and in view of the favorable recommendation of the Department, I hope the Senator from Utah will not object to the passage of the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it expected that an appropriation will be made for the purposes of the bill during the present year?

Mr. PEPPER. I do not know when the project will be consummated. I suppose the appropriation will come along in due course.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to look into this bill a little further, and probably at the next call of the calendar I will have no objection to its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection, the bill will be passed over.

ENLISTMENTS IN THE COAST GUARD

The bill (S. 2335) to amend the laws relating to enlistments in the Coast Guard, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, there is on the calendar a House bill similar to the Senate bill, the House bill being No. 6916, Order of Business 923. I ask unanimous consent that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill and be considered at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6916) to amend the laws relating to enlistments in the Coast Guard, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act of May 26, 1906, as amended (34 Stat. 200; U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 14, sec. 35), is hereby further amended to read as follows:

"(a) That all persons composing the enlisted force of the Coast Guard shall be enlisted for a term not to exceed 3 years, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall prepare regulations governing such enlistments and for the general government of the service: Provided, That an enlistment in the Coast Guard shall not be regarded as complete until the enlisted man concerned shall have served any time, in excess of 1 day, lost on account of unauthorized absence from duty, or injury, sickness, or disease, resulting from his own intemperate use of drugs or alcoholic liquors, or other misconduct, or while in confinement under sentence, or while awaiting trial and disposition of his case if the trial results in conviction.

"(b) The term of enlistment of any enlisted man in the Coast Guard may, by his voluntary written agreement, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, be extended for a period of 1, 2, or 3 full years from the date of expiration of the then existing term of enlistment, and subsequent to said date an enlisted man who extends his term of enlistment as herein authorized shall be entitled to and shall receive the same pay and allowances in all respects as though regularly discharged and reenlisted immediately upon expiration of his term of enlistment. No such extension shall operate to deprive the enlisted man concerned, upon discharge at the termination thereof, of any right, privilege, or benefit to which he would have been entitled if his term of enlistment had not been so extended.

"(c) The commanding officer of any vessel of the Coast Guard is authorized, in his discretion, to detain an enlisted man beyond the term of his enlistment until the first arrival of the vessel at its permanent station, or at a port in a State of the United States or in the District of Columbia, unless, in his opinion, the detention of such person for a further period is essential to the public interests, in which case he may detain him for a further period, not exceeding 30 days, after arrival at such station or port. Any person so detained shall be subject in all respects to the laws and regulations for the government of the Coast Guard until his discharge therefrom."

SEC. 2. The act entitled "An act extending the benefits of the marine hospitals to the keepers and crews of lifesaving stations", approved August 4, 1894, as amended (28 Stat. 229; U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 24, sec. 8), is hereby further amended to read as follows:

"(a) Under such regulations as may be prescribed by the President, upon the recommendation of the Surgeon General with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, all commissioned officers, chief warrant officers, warrant officers, cadets, and enlisted men of the Coast Guard, including those on shore duty and those on detached duty, whether on active duty or retired, shall be entitled to medical, surgical, and dental treatment and hospitalization by the Public Health Service; and the dependent members of families of officers and enlisted men of the Coast Guard shall be furnished medical advice and out-patient treatment by the Public Health Service at its first-, second-, and third-class relief stations, and such dependent members of families shall be furnished hospitalization at marine hospitals, if suitable accommodations are available, at a per-diem cost to the officer or enlisted man concerned equivalent to the uniform per-diem reimbursement rate for Government hospitals as approved by the President for each fiscal year. Collections of the Public Health Service for the hospitalization of such dependent members of families shall be credited to the applicable appropriation for the operation of marine hospitals and relief stations.

"(b) The act entitled 'An act to extend medical and hospital relief to retired officers and retired enlisted men of the United States Coast Guard', approved May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 603; U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 14, sec. 179), is hereby repealed."

SEC. 3. Subdivision "Seventh" of section 4 of the act entitled "An act to establish a Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, and to provide for a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States", approved June 29, 1906, as amended (34 Stat. 598; U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 8, sec. 368), is hereby further amended by inserting in line 4 thereof after the words "Naval Auxiliary Service" the words "or the Coast Guard".

SEC. 4. Section 12 of the act entitled, "An act to provide more effectively for the national defense by increasing the efficiency of the Air Corps of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes", approved July 2, 1926 (44 Stat. 789; U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 10, sec. 1429), is hereby amended by inserting in line 8 thereof after the words "United States Navy" the words "or with the United States Coast Guard".

SEC. 5. Section 2 of the act of June 23, 1906, as amended (34 Stat. 452; U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 14, sec. 15), is hereby further amended by inserting the following sentence at the end thereof: "A cadet, upon admission to the Coast Guard Academy, shall be credited with the sum of $250 to cover the cost of his initial clothing and equipment issued, to be deducted subsequently from his pay in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury."

SEC. 6. Section 2 of the Legislative, Executive, and Judicial Appropriation Act, approved July 31, 1894, as amended (28 Stat. 205; U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 5, sec. 62), is hereby further amended by inserting in line 12 thereof, following the word "Navy", the words "or the Coast Guard".

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the bill now before the Senate and the next bill on the calendar—being Senate bill 2336—which is identical with a House bill now on the calendar—were recommended by the Treasury Department. They are intended merely to place the Coast Guard in exactly the same footing as is the Navy. The bills came to us from the Treasury Department with the request that they be passed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New York whether, in view of the disparity in service as between those engaged in the Navy, who have to go to war, and visit into foreign ports, and the Coast Guard, whose duties, except perhaps in time of war, are limited to patroling the coast, the Coast Guard should be placed in the same category?

Mr. COPELAND. The Coast Guard are always at war. They patrol our coast. I know from personal observation on the Atlantic south of New York city how many lives have been saved by the Coast Guard and how they take their lives in their hands when they go out into the surf and storm. There can be no question that in peacetime the work which the Coast Guard is called upon to perform is infinitely greater than that required of the Navy.

Further than that, in the case of smuggling and bootlegging, the Coast Guard are constantly being called upon by the Government to give protection to the people and to protect the Nation's income.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator has in mind, also, that the Coast Guard render an invaluable service in patrolling the ice regions of the north Atlantic Ocean. They are out there during the season of melting ice, making observations and reports, thus insuring safety in transiting the sea, one of the most valuable services the Coast Guard render.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill (S. 2335) to amend the laws relating to enlistments in the Coast Guard, and for other purposes, will be indefinitely postponed.

PAY ADJUSTMENT OF CERTAIN COAST GUARD OFFICERS

The bill (S. 2336) to adjust the pay of certain Coast Guard officers on the retired list who were retired because of physical disability originating in line of duty in time of war, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, Calendar No. 925, being House bill 7611, relates to the same subject and is identical with the Senate bill. I ask that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill and that it be considered at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 7611) to adjust the pay of certain Coast Guard officers on the retired list who were retired because of physical disability originating in line of duty in time of war, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of section 1, as amended, of the act of June 21, 1930 (46 Stat. 793, ch. 563), any officer of the Coast Guard who has been retired since September 3, 1921, but prior to March 4, 1925, by reason of physical disability which originated in line of duty at any time between April 6, 1917, and March 3, 1921, inclusive, while holding higher temporary rank in the Coast Guard, shall receive from the date of the approval of this act the pay of the rank he holds on the retired list.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 2336 will be indefinitely postponed.

REGULATIONS OF BUREAU OF MARINE INSPECTION AND NAVIGATION

The bill (H. R. 7017) to amend section 4450 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by the act of May 27, 1936 (49 Stat. 1380, 1383; U. S. C. 1934 ed., title 46, sec. 239), was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York give us some information concerning the bill?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the bill was sent to us by the Department of Commerce. It provides in part that if the Director of Marine Inspection and Navigation shall find, after investigation, that a licensed officer has violated any of the provisions of the act or regulations thereunder, he shall in a written order suspend or revoke such officer's certificate. It is one of the bills which is believed by the Committee on Commerce to make for safety at sea. It has the recommendation of the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. McKELLAR. It does not require an appropraition?

Mr. COPELAND. Not at all.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4450 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the act of May 27, 1936 (49 Stat. 1380, 1383; U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 46, sec. 239), is amended by inserting in the third sentence of paragraph (g) of said section the words "suspended or", after the word "is" and before the word "revoked", so that the said paragraph (g) of said section, when amended, shall read as follows:

"(g) In any investigation of acts of incompetency or misconduct or of any act in violation of the provisions of this title, or of any of the regulations issued thereunder, committed by any licensed officer or any holder of a certificate of service, the person whose conduct is under investigation shall be given reasonable notice of the time, place, and subject of such investigation and an opportunity to be heard in his own defense. The whole record of the testimony received by the board conducting such investigation and the findings and recommendations of such board shall be forwarded to the Director of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, and if that officer shall find that such licensed officer or holder of certificate of service is incompetent or has been guilty of misbehavior, negligence, or unskillfulness, or has endangered life, or has willfully violated any of the provisions of this title or any of the regulations issued thereunder, he shall, in a written order reciting said findings, suspend or revoke the license or certificate of service of such officer or holder of such certificate. The person whose license or certificate of service is suspended or revoked may, within 30 days, appeal from the order of the said Director to the Secretary of Commerce. On such appeal the appellant shall be allowed to be represented by counsel. The Secretary of Commerce may alter or modify any finding of the board which conducted the investigation or of the Director of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, but the decision of the Secretary of Commerce shall be based solely on the testimony received by the said board and shall recite the findings of fact on which it is based."

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized to convey to the Commissioners of the Palisades Interstate Park, for use for public-park purposes, certain portions of the Stony Point Light Station Reservation, State of New York, including certain appurtenant structures, which are not required to be retained for lighthouse purposes. PYRAMID LAKE INDIAN RESERVATION, NEV.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 840) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for certain lands to certain settlers in the Pyramid Lake Indian Reservation, Nev., which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

TRANSFER OF CLINCH COUNTY FROM SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF GEORGIA

The bill (S. 2115) to amend section 77 of the Judicial Code, as amended, to transfer Clinch County from the southern district of Georgia to the middle district was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let us have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, this bill merely provides for the transfer of Clinch County from the southern district of Georgia to the middle district. It adds no cost and does not affect anyone except the residents of that county. The transfer of the county to the middle district will afford them a more convenient place for holding court.

Mr. KING. Would it require the construction of another courthouse and employment of additional personnel?

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, no. The bill would simply attach the county to another district.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2115) to amend section 77 of the Judicial Code, as amended, to transfer Clinch County from the southern district of Georgia to the middle district was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

WILLIAM T. J. RYAN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2557) for the relief of William T. J. Ryan, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the provisions of the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat. L. 649), relating to the support of families of enlisted men in the Military Establishment who served during the expedition into Mexico, the claim of William T. J. Ryan, then sergeant, Headquarters Battery, Seventy-sixth Regiment United States Field Artillery, Fort D. A. Russell, Wyo., for Federal support of his wife, Beulah E. Ryan, be held and considered to have been received in the office of the depot quartermaster, Washington, D. C., on or before June 30, 1917, in view of the fact that delay in receipt occurred through no fault of the soldier but through loss or miscarriage of his application in the mails.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let us have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, a bill identical with the one under consideration passed the Senate during the Seventy-third and Seventy-fourth Congresses in behalf of the claimant, William T. J. Ryan. The enactment of this legislation will occasion the Government an expense of only $164, and will operate to discharge a just obligation. While in the Army during the World War, Ryan made application for an allotment under the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat. 619–649), for the support of his wife, Mrs. Beulah E. Ryan. His application was either lost in the mails or otherwise misplaced, and the allotment was never paid.

Evidence before the committee shows that he did submit his application for this allotment to his commanding officer, and that it was forwarded through official channels. Therefore the subsequent misplacing of the application was in no way the claimant's fault. Under these circumstances, the committee feels that the claimant is entitled to the favorable consideration of the bill under discussion.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Texas why the Secretary of War recommended adversely?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The War Department, as a rule, recommends adversely in matters of this kind, and there must be particular facts showing particular equities, otherwise we would not differ from the Department.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

E. SULLIVAN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2232) for the relief of E. Sullivan, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to E. Sullivan, captain, Air Corps, United States Army, the sum of $1,613.25; such sum representing stoppage in his pay on account of the embezzlement by E. J. Barricklow, a civilian employee, of public funds for which said E. Sullivan was held accountable as agent finance officer at Kelly Field, Tex., from June 1927 to June 1928.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there seems to be an adverse report from the Department. Will the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] give us an explanation?

Mr. SHEPPARD. This is another case where the committee, after going into the facts, feels that the claimant is justified. I shall be glad to give the Senator a further statement regarding it if he desires.

Mr. KING. Very well.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Capt. E. Sullivan the sum of $1,613.25, representing stoppage in his pay on account of the embezzlement of public funds by a civilian employee. Sullivan was held accountable for this amount while agent finance officer at Kelly Field, Tex., from June 1927 to June 1928. An identical bill passed the Senate during the last Congress in behalf of Captain Sullivan.

When the irregularities at Kelly Field were detected, an investigation was instigated, which was participated in by agents of the Justice Department and Secret Service men of the Treasury Department, as well as inspectors of the Army. It was found that for a period of about 2 years a civilian employee had been preparing false short-form rolls, bearing fictitious names of from one to five alleged employees, to which rolls he forged the names of the fictitious employees and the name of the quartermaster as certifying officer. Some of these fraudulent rolls were presented to the local agent finance officer, accompanied by forged hand receipt of the quartermaster. Through this procedure, and on these rolls duly and properly prepared as to form but forged, the civilian employee obtained the money in cash and misappropriated it to his own use.

The Army inspector in the corps area reported that there was no carelessness or negligence on the part of the several agent officers in making payments of the sums charged against them, and that "they took every precaution required of them." The corps area commander concurred in this report, but the report was overruled by the War Department, and it was held that these men, including Sullivan, were to be held responsible. The corps area commander ordered a second investigation, and on the basis of this second study of the matter again held that Sullivan and these men could not be held responsible. However, the corps area authorities were overruled. The committee believes Captain Sullivan's claim is meritorious, and has again reported favorably on legislation to reimburse him for the amount he was called upon to pay as a result of the activities of the civilian employee.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COL. JOHN A. LOCKWOOD, UNITED STATES ARMY, RETIRED

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2273) granting the Distinguished Service Cross to Col. John A. Lockwood, United States Army, retired, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the President is hereby authorized to cause the recommendation for the award of a decoration to Col. John A. Lockwood, United States Army, retired, who served as a captain in the United States Army, commanding Troop M, Fourth Regiment United States Cavalry, during October, November, and December, 1899, for distinguished conduct in the Philippine Islands, to be considered by the proper boards or authorities, and such award made to the said John A. Be it enacted, etc, That the second proviso of section 107, as amended, of the Judicial Code (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 28, sec. 188) is amended by striking out the period at the end of said proviso, and adding the following: "until, subject to the recommendation of the Attorney General of the United States with respect to providing such rooms and accommodations for holding court at Columbia, a public building shall have been erected or other Federal space provided for court purposes in said city."

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 537) to provide suitable accommodations for the district court of the United States at Glasgow, Mont., was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there is an adverse report on that measure by the Attorney General. I suggest that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

CONSOLIDATED AIRCRAFT CORPORATION

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1881) for the relief of the Consolidated Aircraft Corporation, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$89,645.56. Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] favor us with an explanation of this bill?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, in 1933 the Consolidated Aircraft Corporation had a contract with the Navy Department for building airplanes. With the adoption of the National Industrial Recovery Act it became necessary for this contractor, like many other contractors, to increase the amount of compensation paid to its employees. That was done under the provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act. Later, Congress passed an act which provided that compensation for such additional costs should be paid to the various companies which had contracted. As a result of that act, an audit was made of the books of the Consolidated Aircraft Corporation, and the amount to which the bill is amended, $79,116.88, is the amount recommended by the Navy Department as a result of the audit made by the auditors of the Navy Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I should like an opportunity to look into this bill. It involves the question of fisheries in Alaska. I did not know of the bill until the calendar was called today. I ask that it go over until the next call of the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

WILLIAM C. WILLAHAN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2444) for the relief of William C. Willahan, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 7, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$719.40" and insert "$421.65"; in line 8, after the word "amounts", to strike out "paid by" and insert "withheld from"; in line 11, after the word "July", to strike out "24" and insert "14"; and in the same line, after "1934", to strike out "and in settlement no. G–68976–IN, dated February 25, 1935", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William C. Willahan, formerly superintendent and special disbursing agent at the Sisseton Indian Agency, Sisseton, S. Dak., the sum of $421.65, representing amounts withheld from him in settlement of the charges made against his accounts by reason of disallowances in settlement no. F–24532–IN, dated July 14, 1934, such disallowances being due to embezzlement on the part of a subordinate employee and made without the knowledge or procurement of said William C. Willahan. The sum paid under this act shall be exempt from the claims of creditors and shall not be liable to attachment, levy, or seizure under any legal or equitable process, before or after payment; and no part of such sum shall be withheld from said William C. Willahan, by reason of, or be applied to the payment of, the charges against his accounts hereinbefore referred to.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2670) to provide that the United States shall aid the States in wildlife restoration projects, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. May we have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill go over. It is too important a bill to be considered under the 5-minute rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

SAMUEL L. DWYER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2417) for the relief of Samuel L. Dwyer, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Samuel L. Dwyer, of Palmerdale, Ala., the sum of $2,500, in full satisfaction of all his claims against the United States for damages sustained by him for medical expense and by his 5-year-old son, Luther Allen Dwyer, for permanent disfigurement, when the explosion of a dynamite cap with which the latter was playing, after finding it on the homestead of his father where said cap had been negligently left by employees of the Resettlement Administration engaged in clearing such land, blew off two fingers of his left hand below the first joint: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SCOTT HART

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2261) for the relief of Scott Hart, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after "$5,663',, to insert "in full settlement of all claims against the United States", and at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Scott Hart the sum of $5,663, in full settlement of all claims against the United States, for injuries sustained by him on or about November 17, 1935, when an automobile in which he was a passenger struck a ditch which had been dug across the public highway by personnel of the Lewes Coast Guard Station: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM E. JONES AND OTHERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 667) for the relief of William E. Jones, Walter M. Marston, William Ellery, Richard P. Hallowell, 2d, and Malcolm Donald as executors under the will of Frank W. Hallowell; and Malcolm Donald as executor under the will of Gordon Donald, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to receive, consider, and determine, in accordance with law but without regard to any statute of limitations, any claims filed not later than 6 months after the passage of this act by William E. Jones, of Newton, Mass.; Walter M. Marston, of Newton, Mass.; William Ellery, of Brookline, Mass.; Richard P. Hallowell, 2d, and Malcolm Donald as executors under the will of Frank W. Hallowell, late of Newton, Mass.; and Malcolm Donald as executor under the will of Gordon Donald, late of Wellesley, Mass., for the refund of Federal income and excess-profits taxes collected from the said William E. Jones, Walter M. Marston, William Ellery, Frank W. Hallowell, and Gordon Donald for the year 1917 in excess of the amounts properly due; and any claim so filed shall be regarded and treated for all purposes as if it had been duly filed within the period fixed by any statute of limitations which, except for the passage of this act, would be applicable thereto: Provided, That in the settlement of any claim so filed there shall be no allowance of interest.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] if the bill places any limitation upon the amounts which may be awarded, and, if not, what standards are to be applied in determining the obligation, if any, of the Government.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, under the law as it existed in 1917, as it was interpreted by the Court in a decision handed down in 1926, the proper rule of construction as to the determination of these income taxes was passed upon by the Court, was accepted by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, and was thereafter followed. This bill was introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]; but I think I am wholly correct in saying that the law as it was laid down in the decision of 1926 will be determinative of the amount involved in this case.

Mr. KING. What reason is there for waiving the statute of limitations in this case? I will say, by way of parenthesis, that the Finance Committee has been very liberal in extending the period beyond which claims of this kind may be barred.

Mr. WHITE. The reason is, Mr. President, that in passing upon this case originally, the Bureau of Internal Revenue laid down an entirely erroneous rule of law. The Bureau held that the persons concerned were not entitled to recover. Subsequently to that ruling by the Internal Revenue Bureau, the court, in a case which was before it, completely reversed the Internal Revenue Bureau; and then, of course, the Internal Revenue Bureau accepted the decision of the court, and, in similar cases, acted on it. This bill is simply to give these persons the opportunity to go before the Bureau of Internal Revenue and seek a refund according to the law as the court has laid it down. That is all that is involved in the measure.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, why did the Treasury Department report against the bill?

Mr. WHITE. I think because of the fact that before the decision of the court was handed down, the statute of limitations had run against a refund; and the Treasury, following its invariable rule, declined to consider a case where the statute had once run against it. Then came the decision of the court which declared that the ruling of the Internal Revenue Bureau was wrong. In those circumstances it seemed to the committee that these persons ought to be permitted to go before the Treasury Department and establish their rights according to the law as the court had laid it down.

That is all that is involved in the case.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a great many demands have been made to set aside the statute of limitations. In some instances the demands were warranted. There were equities that appealed to the Committee on Finance and to the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I fully appreciate what the Senator is saying, and I realize the force of his statement.

This provision of law existed only during 1917, however, and the Congress then repealed it; and where the Bureau manifestly has made an error, which the Bureau itself acknowledges, it does seem that a statutory bar ought not to be set up against the right of these persons to appear before the Bureau and make out a case within the rules of law.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from Maine whether similar bills have not been favorably reported and passed by the Senate.

Mr. WHITE. I think that is true in the case of some bills, although, of course, this is a very unusual case, a court having directly overruled a prior decision of the Treasury Department. In those circumstances it seems clear that the claimants ought to have their rights according to the law.

Mr. WALSH. Is it not a fact that the Committee on Claims was unanimously of the opinion that this is a meritorious case?

Mr. WHITE. Yes.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. The case impressed me thus: The claimant was right in the first instance but was ruled against by one who was afterward overruled by the final authority.

Mr. WHITE. That is true.

Mr. McCARRAN. Therefore, he was right in the first instance, and should be accorded his rights.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator is correct.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should be the last person in the world to seek to have the Government take advantage of a rich man or a poor man. It is the province of the Government to be fair and just to everyone. A great many demands have been made, however, to waive the statute of limitations and permit the presentation of claims 5, 10, and as many as 15 years after payment was made.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I do not recall any case in which it was perfectly clear that the Government was in error where Congress has refused to remove the bar of the statute.

Mr. WALSH. And, may I add, where the decision of the court pointing out the error was made after the statute of limitation had run.

Mr. WHITE. That is correct.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maine state the amount that is claimed?

Mr. WHITE. I do not know the actual amount. Of course, that would be a matter of proof before the Department.

To me, the amount was not of consequence. What impressed me in connection with this case was that a wrong decision had been made which prejudiced these persons; a court had declared the decision wrong; and it seems to me just plain equity and right that these claimants should have an opportunity to go before the Department.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall not object to the consideration of the bill, but I shall enter a motion to reconsider the action upon it; and tomorrow I shall confer with the Treasury Department and find out whether there are any valid objections to the bill, in which event I shall then move to take up the question for reconsideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the motion of the Senator from Utah to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and passed will be entered.

CONTROL AND PREVENTION OF CANCER

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am under obligation to leave the city at 4 o'clock, and I desire to say a word at this time.

The Committee on Commerce reported favorably today Senate bill 2067, authorizing the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service to control and prevent the spread of the disease of cancer. It is a unique bill. It was introduced by the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], and has been endorsed by every Senator. I have never known anything like it; every other Senator joins with the Senator from Washington in advocating the bill.

We have seen fit to make some changes in the committee, to revise the bill, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert new language.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, what is the measure to which the Senator is referring?

Mr. COPELAND. It is the so-called cancer bill. I ask the Senator from Utah to bear with me, because of my personal obligation to leave the chamber in a few minutes. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be taken up at this time, so that the Senator from Washington may have it passed. He deserves great credit, and I am sure every one of us wishes to assist him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York?

Mr. McNARY. What is the bill?

Mr. COPELAND. It is the "cancer bill."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New York one question?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. KING. We have appropriated a considerable sum of money, as I recall, for the establishment of a public-health institute. I may not give the correct name.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator is correct.

Mr. KING. It was presumed when the law was enacted creating that organization that it would have to deal with investigations in regard to curable diseases, and so on. Why should not that organization take up the matter covered under the measure to which the Senator refers? Does the bill commit the investigation to the Public Health Institute?

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator is referring to the Ransdell bill?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. That was a splendid measure. It had to do largely with the erection of buildings to be used by the Institute of Public Health. The bill to which I am referring does not create a new board. It puts the work in charge of the very institution to which the Senator has called attention. We held a hearing the other day under the direction of the Senator from Washington, who had present representatives of all the great medical concerns and research bodies of this country and of Canada, and one witness from England.

Mr. President, I do not wish to make the speech of the Senator from Washington, because sometime ago he made an address on the subject which would do credit to the best-informed research expert in cancer in this country or in any other country. The bill provides that there shall be a steady attack upon cancer. We did not go as far as the Senator from Washington wished. He provided for the appropriation of $1,000,000 a year. We reduced the amount to $700,000. The investigation is to be carried out wholly under the direction of the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, and I am sure that no finer act can be done by the Congress than to pass the bill.

I do not wish to say more, because the Senator from Washington had the inspiration and the genius to bring the subject before us, following the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] who made the same effort some years ago. I hope the Senate will unanimously and speedily pass the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2067) authorizing the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service to control and prevent the spread of the disease of cancer, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That for the purposes of conducting researches, investigations, experiments, and studies relating to the cause, diagnosis, and treatment of cancer; assisting and fostering similar research activities by other agencies, public and private; and promoting the coordination of all such researches and activities and the useful application of their results, with a view to the development and prompt widespread use of the most effective methods of prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of cancer, there is hereby established in the Public Health Service a division which shall be known as the National Cancer Institute (hereinafter referred to as the "Institute").

SEC. 2. The Surgeon General of the Public Health Service (hereinafter referred to as the "Surgeon General") is authorized and directed for the purposes of this act and subject to its provisions, through the Institute and in cooperation with the National Cancer Advisory Council hereinafter established—

(a) To conduct, assist, and foster researches, investigations, experiments, and studies relating to the cause, prevention, and methods of diagnosis and treatment of cancer;

(b) To promote the coordination of researches conducted by the Institute and similar researches conducted by other agencies, organizations, and individuals;

(c) To procure, use, and lend radium as hereinafter provided;

(d) To provide training and instruction in technical matters relating to the diagnosis and treatment of cancer;

(e) To provide fellowships in the Institute from funds appropriated or donated for such purpose;

(f) To secure for the Institute consultation services and advice of cancer experts from the United States and abroad; and

(g) To cooperate with State health agencies in the prevention, control, and eradication of cancer.

SEC. 3. There is hereby created the National Advisory Cancer Council (herein referred to as the "Council"), to consist of six members to be appointed by the Surgeon General with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and of the Surgeon General, ex officio, who shall be chairman of the Council. The six appointed members shall be selected from leading medical or scientific authorities who are outstanding in the study, diagnosis, or treatment of cancer in the United States. Each appointed member shall hold office for a term of 3 years, except that (1) any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such term, and (2) the terms of office of the members first taking office shall expire, as designated by the Surgeon General at the time of appointment, two at the end of the first year, two at the end of the second year, and two at the end of the third year after the date of the first meeting of the Council. No appointed member shall be eligible to serve continuously for more than 3 years, but shall be eligible for reappointment if he has not served as a member of the Council at any time within 12 months immediately preceding his reappointment. Each appointed member shall receive compensation at the rate of $25 per day during the time spent in attending meetings of the Council and for the time devoted to official business of the Council under this act, and actual and necessary traveling and subsistence expenses while away from his place of residence upon official business under this act.

SEC. 4. The Council is authorized—

(a) To review research projects or programs submitted to or initiated by it relating to the study of the cause, prevention, or methods of diagnosis and treatment of cancer, and certify approval to the Surgeon General for prosecution under section 2 (a) hereof any such projects which it believes show promise of making valuable contributions to human knowledge with respect to the cause, prevention, or methods of diagnosis and treatment of cancer;

(b) To collect information as to studies which are being carried on in the United States or any other country as to the cause, prevention, and methods of diagnosis and treatment of cancer, by correspondence or by personal investigation of such studies, and with the approval of the Surgeon General make available such information through the appropriate publications for the benefit of health agencies and organizations (public or private), physicians, or any other scientists, and for the information of the general public;

(c) To review applications from any university, hospital, laboratory, or other institution, whether public or private, or from individuals, for grants in aid for research projects relating to cancer, and certify to the Surgeon General its approval of grants in aid in the cases of such projects which show promise of making valuable contributions to human knowledge with respect to the cause, prevention, or methods of diagnosis or treatment of cancer;

(d) To recommend to the Secretary of the Treasury for acceptance conditional gifts pursuant to section 6; and

(e) To make recommendations to the Surgeon General with respect to carrying out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 5. In carrying out the provisions of section 2 the Surgeon General is authorized—

(a) With the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to purchase radium, from time to time, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes; to make such radium available for use in carrying out the purpose of this act; and, for such consideration and subject to such conditions as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, to lend such radium to institutions, now existing or hereafter established in the United States, for the study of the cause, prevention, or methods of diagnosis or treatment of cancer, or for the treatment of cancer;

(b) To provide the necessary facilities where training and instruction may be given in all technical matters relating to diagnosis and treatment of cancer to such persons as in the opinion of the Surgeon General have proper technical training and shall be designated by him for such training or instruction; such persons while receiving training or instruction may, with the approval of the Surgeon General, receive a per-diem allowance to be fixed by the Surgeon General but not to exceed $10;

(c) To establish and maintain, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, research fellowships in the Institute with such stipends or allowances (including traveling and subsistence expenses) as the Surgeon General may deem necessary to procure the assistance of the most brilliant and promising research fellows from the United States or abroad;

(d) To secure for the Institute, from time to time and for such periods as may be advisable, the assistance and advice of experts, scholars, and consultants from the United States or abroad who are learned and experienced in the problems involved in accomplishing the purposes of this act;

(e) To make grants in aid for research projects certified by the Council pursuant to section 4 (c); and

(f) To adopt, upon recommendation of the Council and with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, such additional means as the Surgeon General may deem necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of sections 1 and 2 of this act.

SEC. 6. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to accept on behalf of the United States gifts made unconditionally by will or otherwise for study, investigation, or research into the cause, prevention, and methods of diagnosis and treatment of cancer, or for the acquisition of grounds or for the erection, equipment, and maintenance of premises, buildings, and equipment for the Institute. Conditional gifts may be accepted by the Secretary if recommended by the Surgeon General and the council. Any such gifts, if in money, shall be held in trusts and shall be invested by the Secretary of the Treasury in securities of the United States, and the principal or income thereof shall be expended by the Surgeon General, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, for the purposes prescribed by this act, subject to the same examination and audit as provided for appropriations made for the Public Health Service by Congress. Donations of $500,000 or over in aid of research under this act shall be acknowledged permanently by the establishment within the Institute of suitable memorials to the donors.

SEC. 7. (a) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated a sum not to exceed $750,000 for the erection and equipment of a suitable and adequate building and facilities for the use of the Institute in carrying out the provisions of this act. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, donation, or otherwise, a suitable and adequate site or sites in or near the District of Columbia for such building and facilities, and to erect thereon, furnish, and equip such buildings and facilities when funds are made available.

(b) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $700,000 for each fiscal year, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act (except subsection (a) hereof). Sums appropriated pursuant to this subsection may be expended in the District of Columbia for personal services, stenographic recording and translating services, by contract if deemed necessary, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes; traveling expenses (including the expenses of attendance at meetings when specifically authorized by the Surgeon General); rental, supplies, and equipment, purchase and exchange of medical books, books of reference, directories, periodicals, newspapers, and press clippings; purchase, operation, and maintenance of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; printing and binding (in addition to that otherwise provided by law); and for all other necessary expenses in carrying out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 8. (a) There is hereby authorized to be appointed in the Public Health Service, in accordance with applicable law, such commissioned officers as may be necessary to aid in carrying out the provisions of this act.

(b) This act shall not be construed as superseding or limiting (1) the functions, under any other act, of the Public Health Service or any other agency of the United States relating to the study of the prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of cancer; or (2) the expenditure of money therefor.

(c) The Surgeon General with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

(d) The Surgeon General shall include in his annual report for transmission to Congress a full report of the administration of this act, including a detailed statement of receipts and disbursements.

(e) This act shall take effect 30 days after the date of its enactment.

(f) This act may be cited as the "National Cancer Institute Act."

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I do not wish to debate the bill at length. I desire, however, to point out anew that the Members of the Senate with whom I have discussed the bill, have without a single exception been very responsive to the urging from many sources that the Federal Government now bring to bear on the problem of cancer the best that it has to offer in the way of scientific assistance. It was only a few years ago that it began to recognize the dire significance of this scourge. Cancer is now killing more people every 2 years than have been killed in all the wars in which this country has been engaged since the birth of the Republic, and they die in a horrible fashion.

Science so far has been unable to put its finger on the cause of cancer, and the bill is aimed in only one direction and has only one objective, that is, to bring all the magnificent agencies of science to bear, through the assistance, aid, and cooperation of the Government, on finding the cause of cancer, not the cure, because the hospitals and medical associations of the country can take care of that, but the cause of this disease, which now is completely shrouded in mystery. I do not believe we could find a greater challenge to our best efforts than is the challenge of this disease which so terribly destroys more people every 2 years than have been killed in all the wars of the Republic. God knows the wars have cost enough money; they have cost hundreds of millions and billions of dollars; yet this fell destroyer is taking more lives than have been taken in all the wars concerning which we have heard in song and story which have thrilled us from childhood.

I hope there will be no objection to the bill, and that it will be passed forthwith.

Mr. BONE subsequently said: Mr. President, at the time of my brief statement in reference to Senate bill 2067, the so-called cancer bill, I omitted to call attention to the fact that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] desired that his name be added to those of the other 94 Senators whose names appear on the bill.

I also have received a request from the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] that his name be added to the bill. At the time the bill was introduced the Senator from New Jersey was not a Member of the body, not having been sworn in. So I take it that the name of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] will be added to the bill. It is a matter of form, but I am a little uncertain as to the other portion of the request. I ask unanimous consent that despite the fact that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] was not a Member of the body at the time the bill was introduced, his name be added to the list of those sponsoring the bill.

Mr. KING. Nunc pro tunc.

Mr. BONE. Nunc pro tunc. I wish to have this action taken for the purpose of the RECORD, to show that every Senator now joins me in introducing the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington? The Chair hears none, and the names of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] will be included in the list of those joining in introducing the bill.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for, foster, and aid in coordinating research relating to cancer; to establish the National Cancer Institute; and for other purposes."

THE CORBITT CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1514) for the relief of the Corbitt Co., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 3, after the word "Treasury", to strike out the word "is" and insert "be, and he is hereby"; on line 7, to strike out "such sum representing the amount of" and to insert "in full settlement of all claims against the United States for"; and to insert a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Corbitt Co., of Henderson, N. C., the sum of $6,659.80, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for liquidated damages for delinquency in making deliveries charged against such company in the settlement of a certain contract (numbered W-ord-226) entered into by such company with the War Department, for furnishing twenty T9 scout cars and a quantity of spare parts: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, this bill, introduced by me, is for the relief of the Corbitt Co., of Henderson, N. C., a company engaged in the manufacture of motor-driven vehicles. The bill was reported by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], but I do not see him in the Chamber at the present time. My colleague, the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], and I were interested in the matter, and I see my colleague is now in the Chamber.

The Corbitt Co. entered into a contract with the War Department for the manufacture of 20 T9 scout cars. As a result of the trucks not having been delivered at the time or times specified in the contract, the War Department withheld approximately $7,000, charging liquidated damages on account of the delay.

When the matter was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], referred it to a subcommittee of which the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] served as chairman. I recall that he held hearings on the matter, and made an investigation, and referred the claim to the War Department for their opinion. They in turn referred it to another department of the Government.

Mr. McKELLAR. To the Acting Comptroller.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes; to the Acting Comptroller; and I shall come to his letter in a moment.

Liquidated damages in the sum of approximately $7,000 were withheld by the War Department on account of the fact that the trucks were not delivered at the times specified in the contract. But I may say to the Senator from Tennessee that on investigation it was learned that the delay was not the fault of the Corbitt Co., but was the fault of the War Department, for the reason that they had not provided inspection of the trucks at the time the trucks were completed and ready for delivery by the Corbitt Co. In other words, the Corbitt Co. had completed the trucks and had them on their property at Henderson, N. C., and were ready and willing and waiting to make delivery as per the terms of the contract, but they could not make the delivery until the trucks had been duly inspected by the representatives of the War Department.

After having made investigation, the Senator from Kentucky, as chairman of the subcommittee, recommended that the Corbitt Co. be not occasioned the loss of six thousand three hundred and some odd dollars of the $7,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Were the trucks actually delivered?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Oh, yes, the trucks have been delivered. I see in the report made by the Senator from Kentucky a letter under date of March 5, 1937, addressed to my colleague the senior Senator from North Carolina, by Hon. Harry Woodring, Secretary of War, and another letter addressed by the Accounting Department to my colleague under date of April 20.

After thoroughly investigating the matter the Senator from Kentucky, chairman of the subcommittee, stated that it was not the fault of the Corbitt Co. that the delay was occasioned, but that the fault was attributable to the fact that the inspection had not been provided by the War Department, and I understand it was not provided at that time on account of the fact that they had other inspections to make. It was no fault of the Corbitt Co., of Henderson, N. C.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I understand the bill is a meritorious measure.
